District of Columbia, especially the city's most troubled youth. Thereafter, Congressman JOSÉ SERRANO, chair of the Appropriations Financial Services subcommittee, was good enough to offer this renaming in his appropriations bill and to appropriate the funds without authorization this year and in prior years.

Under General Wherley's command, the D.C. National Guard deployed several of its units in the Global War on Terrorism. General Wherley himself served courageously in both Iraq and Afghanistan, but at home he spent hours with me figuring out ways to get funds for programs for the District's children. We were always successful because he would show up, not only in my office, but wherever he was needed to go and get funds or to do service.

General Wherley was a full-service leader. He not only commanded the D.C. National Guard; he worked closely with me and with city officials on programs for our city, its disadvantaged youth, and on keeping our Guard competitive as a premier force at home as well as abroad. He became one of us when he and his wife, Anne, decided to purchase a co-op in Southeast, D.C., in the Capitol Hill community where they participated as hometown residents. Anne, who sadly also was killed in the train collision, was his high school sweetheart. At their joint memorial service, I only half-jokingly said that she did everything with him but run the D.C. Guard, because she was his helpmate in every aspect of his full and fruitful life.

As I highlighted when I originally introduced this bill earlier this session, the education incentives in my bill serve not only to encourage high quality recruits, but, when appropriated, have had the important benefit of helping the D.C. National Guard to maintain the force necessary to protect the federal presence because this funding helps equalize an important benefit compared with what is offered by Guard units in surrounding jurisdictions, which also are open to them.

A strong D.C. National Guard, able to attract the best soldiers is especially important, given the dual mission of the D.C. National Guard to protect the federal presence as well as hometown D.C. This unique responsibility distinguishes the D.C. National Guard from any other National Guard and accounts for the generosity of the Appropriations Committee in the past. However, while the appropriators treat funding for the D.C. National Guard as a programmatic request, under past administrations, the Office of Management and Budget has contended that these funds are earmarks, putting them in jeopardy for consistent funding. It therefore is imperative that this important educational incentive be authorized appropriately to ensure its permanent sustainability. That is what this bill does today.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

PET SAFETY AND PROTECTION ACT

HON. MICHAEL F. DOYLE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. DOYLE. Madam Speaker, I rise today to reintroduce the Pet Safety and Protection Act—legislation that I believe is essential to protect family pets, bring our nation's research policies into the 21st century, and end the unnecessary and illegal abuse of cats and dogs that's widespread in the Class B dealer system, which provides a number of animals to biomedical research labs.

Class B dealers are licensed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to acquire animals from "random sources," including individuals who claim to have bred and raised the animals, but oftentimes haven't actually done so. Then the dogs and cats are sold to labs across the country that conduct important biomedical research.

Most scientists agree that animals with certain genetic characteristics or medical conditions are necessary for some types of medical research. So-called random sources are often the best sources for such animals. Unfortunately, the Class B dealer system that was set up to address this need has been plagued by widespread and flagrant violations of the Animal Welfare Act—including complaints that family pets have been swept up and sent to labs and used in biomedical research.

While USDA has tried to monitor Class B dealers and make sure these laws are followed, it simply has never had the resources to ensure the dealers' compliance. USDA's efforts, have, however, resulted in a number of investigations that forced many bad dealers out of the business. Today, 7 of the 10 remaining licensed Class B dealers are being investigated for alleged violations of the Animal Welfare Act. An additional dealer has had his license suspended for 5 years.

That record should give anyone an idea of the magnitude of the problems that exist in the current Class B dealer program. If anyone still doubts the need for action, I urge them to watch a 2006 HBO program documenting in graphic, disturbing detail the inhumane and illegal treatment of animals by Class B dealers. This remarkable documentary contains video footage shot undercover in a Class B dealer's facility. Among the abuses documented in this film are overcrowded cages, rotten food, food contaminated with feces, frozen drinking water, dogs with serious untreated injuries and diseases, and live dogs caged with the carcasses of dead dogs. This investigation also documented the beating, strangulation, and shooting of dogs by a Class B dealer.

I have been working for a number of years to pass legislation that would change the way animals with random source characteristics are acquired for biomedical research. This legislation, the Pet Safety and Protection Act, would prohibit the sale of dogs and cats by Class B dealers for experimentation. Its goal is to stop the illegal supply of dogs and cats to laboratories—as was intended when the Animal Welfare Act was first adopted by Congress in 1966. The Pet Safety and Protection Act also provides an alternative to Class B dealers for acquiring such animals. Research labs could acquire them from Class A dealers, from certain publicly owned and operated animal pounds, and through donations from people who have owned the animal for at least a year. I believe that this law would end the abuses running rampant in the Class B dealer system and make the process for acquiring animals necessary for medical research far more humane.

This legislation has the strong support of the Animal Welfare Institute and the Humane Society of the United States.

In previous years, this bill has been derailed by concerns that it might prevent or delay life-saving biomedical research. Consequently, the 110th Congress directed the National Academies to examine the issue and determine whether the Class B dealer system should be continued. Earlier this summer, the National Academies released its report on the Class B dealer system. The National Academies concluded that:

Although random source dogs and cats represent a very small percentage of animals used in biomedical research, this small number is not commensurate with their potential value, and it is desirable to assure continued access to animals with random source qualities. This access can be accomplished with existing alternative mechanisms other than Class B dealers and can be assured with additional effort. The Committee thus determined that Class B dealers are not necessary for supplying dogs and cats for NIH-funded research.

I believe that the National Academies study puts to rest any remaining concerns about the desirability of eliminating the Class B dealer system.

In closing, Madam Speaker, let me reiterate my belief that enactment of the Pet Safety and Protection Act is necessary to end the inhumane and illegal treatment of animals acquired and sold by Class B dealers, protect families' pets from being used for biomedical research without their permission, and achieve those goals without hindering essential biomedical research. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this long overdue legislation.

NATIONAL SPINA BIFIDA AWARENESS MONTH

HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. CASTLE. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of October as National Spina Bifida Awareness Month, which aims to bring awareness to the nation's most common permanently disabling birth defect, affecting 3,000 pregnancies every year. New data from the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, CDC, reported this spring, indicates the number of Americans with spina bifida is actually 154,000—double what was previously thought. According to the Delaware Health Statistics Center, approximately one out of every fifty-six babies born in Delaware with birth defects suffers from spina bifida. Spina bifida occurs within the first month of pregnancy and leaves a permanent opening in the spinal column that subsequently impacts nearly every organ system. People with spina bifida face a host of complications, such as physical, developmental, educational and vocational challenges, among others.

The National Institution of Neurological Disorders and Stroke at the NIH supports research on neural tube defects. Studies have shown the addition of folic acid (0.4 mg of folic acid daily) to the diet of women of child bearing age may significantly reduce the incidence of neural tube defects. An estimated 70 percent of neural tube defects, including spina bifida, are preventable through consumption of folic acid prior to pregnancy, and National Spina Bifida Awareness Month plays a critical role in conveying this prevention message to the public. As a 2005 study uncovered, the current system of care serving people with spina bifida does not fully meet current or anticipated needs, and physicians have little evidence-based research on which to build appropriate treatments. Increasing awareness of spina bifida will also focus attention on the need to expand and intensify evidence-based research to improve the quality of life of those living with spina bifida.

Mr. Christopher Malone, who is a board member of the Spina Bifida Association, visited my Washington office on October 2, 2009 to discuss the challenges facing children with spina bifida. When I listen to accounts from constituents like Christopher Malone, I am reminded of the enormous impact that spina bifida has had not only on those with this condition, but on their family members and friends.

I thank Mr. Malone and the members of Spina Bifida Association for their efforts and leadership over the last 36 years, and for their ongoing commitment to improving the quality of life of people affected by spina bifida. Too many Americans suffer needlessly from this birth defect when many cases are preventable.

Education and awareness, prevention, and research are key. During National Spina Bifida Awareness Month, I hope we will all take the time to learn more about spina bifida and support these endeavors.

IN RECOGNITION AND MEMORY OF TAYLOR CATHERINE FEDA

HON. JOE WILSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Madam Speaker, I am honored to submit the following poem written by Ms. Taylor Catherine Feda of Columbia, South Carolina. Taylor sadly passed away on July 6, 2007. She is remembered as a kind and generous daughter and friend as well as an excellent student at Dutch Fork High School where she excelled in writing poetry.

Her parents, Jim and Michelin Feda of Irmo, were so kind to share the following poem penned by Taylor and included in the 2008 Dutch Fork High School literary magazine Revelations.

MONSTER

What do you find in the truth, but something in it's most pure original form.

Something you must accept and respect on its own terms.

People can never really accept the truth,
They want to hide it with their own shades,
Or betray it as something more ideal for their needs and wants.

But maybe the truth is what we need,

And once we accept its purity,
Maybe it's exactly everything we want?

I'm sick of seeing the ones I care about leap over the truth and jump right off the ledge of thinking straight,

or hoping things will change.
I'd like them to view things as I do,
With the glass half-full, give or take a few sips of confidence in what the outcome will be either way.

The truth is about acceptance, and betrayal, love and hopeless mistakes of reading the road signs that lead the other direction,

those road signs possibly leading to ditches of deception or a simple glimpse of happiness.

The truth is a monster that hurts people, but somehow heals their vision of thinking
perfect and surreal.

Let's accept it,
Embrace it,
Defy it.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. J. GRESHAM BARRETT

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. BARRETT of South Carolina. Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I missed recorded votes on the House floor on Tuesday, October 20, 2009.

Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall vote No. 790, on motion to suspend the rules and agree to H.R. 3763; "aye" on rollcall vote No. 791, on motion to suspend the rules and agree to H.R. 3319; and "aye" on rollcall vote No. 792, on motion to suspend the rules and agree to H. Res. 558.

IN TRIBUTE TO THE HON. DELORES J. THOMAS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. TOWNS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of a tireless leader in the community.

Born and raised in Boligee, Alabama, Delores Thomas began her career at Alabama State University, receiving a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Political Science. Shortly thereafter, Delores Thomas received her Juris Doctorate from the University of Georgia Law School. Upon successful completion of her Juris Doctorate, Delores Thomas was admitted to the State and Federal Bar Association in Georgia and New York.

Delores Thomas began her legal career as a staff and management attorney for the Housing Immigration and Unemployment Law Units at Brooklyn Legal Services. She also served as an Administrative Law Judge with the New York City Parking Bureau and was president and organizer for the Legal Services Staff Association for District 65 UAW.

Delores Thomas began years of succession to various judicial posts throughout her career. In March of 1994, Delores Thomas was appointed as Judge in the Housing part of Civil Court, handling landlord and tenant issues. In November of 2002, Justice Thomas was elected to the Civil Court bench, becoming the first African-American elected to a countywide judgeship.

Justice Thomas' most recent appointment is to the Supreme Court. While serving on the Supreme Court, Justice Thomas was assigned to the Matrimonial Trial Part of the Supreme Court. Justice Delores Thomas is currently one of four judges in Kings County, Brooklyn, and the only African-American judge assigned to hear and determine matrimonial cases pertaining to dissolution of marriages and custody of children.

Justice Delores Thomas serves as a member of various organizations, such as the Judicial Friends, the National Association of Women Judges, the Brooklyn Bar Association, the Brooklyn Women's Bar Association and the New York City Bar Association. In her civic capacity, Justice Delores Thomas is a member of Delta Sigma Theta Society, the Eastern Star Organization, and Church Women United, Inc.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing this relentless and dynamic public servant.

CELEBRATING THE 30TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SOUTHWEST COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF

HON. RANDY NEUGEBAUER

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Madam Speaker, I proudly congratulate the Southwest Collegiate Institute for the Deaf on the occasion of their 30th anniversary celebration. This special milestone will be celebrated on November 6, 2009 with the dedication of the new Technical Training Center in addition to other celebratory events around the campus.

In the late 1970s, Dr. Douglas J.N. Burke, along with several members of the community, took action to meet the need for a postsecondary program to provide higher education and career training for the deaf in West Texas.

On November 6, 1979, SWCID was established by the Board of Trustees of the Howard Junior College District. The campus of SWCID would be an entity of Howard College and located at the former Webb Air Force Base in Big Spring, TX. In September 1980, SWCID first opened its doors to students, and was established as a state-supported institution on May 14, 1981.

Over the past 30 years, SWCID has strived to offer vocational and technical training, state of the art learning environments and technologies for deaf students, as well as courses for hearing individuals who have an interest in working with the deaf community.

I applaud Dr. Burke for his vision of creating this program for deaf students along with the countless groups and individuals who continue to support his dream and the unique education being provided by this institution. A facility of this nature is of incredible benefit to deaf individuals so that they may learn the necessary technical skills to successfully enter into the job market.

It is a great honor to recognize the Southwest Collegiate Institute for the Deaf on 30 years of service to the deaf community of Texas and our Nation.

HONORING RICHARD LONG

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. KILDEE. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Richard Long as he retires after 46 years of dedicated and extraordinary service to the United Automobile Workers. For the past nine years Richard has served as the National Community Action Program Director for the United Automobile Workers.

In 1963, Dick Long began working at the former Pontiac Motor Division and joined UAW Local 653. This began his life's work promoting better working conditions, not just for the men and women he saw daily on the shop floor, but for all workers. He began his service with the UAW as an alternate committeeman and quickly progressed into the UAW's top leadership tier. He became the chair of Sub Council 7, the largest sub council in the UAW during this time and in 1987 Dick was elected Vice President of Local 653 by his peers. A year later he was elected President. As the Chairman of the United Auto Workers/General Motors contract negotiations in 1993, Dick helped craft an agreement advantageous to both workers and the company. Stephen Yokich, then UAW President, tapped Dick to be his Administrative Assistant in 1998 and in 2000 Dick became the National Community Action Program Director.

As a national leader Dick was able to break down barriers for workers, and enhance their quality of life. I have known and worked with Dick for many years and have a deep appreciation for his wisdom and perseverance. His work exemplifies the ideals that the UAW has championed since its inception.

Dick's vision of a better life for UAW members and their families prompted him to work promoting education, teamwork, and social justice. He is active with many community organizations and the Democratic Party. In addition to his work, Dick and his wife Jackie have three children and six grandchildren.

Madam Speaker, it gives me great honor to recognize the accomplishments of Richard Long. He is a man of honor, intellect, and remarkable compassion. The members of the UAW and workers everywhere owe him a debt of gratitude for his foresight, commitment and actions. Because of Richard Long there is a greater respect between management and labor, better working conditions for members of the UAW, and better opportunities for their families. I consider him a dear friend and would like to thank him for a lifetime of hard work. I ask the House of Representatives to join me in applauding Richard Long and wish him a long and enjoyable retirement.

NINTENDO

HON. DAVID G. REICHERT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. REICHERT. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of an innovative global business headquartered in Washington State named the best company in the world this year by Business Week magazine, Nintendo.

A company that employs many of my constituents, Nintendo is an electronics maker behind some of the most innovative and breathtaking technological advancements in the world over the past century, and is thriving in a less-than-adequate economic climate while positioning itself to surpass more challenges in the future. Over the past five years, Nintendo's sales have risen by more than 35 percent annually while its overall value averaged 38 percent growth.

Rather than shrinking and simply trying to weather the economic storm it is facing, Nintendo has expanded and used its unique brand of innovation to stay at the top of its game and produce "must-haves" such as the Wii console, and we all enjoy the Wii.

Like other global companies reliant on its own unique brand of innovation, Nintendo has invested huge sums of capital into its people and commanded a large share of the market. Nintendo is performing at a higher level than any other company in the world in 2009. I am honored to have worked with Nintendo in the past and plan to do the same moving forward. Technological innovation will continue to move this Nation and this world forward and I thank Nintendo for being a visionary leader in that innovation.

HONORING REVEREND DR. JOHNNY TILLER FOR SEVENTY YEARS OF PREACHING THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST

HON. HEATH SHULER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. SHULER. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Reverend Dr. Johnny Tiller, who celebrated his 70th anniversary of preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ on September 10, 2009. Reverend Tiller has dedicated his life to this work, and has pledged that he will continue to do so until God calls him home to heaven.

Reverend Tiller has spent his life preaching and ministering to the needs of those in western North Carolina. At the young age of 12, Reverend Tiller preached his first sermon at a cottage prayer meeting. In November of 1944, at only 18 years of age, Reverend Tiller became the first full-time pastor of Starnes Cove Baptist Church, in Asheville, North Carolina.

In November of 1993, after serving as a full-time pastor of four different churches over 49 years, Reverend Tiller retired from full-time ministry. Since retirement, he has served as interim pastor for six different churches and currently serves at Sunrise Baptist Church in Asheville, North Carolina. He also has taught New Testament courses at Fruitland Baptist Bible Institute for the past 16 years. Reverend Tiller has preached on many radio stations, and has held numerous revivals and Bible study courses across the United States and around the world.

Madam Speaker, Reverend Dr. Johnny Tiller has done an exemplary service for the people of western North Carolina and throughout the world during his 70 years of ministry. His dedication and honorable commitment to serving God is truly a source of pride to western North Carolina. I urge my colleagues to join me today in honoring Reverend Tiller for his contributions to spreading God's word.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. CONNIE MACK

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. MACK. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 3183, Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2010.

Project Name: Gulf Intracoastal Waterway, Southwest Florida

Requesting Member: Congressman CONNIE MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 3183, Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of FY 2010

Account: O&M

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: United States Army Corps of Engineers

Address of Requesting Entity: 441 G Street, NW., Washington, DC 20314

Description of Request/Justification of Federal Funding: $1,313,000. This project would provide for maintenance dredging in four areas of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway (GICW). The areas in need of maintenance dredging include the mouth of Caloosahatchee River (Miserable Mile in Lee County) and the Boca Grande Bayou area (Miller's Marina in Lee County) of the GICW.

Project Name: Naples to Big Marco Pass

Requesting Member: Congressman CONNIE MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 3183, Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of FY 2010

Account: O&M

Address of Requesting Entity: 441 G Street, NW., Washington, DC 20314

Description of Request/Justification of Federal Funding: $722,000. The Naples to Big Marco Pass, also known as the Gordon River Pass in Collier County, supports the commercial fishing, stone crab harvesting, sport fishing and tourism industries. The Pass also supports the County's marinas and is used by residential boaters. Typically, the Pass is dredged every four or five years. It was last dredged in 2002 and needs to be dredged this year because shoaling diminishes the water depth in the channel.

Project Name: Lee County, FL (Reimbursement)

Requesting Member: Congressman CONNIE MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 3183, Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of FY 2010

Account: Construction

Address of Requesting Entity: 441 G Street, NW., Washington, DC 20314

Description of Request/Justification of Federal Funding: $645,000; There are three sections to the Lee County shore protection project (Captiva, Gasparilla, and Estero Islands) which were authorized as federal shore protection projects. Lee County advanced the Gasparilla section, which was completed in the Spring of 2007. The funding will allow for the reimbursement of the federal share to the County for the Gasparilla beach re-nourishment project.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BOB ETHERIDGE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Madam Speaker, I regret that a death in my family delayed my return to Washington this week. I was, therefore, unable to cast a vote on a number of rollcall votes on Tuesday, October 20, and Wednesday, October 21, 2009.

Had I been present on Tuesday, October 20, I would have voted "yes" on H. Res. 558, supporting the increased understanding of, and interest in, computer science and computing careers among the public and in schools, and to ensure an ample and diverse future technology workforce through the designation of National Computer Science Education Week; "yes" on H.R. 3319, designating the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 440 South Gulling Street in Portola, California, as the "Army Specialist Jeremiah Paul McCleery Post Office Building"; and "yes" on H.R. 3763, amending the Fair Credit Reporting Act to provide for an exclusion from Red Flag Guidelines for certain businesses.

Had I been present on Wednesday, October 21, I would have voted "yes" on H. Res. 811, expressing support for designation of October 2009 as "National Principals Month." No school can be great without a great principal, and my district is fortunate to have an outstanding group of principals. High-quality school leadership is critical to supporting America's next generation of leaders and innovators.

I also would have also voted "yes" on S. 1793, the Ryan White HIV/AIDS Treatment Extension Act of 2009; "yes" on H. Res. 837, recognizing Kentucky Wesleyan College for its service as an institution of higher education for over 150 years; "yes" on H. Res. 660, recognizing the distinguished history of the Laurinburg Normal Industrial Institute; and "yes" on S. Con. Res. 43, authorizing the use of the rotunda of the Capitol for the presentation of the Congressional Gold Medal to former Senator Edward Brooke.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JOHN R. CARTER

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. CARTER. Madam Speaker, on October 20 and 21, 2009, I was unable to be present for all rollcall votes due to an unexpected delay. If present, I would have voted accordingly on the following rollcall votes: roll No. 790—"yea"; roll No. 791—"yea"; roll No. 792—"yea"; roll No. 793—"yea"; roll No. 794—"yea"; roll No. 795—"yea"; roll No. 796—"yea" and roll No. 797—"yea."

HONORING DONALD D. LAUB

HON. JIM COSTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. COSTA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to a man whose life and pursuits have exemplified the spirit of fortitude and the virtues of family demonstrated by so many of those who work to provide food and fiber to our great nation. Many factors have contributed to California's bountiful agriculture industry and the economic well-being of the State of California, but one underlying factor in California's agricultural success has been the fortitude of those such as Donald D. Laub. A long-time Fresno county agricultural leader and Easton-area grape grower, Donald passed away on Oct. 20, 2009.

Born on July 22, 1933, in Fresno, Don Laub was involved in farming for the majority of his 76 years. At the tender age of 9-years-old, Don was called upon to assist his mother Anna and twin brother Ronald in keeping the family farm going when his father Henry died in 1943. These early years of working the farm would set the foundation for Don's entire agricultural career.

In 1954, Don married Clara Fogal. The Laubs soon expanded the family farm to the Easton area of Fresno County with the purchase of prime vineyard land. Under Don's direction, Laub Ranches quickly became known for producing premium table grapes, raisins and wine grapes. As part of J&L Vineyards, Don was one of the first to embrace and actively use integrated pest management and trellis designs for table grapes. Four generations have now engaged in the family business. His grandson, Ryan Jacobsen, is executive director of the Fresno County Farm Bureau, and his mother, Debbie Jacobsen, Mr. Laub's daughter, became the first female president of the Fresno-area chapter in 2002. Through Don's example, they have endured many challenges, but all with the tenacity of a strong family farm ethic whose commitment has remained to agriculture as a business, as well as a way-of-life. Up until his untimely death, Don was still actively farming and pursuing new agricultural challenges for his business.

Mr. Laub was a respected leader in local agricultural and community organizations. For more than 50 years, Don was involved with the Fresno County Farm Bureau, serving as the organization's president from 1986–88. He represented Fresno County on the California Farm Bureau Federation Board of Directors, and served on several advisory committees for the state and national Farm Bureau organizations. In 1996, Don received the Distinguished Service Award from the California Farm Bureau Federation. 1994 brought an extra-special time as both the Laub and his in-laws the Jacobsen, family, received the Fresno County Farm Bureau Distinguished Service Award in 1994. That same year, Don was selected as the Fresno County Agriculturalist of the Year. In 2001, J&L Vineyards received the Agricultural Business of the Year Award.

Renowned for his passion and dedication to agriculture, Don Laub also served on the boards of directors of the Ag One Foundation at Fresno State, California Association of Winegrape Growers, Farm Labor Alliance, the advisory committee for the U.C. Extension Field Station in Parlier, and for several wine industry boards and commissions. In the late-1980s, Don was appointed to serve on the federal Western Region Immigration and Naturalization Service Advisory Committee. He was later appointed to serve on the Big Fresno Fair Board of Directors and the Fresno County Planning Commission. Don was a member of the California Agricultural Leadership Program, Class III.

In addition to his service to agriculture, Don assumed leadership roles in the Easton community, having served as a trustee and president of the American Union Elementary School Board and Washington Union High School Board. He also served as a director of the Fresno County Public Schools Foundation. Don's passion for education was evident in his program to host inner-city school children from Los Angeles and Fresno on his farm during the 1990s to learn more about agriculture. Don served in the Biola Congregational Church, and on the boards of Twilight Haven Convalescent Home, Fresno County Civil Service Commission, and Fresno County Affordable Housing Task Force.

Donald D. Laub will always be remembered for his passion for Agricultural issues, dedication to his family and friends, and for his lifetime of service to his industry and community. He will be greatly missed, but his legacy will continue throughout all of California's San Joaquin Valley.

CONGRATULATING JAKE SCHULTZ FOR RECEIVING AN AWARD FROM THE NATIONAL ELEMENTARY SCHOOL HONORS SOCIETY

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise to congratulate a fine young man, Jake Schultz, on his receiving an award of recognition from the National Elementary School Honors Society. A fifth-grade student at Sagemont School in Weston, Florida, Jake, and 24 of his classmates, have received this honor for outstanding academic achievement and for demonstrating responsibility at home, school, and in his community. While Jake's mother, my esteemed friend and colleague, Congresswoman DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, insisted on there being no official recognition, I nevertheless equally insist on acknowledging Jake's stellar accomplishments. I know that both of his parents are extremely proud.

Jake has demonstrated leadership and accomplishment not only through his hard work in school and excellent grades but also through his community activism. Jake's community service includes the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life, the Susan G. Komen Race for the Cure, the Turkey Trot for Kids in Distress, and his work with a Miami orphanage.

There is an old saying that "all work and no play makes a dull boy." To that end, I should point out that Jake also excels in his efforts outside the classroom. He enjoys playing shortstop for the Hawks, a local baseball all-star travel team, where he has served as both captain and co-captain. Both he and his sister, Rebecca, attend Hebrew School twice a week and have a demonstrated commitment to their faith, family, and friends.

Jake sets an excellent example for his friends and peers in his approach to leadership. I applaud Jake for this honor that he has worked so hard to achieve, and I urge him to continue his dedication to academic achievement and community and public service.

DR. PEDRO CELIS

HON. DAVID G. REICHERT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 22, 2009

Mr. REICHERT. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of a distinguished constituent and, according to Hispanic Business Magazine, a man considered one of the most influential Hispanic Americans in the entire nation.

Dr. Pedro Celis, a celebrated Microsoft engineer and an engaged and informed individual living in my congressional district, was honored earlier this month as one of 100 influential Hispanic Americans. Alongside well known Hispanic Americans such as Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor and Secretary of Interior Ken Salazar, Dr. Celis is one of the most respected Hispanic American trailblazers in our great nation.

Born and raised in Monterrey, Mexico, Dr. Celis graduated from Monterrey Institute of Technology and earned his Ph.D. at the University of Waterloo in Canada. Aside from being a vital and innovative part of Microsoft's SQL Server Group, Dr. Celis served on President George W. Bush's Presidential Information Technology Advisory Committee. Further, Dr. Celis has served on a number of civic-minded organizations such as the Washington State Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Families Northwest, Hispanic Alliance for Progress and many more. It is no surprise, then, that Dr. Celis has been a trusted advisor on many issues since I was elected to serve in this body.

I want to thank Dr. Celis for his spirit of service and innovation, his commitment to community and family and his outstanding representation of Hispanic Americans. I am so proud Dr. Celis has taken his rightful place among the most influential Hispanic Americans in the nation, I encourage him to continue using his intellect and perspective to drive America in the right direction, and on behalf of the House of Representatives, congratulate him on this prestigious recognition.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, October 23, 2009

The House met at 9 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker.

PRAYER

Dr. Barry C. Black, Chaplain of the United States Senate, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, by whose providence our forebears brought forth a Nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to equal justice for all, give the Members of this body that same spirit as they seek to make a better world. May this quest for justice motivate them to eliminate those things that obstruct the coming of Your kingdom.

Each day, may they give primacy to prayer, seeking Your guidance as they strive to make decisions that honor You. Guide them by Your higher wisdom so that they will not give in to disappointment, doubt, or despair.

We pray in Your great name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House her approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. MORAN of Kansas led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain up to five 1-minute requests on each side of the aisle.

CONCERNS REGARDING FUNDING FOR HOME HEALTH CARE AGENCIES

(Mr. MICHAUD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICHAUD. Madam Speaker, I rise today to address concerns I have with the cuts in home health care agencies in the reform package. I applaud the hard work that has gone into crafting this legislation; however, I want to make sure that home health care services for our seniors are not interrupted in our efforts to target waste, fraud, and abuse in the Medicare system.

Home health care agencies, for example, are one of the most cost-effective ways to provide health care, especially in rural areas. In Maine, 86 percent of the home health care agencies will be operating in the red if we pass the cuts in the bill.

It is crucial that we address these cuts in a way that promotes efficient, high quality care, but does not put the access to health care in rural areas at risk. I am hopeful that we will be able to make this legislation better and provide quality, affordable health care to all Americans, so that Maine's seniors and home health care agencies in Maine will not be faced with an 86 percent cut in Medicare reimbursements that will force them to operate in the red.

SOUNDS LIKE SOMEBODY'S GETTING A TAX HIKE

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the new reformed, revised, special edition version of the Senate health care bill written in the dark, secret caverns of the Capitol is a whopping 1,500 pages long. Americans for Tax Reform did a word search on the bill and they found some interesting words.

Right here on this chart, the word "tax" is used 124 times. You know, that is the government's favorite word. "Taxes," 16 times; "excise tax," 12 times; "taxpayers," 79 times. Here is a bad one, "taxable," 158 times. That is a whole lot of taxes in this bill.

Of course, the words "tax exempt" are found only 15 times in the bill. There are some more bad words like "penalty" and "require" and "must." And here is a bad one, "shall," 2,585 times in this tax bill—I mean health care bill.

Mr. Speaker, these are some bad words, totaling 3,196 words about taking money from the American taxpayer.

Sounds like somebody is getting a tax hike. No wonder the bill was written in the secret caverns out of public view in this Capitol.

And that's just the way it is.

POSITIVE UPDATE ON RECOVERY PACKAGE

(Mr. WILSON of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to give a positive update on the progress of the recovery package.

When the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act came before Congress earlier this year, I had to make a tough decision on how I would vote. I am happy that I voted for the recovery.

We have had recovery funds go towards improving infrastructure, funding our medical research, and improving our schools for our children. Just last week, my district received over $20 million in stimulus funds to improve water quality and almost $2 million in medical research funding.

The positive impacts of this legislation are being seen across the State of Ohio and the country. A report recently shows that the Recovery Act has saved or created about 1 million jobs. In fact, in the last month, unemployment has dropped in each the 12 counties that I represent in Ohio.

With almost three-fourths of the stimulus funds still set to be released, I expect to see additional jobs saved and created across the country and in my district. I am excited to see the progress that we are making and will continue to make.

SUCCESS IN AFGHANISTAN IS VITAL TO PROTECTING AMERICAN FAMILIES

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, President Obama was correct when he stated as a candidate for President last year, "Our troops and our NATO allies are performing heroically in Afghanistan, but I have argued for years that we lack the resources to finish the job . . . And that is why, as President, I will make the fight against al Qaeda the top priority that it should be. This is a war we have to win."

Our President has chosen CENTCOM Commander David Petraeus and General Stanley McChrystal to implement a strategy in Afghanistan that would train Afghani security forces, destroy terrorist elements, prevent the Taliban from providing safe haven to terrorists, and promote political and civil development in Afghanistan.

Moving forward, we must provide the reinforcements that General McChrystal has requested. Indecision will only endanger our soldiers and empower our enemies.

I agree with Vice President Dick Cheney: The President is dithering. Democrats and Republicans should join, as President Obama said in his Democratic acceptance speech, to finish the fight against the terrorists.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th in the global war on terrorism.

PROVIDING TRANSPARENCY IN HEALTH CARE PRICING

(Mr. KAGEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KAGEN. Mr. Speaker, isn't it time we had transparency in all health care pricing? Wouldn't you like to know the price of a pill before you buy it? Wouldn't you like to know the price of the greatest discount a hospital offered at your location? Wouldn't you like to know the lowest price an insurance company accepted for payment in full for their health insurance policy?

This is a picture of several pills you can buy at a grocery store, and the price is always openly disclosed. Isn't it time that Congress passed legislation to guarantee that, at all times, any business entity that offers medical products and services for sale to the public openly disclose all of their prices and then accept the lowest price from everybody that they have accepted from anybody else? Isn't it time we had transparency in health care pricing?

THE FORGOTTEN U.S. TAXPAYER

(Mr. MORAN of Kansas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the forgotten U.S. taxpayer. On Wednesday, Neil Barofsky, the special inspector general overseeing TARP, said that recouping the billions of dollars given to the insurer AIG and automakers GM and Chrysler "is far from certain." He also noted that $50 billion set aside to help struggling homeowners lower their mortgage payments will yield "no direct return."

Also on Wednesday, the former chief of the Obama administration's task force on the auto industry, Steven Rattner, commented on the $20 billion previously lent to GM, "I don't think we are going to see it again," meaning that all the money is gone.

What is wrong with this picture? $50 billion here, $20 billion there. What am I missing? How can we spend, spend, spend without any accountability?

I am concerned as I travel across Kansas, my great State, that I hear countless Kansans express doubts that Congress and bureaucrats would make wise decisions with their tax dollars. They were right. With some of these unwise investment decisions that I mentioned today, I think a dose of Kansas commonsense is desperately needed in Washington, DC.

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

(Ms. CHU asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. CHU. Mr. Speaker, many victims of domestic violence are afraid to tell their story. They are afraid to get help or don't know how. These men, women, and children need someone to stand up for them, to know where to turn. That is what Domestic Violence Awareness Month is all about. In fact, this October is the 20th anniversary of legislation to establish this event.

Domestic violence is shockingly common. One in four American women and almost 10 percent of men will be sexually or physically assaulted by a spouse, intimate partner, or acquaintance at some point in their life.

I strongly support full funding of domestic violence programs for fiscal year 2010. This money is sorely needed. According to a recent study, last year, on one day alone, 10,000 people were turned away from local domestic violence programs due to a lack of resources.

I pledge to work on behalf of domestic violence victims here in Congress. I want survivors to know how much I respect and commend them for their bravery, and I want them to know there are services and support groups that can help.

CONGRATULATING FORT BEND, TEXAS

(Mr. OLSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OLSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my home county of Fort Bend, Texas, for having the third highest increase in jobs during the first quarter of last year among the Nation's largest 334 counties. It is impressive, given that of those 334 counties, only eight saw any job increase at all.

We already know what a special place Fort Bend is to live and raise a family. For more than 15 years, Fort Bend has been in the top 20 counties in the United States for economic excellence and population growth. Excellent schools, affordable housing, and extensive recreational facilities have attracted families with impressive demographic profiles. And this creates a local employment base that provides relocating companies with a diverse mix of professional, technical, skilled, and unskilled labor with the highest educational attainment levels in the region.

I am very proud of Fort Bend County for this economic accomplishment, and my family and I feel very fortunate to call it home.

SENATE EXERCISING PETTY PARTISANSHIP ON UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Madam Speaker, exactly one month ago today the House cast aside partisanship to work together and overwhelmingly pass legislation to extend unemployment benefits, which are running out for an average of 7,000 Americans every day.

While my Republican colleagues in the House recognize that unemployment is an American issue that transcends politics, Senate Republicans are oblivious to the urgent need to pass legislation because people are hanging on by their fingernails. Instead, the Senate Republicans have a choke hold on legislation to extend unemployment insurance benefits, and Americans who need the help the House passed a month ago aren't going to get helped until Senate Republicans stop playing partisan games.

There are positive signs the economy has turned the corner, but the Senate Republicans know what everyone else knows, that unemployment always takes longer to recover. But they still have a choke hold on the bill, which is a choke hold on nurturing the economic recovery.

A caller to my office this morning put it best: There is one reason you may not be able to buy food for your family next week, and it is called the Senate Republicans. Maybe they are the ones who ought to be out of work.

Maybe then the Republicans in the Senate would understand what it means to look to Washington for leadership but see petty partisanship instead.

Release the choke hold and pass the bill to extend unemployment benefits. Thousands of Americans can wait no longer.

EXPRESSING CONCERN REGARDING THE EFFECT OF PROPOSED HEALTH CARE REFORM ON SMALL BUSINESSES

(Mr. KLINE of Minnesota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KLINE of Minnesota. Madam Speaker, I rise today to express my concern about the majority party's proposed government takeover of health care and its devastating consequences for small businesses across the Nation. Despite continued calls from me and my Republican colleagues for a bipartisan approach that expands access to affordable health care to all Americans, the majority party insists on engaging in closed door meetings that ignore the input of a significant proportion of Congress and the millions of constituents they represent.

Among the most damaging elements of their proposal is a punitive new tax on small businesses that cannot afford to provide the coverage the Federal Government decides is acceptable. My Republican colleagues on the Education and Labor Committee offered numerous amendments to protect the small businesses that drive our economy from these and other burdensome mandates that threaten their viability, but our attempts were rejected.

Madam Speaker, it is time to push the reset button on this flawed proposal. Members of all political persuasions need to start fresh and work in good faith to bring meaningful health care reform to our constituents and keep our small businesses thriving.

COAST GUARD AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2010

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. CHU). Pursuant to House Resolution 853 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3619.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3619) to authorize appropriations for the Coast Guard for fiscal year 2010, and for other purposes, with Mr. PASTOR of Arizona (Acting Chair) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Acting CHAIR. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Thursday, October 22, 2009, amendment No. 6 offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. HIMES) had been disposed of.

AMENDMENT NO. 7 OFFERED BY MR. FLAKE

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 7 printed in House Report 111-311.

Mr. FLAKE. I have an amendment at the desk designated No. 7.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 7 offered by Mr. FLAKE:
Page 182, after line 14, insert the following:
(g) PROHIBITION ON EARMARKS.—None of the funds appropriated for the Fishing Safety

Training Grants Program pursuant to section 4502(i) of title 46, United States Code, as amended by this section, may be used for a Congressional earmark as defined in clause 9(d) of rule XXI of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 853, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. FLAKE. This amendment is straightforward and, I believe, non-controversial. It should be familiar to those of us here. The underlying bill establishes a new competitive grant program called the Fishing Safety Training Grants program. This amendment would simply prevent the new grant program from being a vehicle for earmarking.

I try to offer this amendment as often as I can when new grant programs are established. The reason I do this is because, unfortunately, we have a history now of these grant programs being established and, even if the underlying legislation says that they are to be awarded on the basis of merit or on a competitive basis, then, oftentimes, a little down the road, many of these grant programs are earmarked, some of them, we have learned through sad experience, almost completely earmarked.

Competitive grant programs earmarked by Members of this body, we simply can't have that. Now, I question why the Federal Government is using taxpayer dollars to fund training for individuals who operate commercial fishing vessels. I think that that's something that commercial fishing organizations ought to do themselves. However, if we are going to do this, then we should at least ensure that these grants are awarded on a competitive basis and aren't earmarked.

And so I hope that this can be adopted. I should note that in the 110th Congress, this similar amendment was adopted to H.R. 2357, the Beach Protection Act. It was approved by a rollcall vote of 263-117. And in the 111th Congress, this amendment was accepted on three separate occasions, each time by voice vote.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to claim the time in opposition, though I do not intend to oppose the gentleman.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I want to compliment the House's own version of Survivor Man, not only on surviving on a desert island and doing so very skillfully and astutely. Most of the time when Members of our body wind up with a story in The Washington Post, it's for some misdeed or misappropriation of funds. This was a remarkable story of personal strength and courage that I suspect derives from the gentleman's own upbringing and mission abroad for the church, and for his ability to survive under difficult conditions.

He's also been a survivor on his campaign, Mr. Chairman, to limit earmarks. And this is one case in which our committee agrees with the gentleman. On Page 177, Lines 4 and 5, the bill reads: the Secretary shall award grants under this subsection on a competitive basis. But also, as the gentleman has pointed out, notwithstanding such language in other bills, there have been deviations from the programmatic language, often by the other body, but also, on occasion, in this body.

We feel that these grants ought to be awarded competitively and, for that reason, very specifically wrote this language into the bill. I suspect that after the vigorous hearings that Chairman CUMMINGS has held over the past 2½ years, exposing failures of the Coast Guard contracting program, that this language will be honored and will be adhered to.

As to the reason for the training grants, this is the deadliest industry by a great many measures. In fact, there is a program on television on fishing entitled "The Deadliest Catch," and it tracks those who put out to sea to earn their living in dangerous circumstances. The safety training grants will deal with those and other similar situations. So on the policy side, I simply want to defend the provision.

But I concur with the gentleman on his concern, and we will accept the amendment.

At this point, I would yield to the gentleman from Maryland, Chair of the subcommittee.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Thank you, Mr. OBERSTAR, for your comments. Thank you for yielding. I agree with you. We've already done basically what the gentleman wants done. And I just want to add something, Mr. OBERSTAR, and that is that this has been something that our subcommittee has—this fishing problem, and safety is something that we've taken extremely seriously. The Bureau of Labor Statistics names commercial fishing as the most hazardous occupation in the United States. For the 11-year period from 1994 through 2004, 641 fishermen and -women lost their lives on fishing vessels, and so we take it very seriously.

I also want to thank the gentleman for constantly making sure that we do what you're hoping that we would do. We did it. Congratulations. And so, therefore, I support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLAKE. I thank the Chair, and I thank the chairmen of the committee and subcommittee for their vigilance here to make sure that these awards, these grants, are awarded out on a competitive basis. That's what we're seeking here. I'm glad that's going to happen.

For the record, I found no earmarks on Jabonwod, the island that I stayed on. It was an incredible experience. Thanks for mentioning it.

I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO).

Mr. LOBIONDO. I'd like to rise in support of amendment, thank Mr. FLAKE, and say that the Republicans on the committee are supportive of the amendment.

Mr. FLAKE. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 8 OFFERED BY MR. FLAKE

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 8 printed in House Report 111-311.

Mr. FLAKE. I have an amendment at the desk designated as No. 8.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

(g) PROHIBITION ON EARMARKS.—None of the funds appropriated for the Fishing Safety Research Grant Program pursuant to section 4502(j) of title 46, United States Code, as amended by this section, may be used for a Congressional earmark as defined in clause 9(d) of rule XXI of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 853, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is identical. It simply deals with a separate grant program established by the underlying bill. This one would refer to the Fishing Safety Grant, the fishing Safety Research Grant program, whereas the last one was the Fishing Safety Training Grants program. So I believe the same arguments apply here.

And with that, if the gentleman will agree to accept the amendment again, then I'll be prepared to yield back the balance of my time. But for now, I'll reserve.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I rise to claim time in opposition, though I do not oppose the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. OBERSTAR. The language of this provision is similar to the previous: to establish a Fishing Safety Research Grant program for academia, members of nonprofit organizations, businesses involved in fishing and mariculture, to conduct research on methods of improving the safety of commercial fishing industry, vessel design, survival equipment.

The gentleman ought to be very concerned about survival equipment. He's a survivor himself. Vessel monitoring systems, de-icing technology and severe weather detection, the gentleman had none of those on the island. He didn't have any equipment to detect severe weather or absence of water. He didn't have a water finder; he had to create his own water using the sun. So he's the antithesis of this language.

But the issue is not the underlying policy. The issue really is competitive basis award of grants. I think the gentleman's language will reinforce the purpose of the committee.

Does the gentleman from Maryland wish to be heard?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Once again, I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for laying that out. And I thank the gentleman for his vigilance with regard to these types of issues. Similar to the previous amendment offered by Mr. FLAKE, which prohibits earmarking of the grants to be awarded under the Fishing and Safety Training Grant program, this amendment would prohibit earmarking of the grants authorized by H.R. 3619. The Fishing Safety Research grant is a complement of the Fishing Safety Training program. The research grant program would provide funding to individuals in academia, members of nonprofit organizations and businesses involved in fishing and other maritime matters and other persons with expertise in the fishing industry to support research to identify measures that will improve safety in this industry. And of course these would be bid on a competitive basis.

But the one thing I did want to say, and I know that the chairman of the committee will agree with me, I must give a lot of credit to Congressman BARNEY FRANK, who worked tirelessly on these issues. And I know I've had at least 10 to 12 conversations with him. I know he's met with the chairman, and I just wanted to make sure that we gave him credit because he has championed this like nobody I've ever known, and I just wanted to say that.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I thank the gentleman for pointing that out, that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK) has been a vigorous advocate for his fishing community, which is largely a Portuguese immigrant community of long ancestry; and he really has been a strong advocate, along with Mr. YOUNG of Alaska.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLAKE. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 9 OFFERED BY MRS. KIRKPATRICK OF ARIZONA

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 9 printed in House Report 111-311.

Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona. I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

SEC. ____ STRATEGY REGARDING DRUG TRAFFICKING VESSELS.

Within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating, acting through the Commandant of the Coast Guard, shall develop a comprehensive strategy to combat the illicit flow of narcotics, weapons, bulk cash, and other contraband through the use of submersible and semi-submersible vessels. The strategy shall be developed in coordination with other Federal agencies engaged in detection, interdiction, or apprehension of such vessels. At a minimum, the strategy shall include the following:

(1) An assessment of the threats posed by submersible and semi-submersible vessels, including the number of such vessels that have been detected or interdicted.

(2) Information regarding the Federal personnel, technology and other resources available to detect and interdict such vessels.

(3) An explanation of the Coast Guard's plan, working with other Federal agencies as appropriate, to detect and interdict such vessels.

(4) An assessment of additional personnel, technology, or other resources necessary to address such vessels.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 853, the gentlewoman from Arizona (Mrs. KIRKPATRICK) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Arizona.

Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment today because, while I speak about securing our borders to stop the illegal crossings of drugs, weapons, and people, it is important to remember that our physical border is just one line of defense.

Our fight against the drug cartels—which operate the smuggling routes—actually begins in the jungles of South America. Much of the cocaine that enters the United States today originates in South America before working its way north. For years, the United States, Colombian, and Mexican governments have increasingly cracked down on the major smuggling routes.

As these paths have been squeezed, the cartels have found new and innovative ways to move their product. Recently, the traffickers have begun resorting to semi-submersibles, which are submarine-like boats that skim just below the surface of the water.

To further avoid detection, these boats incorporate advanced technology, including a design that reduces their ability to be detected by radar and utilizing water-cooled exhaust mufflers to reduce their heat signal. They can travel up to 3,000 miles without stopping for refueling, allowing crews to move cocaine from secret shipyards along the Colombian coast to safe harbors in Mexico where they join the land trafficking routes that take the drugs across the land border and into the United States.

With these advances, semi-submersibles are extremely difficult for authorities to track or even locate once they take to sea.

With an estimated 70 boats being deployed this year alone with the sustaining cargo capabilities of up to 10 tons, it is not surprising that over one-third of the cocaine reaching the United States is shipped this way. Even worse, these boats can just as easily be used to smuggle weapons or potential terrorists into the country.

Although the Coast Guard does an excellent job with the resources available to stop these vessels, the fact remains that it is a tough task, and only a small percentage of semi-submersibles are captured.

My amendment calls on the Coast Guard to establish a comprehensive strategy to combat the illegal flow of narcotics, weapons, bulk cash, and other contraband through the use of semi-submersible and submersible vessels.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona. Yes, I'll yield.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Even as we discussed this amendment, the U.S. Coast Guard has interdicted a self-propelled semi-submersible vessel in the Eastern Pacific with a multi-ton load of narcotics on board. Smuggling using submersible and semi-submersibles have become a part of the increasingly sophisticated smuggling operation.

We accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona. Thank you.

As part of this plan, the Coast Guard will address what additional resources they need to get the job done so we can make sure they get the help they need. Our fight against the cartels is constantly evolving, and we must continue to support those on the front line in adapting new strategies.

Therefore, I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this amendment. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to claim time in opposition although I am not in opposition.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOBIONDO. As the gentlelady stated and the chairman stated, this is something that the Coast Guard plays a critical role in their interdiction. We have dealt with the issue of submersibles and semi-submersibles to combat the growing drug threat. We need to give the Coast Guard the authority to do this.

We're happy to support the amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentlelady yield?

Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona. Yes, I'll yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Thank you very much.

I'll be very brief, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, I want to congratulate Mrs. KIRKPATRICK for this outstanding amendment. As our ranking member said, this is something the committee has been addressing for a while. But what we now want to do is make sure that the efforts of the Coast Guard are most effective and efficient, and the study and looking into this is what this is all about. And I think this will allow us to accomplish a lot more with regard to the equipment that we have.

I've actually seen these submersibles many times. As a matter of fact, I was just in Colombia and Mexico and actually saw them and saw they had been used to get around the Coast Guard.

And I know for a fact that they welcome this amendment, and I want to thank you very much because basically what you've done, Mrs. KIRKPATRICK, is you've made a very good bill even better.

Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlelady from Arizona (Mrs. KIRKPATRICK).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 10 OFFERED BY MR. KRATOVIL

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 10 printed in House Report 111-311.

Mr. KRATOVIL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

SEC. ____ . REPORT ON THE EFFECT OF FACILITY INFRASTRUCTURE ON MISSION FULFILLMENT.

(a) STUDY.—The Commandant of the Coast Guard shall conduct a national study on the facility infrastructure requirements needed to fulfill the Coast Guard's prescribed missions and capabilities, and ensure that the department in which the Coast Guard is operating maintains the ability to utilize the latest technologies.

(b) REPORT.—Within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commandant shall submit a report on the results of the study conducted under subsection (a) to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate. The report shall include—

(1) an assessment of any current shortfalls in facility infrastructure, including the extent of the use of temporary trailers and an inventory of the number and type of new facilities needed to meet the Coast Guards' mission needs; and

(2) a plan for how the Commandant will develop the appropriate facility infrastructure, including timelines, budgets, and any additional legislative authority the Commandant determines is required to implement such plan.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 853, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. KRATOVIL) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KRATOVIL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of my amendment to H.R. 3619 because I believe it is our duty to ensure the Coast Guard has top-notch facilities and infrastructure in order to effectively play its part in keeping America safe.

My amendment requires the Commandant of the Coast Guard to conduct a national study on the facility infrastructure requirements needed to fulfill the Coast Guard's prescribed mission and capabilities. This amendment is needed to assess the prevalence and effects of the Coast Guard operating out of temporary facilities and buildings.

In Maryland's First District, my district, as an example, the Coast Guard is operating out of a double-wide temporary trailer shared with NOAA operations in Oxford, Maryland. The Oxford Coast Guard does not own its own pier and must lease space from a commercial pier nearly 1 mile away from the temporary trailer. This temporary arrangement could be, obviously, affecting operations and mission capability.

My amendment requires a report to Congress that must include an assessment of any shortfalls in facility infrastructure, including the extent of the use of temporary trailers, an inventory of the number and type of new facilities needed to meet the service's mission, and a plan for how the Commandant of the Coast Guard will develop the appropriate facility infrastructure, including timelines, budgets, and additional legislative authority the Commandant determines is required to implement the plan.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a commonsense means towards ensuring those entrusted with protecting our coasts and shorelines are being given the right tools and facilities to do so effectively.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Chairman, I claim time in opposition although I am not in opposition.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the gentleman's amendment. The Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure has repeatedly requested information on the condition and the need for additional Coast Guard shoreside facilities. The gentleman's amendment would require the service to submit a report detailing current shortfalls and future shoreside needs.

We congratulate the gentleman. We fully support the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRATOVIL. The gentleman will yield.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I compliment the gentleman on this amendment. As Mr. LOBIONDO said just a moment ago, there are serious needs, a $1 billion backlog in the Coast Guard's shore construction program, and the gentleman's amendment is right on point, and I commend him for offering it.

And if the gentleman would yield to the Chair of the subcommittee, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. KRATOVIL. I will yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I rise in very strong support of the amendment offered by my colleague from Maryland (Mr. KRATOVIL). This amendment will require the Coast Guard to develop a national inventory of its office buildings and other facilities to assess its facilities' shortfalls. However, we realize there is a service backlog, as the chairman just said, of $1 billion, a shore facility repair backlog, that is.

So basically what this will do is allow the Coast Guard to more effectively and efficiently address this backlog.

And again, this is a very thoughtful amendment. I want to congratulate the Congressman and sponsor for submitting it. And again, I strongly support it and would urge our colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. KRATOVIL. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the chairmen of the committee and the subcommittee for their leadership. I appreciate and also thank the other side of the aisle for their support and urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

I yield back my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. KRATOVIL).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KRATOVIL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 11 OFFERED BY MR. NYE

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 11 printed in House Report 111-311.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

SEC. ____ AUTHORITY OF THE COAST GUARD TO CARRY OUT ITS HOMELAND SECURITY MISSIONS.

The provisions of this Act that relate to the Coast Guard's marine safety mission shall not impair the authority of the Coast Guard to carry out its homeland security missions, including—

(1) protecting ports, waterways, and marine transportation systems in the United States from acts of terrorism;

(2) safeguarding the United States' international borders from maritime intrusions by aliens seeking unlawful entry into the United States, and from individuals who aim to traffic in illegal drugs, firearms, and weapons of mass destruction in the United States;

(3) maintaining defense readiness, as one of the armed forces, to rapidly mobilize and deploy defensive security personnel during a national emergency;

(4) coordinating efforts with Federal, State, and local intelligence agencies to deter, detect, and take action against acts of terrorism;

(5) preventing human smuggling operations at ports, on waterways, and throughout the marine transportation system; and

(6) enhancing stability in the United States in support of the national security strategy of the United States as referred to in section 108 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 404a).

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 853, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. NYE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, today I rise to urge my colleagues to support a commonsense, yet necessary, amendment which will make clear the Coast Guard's critical role in the homeland security of America.

The Coast Guard security mission is not new. Since 1790, the Coast Guard has served as America's principal law-of-the-sea entity with a maritime responsibility of 6 million square miles. However, today the Coast Guard must manage multiple security responsibilities as it faces the extremely difficult challenge of enforcing increasingly complex laws against highly sophisticated adversaries.

Since 9/11, the U.S. has expanded dramatically its port security activities to the more than 300 U.S. ports and millions of Americans who live, work, or recreate near them. This is especially important to my constituents in Hampton Roads. I represent one of the largest ports in the United States, the Port of Virginia. The Port of Virginia is the deepest, newest, and biggest port on the east coast, capable of handling ships loaded 26 containers across.

Last month alone, Virginia's Norfolk International Terminal processed 89,359 container units. With the expanded reopening of the Panama Canal in 2014, the port will only grow, and it will be the mission of the Coast Guard to ensure the safety of all of those affected by its commerce.

The purpose of this amendment is simple. The Coast Guard is a multiple-mission armed force that must have uninhibited freedom to flex its military and security powers and respond to numerous concerns and threats in the maritime domain. This amendment makes clear that this is the most important mission of the Coast Guard, and nothing shall hinder that responsibility.

It is important to note that this amendment does not create new authorizations. It simply makes clear the continued importance of protecting our waterways and ports, maintaining defense readiness and coastal security, and securing our borders against aliens seeking to unlawfully enter the United States.

Americans deserve to know that they will continue to be safe from maritime threats. This amendment does just that by clarifying the Coast Guard's homeland security missions.

I commend to all of my colleagues this commonsense amendment, and I urge its support.

With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Chairman, we accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NYE. I will yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. NYE). It's an outstanding amendment. This amendment states that none of the provisions relating to marine safety included in H.R. 3619 would impair the authority of the Coast Guard to carry out its homeland security missions.

I support the amendment and its intention, and I urge its adoption.

That said, the Transportation Committee and the Coast Guard Subcommittee have examined the Coast

Guard's performance of its marine safety mission in great detail and have significant concerns that the service has assigned inexperienced and unqualified individuals to conduct casualty investigations, vessel inspections, and other marine-safety functions.

The shortcomings in the program have been well documented by the Homeland Security's inspector general, by retired Coast Guard Vice Admiral James C. Card, and by the committee's own examination of the Cosco Busan allision in San Francisco. And so certainly the provisions of this amendment will be extremely helpful in helping us again help the Coast Guard be most effective and efficient in its efforts, and it can only improve the bill and improve an already great organization, the United States Coast Guard, our thin blue line at sea.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chair, I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. NYE) for the following reasons:

The amendment specifies that the marine safety provisions in H.R. 3619 shall not impair the authority of the Coast Guard to carry out its homeland security missions.

The Coast Guard constantly monitors maritime transit zones and the Service's law enforcement authority enables it to apprehend foreign fishing vessels engaged in poaching and interdict vessels carrying illegal drugs, firearms and undocumented migrants.

The Committee has held several hearings regarding the Coast Guard's marine safety program over the past three years. Commandant Thad Allen was very concerned about the condition of the marine safety program, so he asked retired Admiral Jim Card to conduct a thorough analysis of the program. Admiral Card confirmed all of the problems that had been raised by industry and mariners during these hearings. H.R. 3619 addresses these programmatic shortfalls in the marine safety program.

The Coast Guard is a multi-mission agency and it is important that it carries out all of its missions in an effective manner—from marine safety and search and rescue, to homeland security.

Therefore, I support the gentleman's amendment that clarifies that nothing in the marine safety portions of H.R. 3619 will affect the Coast Guard's legal authority to execute its homeland security mission.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this amendment.

□ 0945

Mr. NYE. I thank the chairmen of the committee and the subcommittee for their support, and I yield back the balance my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. NYE).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 12 OFFERED BY MR. OBERSTAR

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 12 printed in House Report 111-311.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I rise as the designee of Mr. STUPAK to offer the amendment on his behalf.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of title 11, add the following new section:

SEC. _____. The Commandant of the Coast Guard shall conduct a study and analysis of the feasibility of the restoring the Fresnel Lens in the Presque Isle Light House in Presque Isle, Michigan to operating condition to meet the safety needs of commerce and submit within 180 days the report to the Transportation & Infrastructure Committee after the date of enactment of this Act.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 853, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, the Presque Isle Lighthouse at Presque Isle Township on the Upper Peninsula of Michigan is very important, has served a very important navigational purpose over many, many years on those stormy waters of Lake Superior. Those are treacherous waters. Unlike the ocean where waves have a long distance, hundreds of miles to play themselves out, the waters of the Great Lakes, and particularly of Lake Superior, even with a surface of 33,000 square miles, are short and choppy and harsh and brutal in the coming months of November, December, January, February.

The Presque Isle Lighthouse has saved many a mariner. It continues to operate, but its light has been replaced by one of more modern quality and capability with much greater candle power, much greater visibility, and longer distance than the Fresnel lens that the Coast Guard has used for probably 150 years; not only the Coast Guard, but other marine navigation services. Fresnel lenses are treasured historical pieces, but they are not navigational pieces any longer.

The gentleman's amendment would require the Coast Guard to do a study of the feasibility of reinstalling the Fresnel lens in the lighthouse in a condition so that it can provide safe navigation to commercial vessels on Lake Huron or at the juncture point of the upper waters and also serve as a supplement to the existing light.

I support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. We are happy to support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 13 OFFERED BY MR. LOBIONDO

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 13 printed in House Report 111-311.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

SEC. _____. USE OF FORCE AGAINST PIRACY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding title X of this Act, chapter 81 of title 46, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 8107. Use of force against piracy

“(a) LIMITATION ON LIABILITY.—An owner, operator, time charterer, master, or mariner who uses force, or authorizes the use of force, to defend a vessel of the United States against an act of piracy shall not be liable for any injury or death caused by such force to any person participating in the act of piracy.

“(b) PROMOTION OF COORDINATED ACTION.—To carry out the purpose of this section, the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating shall work through the International Maritime Organization to establish agreements to promote coordinated action among flag-and port-states to deter, protect against, and rapidly respond to acts of piracy against the vessels of, and in the waters under the jurisdiction of, those nations, and to ensure limitations on liability similar to those established by subsection (a).”.

“§ 8107. Use of force against piracy”.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 853, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, earlier this year, pirates attacked two American-flag vessels transiting waters off the Horn of Africa. If it were not for the heroic actions of our Special Forces, the bravery of the captain and the crew of these vessels, a terrible tragedy would have been at hand. Just yesterday we got reports that a Panamanian-flagged vessel had been seized by pirates with hostages being taken. We cannot allow this to continue.

Knowing this would be an ongoing problem, the bill, as it was reported from the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, included a very carefully worked out bipartisan agreement that we worked with Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. CUMMINGS, Mr. MICA, and myself that would shield U.S. merchant mariners, ship owners, operators, and captains from liabilities in U.S. courts following any action taken to defend a U.S.-flagged vessel, for instance, taken to defend the United States of America against a pirate attack.

Unfortunately, the Judiciary Committee objected and requested Chairman OBERSTAR add language to his recently adopted manager's amendment that appears to be an entanglement for getting the right thing done. The way the Judiciary Committee has worded this in the manager's amendment, a crewmember would be forced to go through a checklist in his mind or her mind of what legal entanglements could occur because of this.

The language in the manager's amendment only grants relief liability to the crew owner, meaning the vessel owners or operators and captains would still be sued. They would not be held without harm. They would have monetary damages, possibly.

Our amendment restores this bipartisan agreement. It's a commonsense agreement, something that the people on the committee worked out. It makes no sense in the heat of an attack, when you have got pirates coming at a U.S.-flagged vessel with automatic machine gunfire, with rocket-propelled grenades, or whatever else may happen, to suggest that a crewmember is going to be able to take the time to check through what is substantially or in excess of whatever the case is. We need to protect American interests.

Under our amendment, an American crewmember would only need to prove that the person attacking the vessel was a pirate in order to receive liability relief.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I fully share the desire of the sponsor of the amendment to effectively combat piracy on the high seas, but I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

As he has pointed out, the manager's amendment does address this issue and does so consistently with well-established, long-observed legal traditions which go back to the ancient civilizations of Rome and Babylon. The language in the bill, now with the manager's amendment, incorporated language of the Transportation and Infrastructure and the Judiciary Committee in place of what was in the introduced bill.

Now this amendment, unfortunately, goes too far. It grants absolute immunity within the United States on our lakes and rivers to violence against our own citizens. Now, the difference in the two provisions, one carefully crafted by the Judiciary Committee and now the one being offered on the floor, is not about enabling ships' crews to respond to piracy. Both do that fine. The difference is that this amendment would eliminate all legal restraints. There will be no legal accountability, not even under criminal law. When they say no liability, the way the bill is drafted, it would be you could commit crimes against people and still be exempt.

Now, I can't imagine that the sponsor actually meant to do this. I think he is talking about civil liability. But when he says—the language in the bill, with the manager's amendment, says that you are totally immune unless you knew what you were doing was substantially in excess of what was necessary.

The language in the amendment, however, is not even limited to a civil liability. It's not even limited to during the attack. It could be after the attack when no one is under any danger, and there is no limit on what crimes can be committed at that point.

I would hope, whether this amendment is adopted or not, if there are still concerns about the amendment, that we would work together cooperatively as we go forward to make sure that we give the crewmembers all of the flexibility they need in these situations without going too far and allowing crime and torture and everything else under criminal law.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the ranking member of the committee, Mr. MICA.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Chairman, while I know the Judiciary Committee may be well-intended—the Judiciary Committee has the responsibility to make certain and ensure that citizens' rights are protected—we are not talking about any act that is committed within waters of the United States. In fact, there are laws and definitions that rule enforcement and legal proceedings. We are talking about an act of piracy on the high seas.

We are talking about the way the Judiciary Committee has constructed this language that we now have a piracy or a pirate protection provision in the bill that we worked so hard on in a bipartisan manner to make certain that we give every tool possible to those who man our vessels, American-flagged vessels on the high seas, to take on pirates with whatever force they need. We don't need to have a test and read them their Miranda rights and a whole host of normal, civil procedures.

What we need to do is give those who are being attacked, when we see murder and mayhem on the high seas, give them the tools to respond adequately. Just like a citizen would defend their own home or their own property, we have American-flagged vessels that deserve the protection of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO).

I urge its adoption.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to pose a couple of questions to the sponsor of the amendment, if he would respond.

My first question would be whether it's his intent, because the language under the amendment does not limit it to the high seas, is it your intent to limit this application to high seas?

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Well, under title 18, an act of piracy is defined as happening on the high seas. The intention is to defend against an act of piracy and, as defined by law, it has to be on the high seas.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Reclaiming my time, I would ask another question, Mr. Chairman.

Is it your intent to limit this to the application of civil law and not criminal law? Would you exempt owners and operators from criminal acts?

Mr. LOBIONDO. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Yes, you do exempt them from criminal acts?

Mr. LOBIONDO. For civil.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Just civil.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Just civil.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I think the wording, as it is, says that an owner-operator who uses force or authorized the use of force to defend a vessel of the United States against an act of piracy shall not be liable for any injury or death caused by such force.

That does not limit it, in its present version, to civil. It would actually exempt him from any liability, that would include criminal. I would hope that the gentleman, whatever happens to the amendment, would work cooperatively so that we would limit it to the intent as he has articulated today.

Mr. LOBIONDO. We certainly would be happy to work with you to make sure that we are in synchronization with what we are all understanding.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Just to close, again, the manager's amendment, the crewmember of the vessel would have to prove in court that he knew at the time, she knew at the time, that the defensive actions were not substantially in excess of what is reasonable. That's not what's going to happen if a piracy attack occurs.

I don't think any Members are going to even want to be close to voting for a piracy protection provision in line with what's going on. What does substantially in excess of reasonable mean? A crewmember is going to have to think through this checklist as a pirate attack is happening?

That's not what we have in mind. I don't think it's the right way to go. I would urge all of our Members to vote in favor of this amendment to make sure that U.S. interests are protected.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO).

The amendment was agreed to.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE ACTING CHAIR

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, proceedings will now resume on the amendment printed in House Report 111-311 on which further proceedings were postponed:

Amendment No. 10 by Mr. KRATOVIL of Maryland.

AMENDMENT NO. 10 OFFERED BY MR. KRATOVIL

The Acting CHAIR. The unfinished business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. KRATOVIL) on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the ayes prevailed by voice vote.

The Clerk will redesignate the amendment.

The Clerk redesignated the amendment.

RECORDED VOTE

The Acting CHAIR. A recorded vote has been demanded.

A recorded vote was ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 812 I was not able to vote on the House floor on the amendment to H.R. 3619, the Coast Guard Authorization Act offered by Representative KRATOVIL due to a family matter. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 812 the amendment offered by Representative KRATOVIL from Maryland, which requires the USCG to conduct a study on the facility infrastructure requirements needed to fulfill the Coast Guard's missions and capabilities and report the findings within 180 days. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

The Acting CHAIR. No further amendments being in order, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WEINER) having assumed the chair, Mr. PASTOR of Arizona, Acting Chair of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3619) to authorize appropriations for the Coast Guard for fiscal year 2010, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 853, he reported the bill, as amended pursuant to that resolution, back to the House with sundry further amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Pursuant to House Resolution 853, the question on adoption of the further amendments will be put en gros.

The question is on the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 385, nays 11, not voting 36, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

So the bill was passed.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 813 I was not able to vote on the House floor on the passage of H.R. 3619, the Coast Guard Authorization Act due to a family matter. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 813, final passage of the Fiscal Year 2010 U.S. Coast Guard Authorization Act, had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CARDOZA. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present for several votes taken on the House floor today, Friday, October 23, 2009, due to illness. As a result, I missed rollcall votes Nos. 812 and 813.

Had I been present: On rollcall vote No. 812 I would have voted "aye" and on rollcall vote No. 813 I would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I missed votes on Friday, October 23, 2009. If I were present, I would have voted: "aye" on rollcall No. 812, On Agreeing to the Kratovil of Maryland Amendment to H.R. 3619 and "yea" on rollcall No. 813, On Final Passage of H.R. 3619, the Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2010.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 3619, COAST GUARD AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2010

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to make technical corrections in the engrossment of H.R. 3619, to include corrections in spelling, punctuation, section numbering, cross-referencing, and the insertion of appropriate headings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. CANTOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I'd like to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) the majority leader, for the purposes of finding out about next week's schedule. And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, on Monday the House will meet at 12:30 p.m. for morning-hour debate and 2 p.m. for legislative business with votes postponed until 6:30 p.m. On Tuesday the House will meet at 10:30 a.m. for morning-hour debate and noon for legislative business. On Wednesday and Thursday the House will meet at 10 a.m. for legislative business, and on Friday the House will meet at 9 a.m.

We'll consider several bills under suspension of the rules. The complete list of suspension bills will be announced by the close of business today. In addition, Mr. Speaker, we will consider H.R. 3854, the Small Business Financing and Investment Act of 2009. We also will consider the conference report, H.R. 2996, on the Department of the Interior, Environment and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, and also a House joint resolution making further appropriations for fiscal year 2010, and for other purposes, otherwise known as a CR. The CR, as the gentleman from Virginia knows, will run out on the 31st of this month.

I yield back.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the gentleman about some reports that we've been hearing about other bills that could perhaps come to the floor next week, and I wonder if he could add some clarity to that. There have been reports that perhaps an estate tax bill would be coming to the floor next week. And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman. We're working with the Ways and Means Committee and would like to bring to this floor in the next few weeks, at least, if not next week, a bill to deal with the estate tax issue.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman and, Mr. Speaker, would ask further whether we can expect that bill to include the statutory PAYGO provisions and whether that bill would be compliant with those provisions. And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. Yes on both questions. We will probably have, either in the bill or by rule, we'll adopt statutory PAYGO, which we pledged to do in our budget, as you know, and it will be compliant.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, and I just wanted to reiterate so, in my understanding, that would mean that the estate tax bill would be paid for if it came to the floor of the House. I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. As the gentleman will recall, I would remind the House, Mr. Speaker, the budget that we passed provided for baseline spending for four items, that is to say, that the baseline which is, essentially, the premise that I think your party has adopted with respect to tax legislation, that the estate tax, the alternative minimum tax, the middle income tax cuts and the so-called "doc fix," the sustainable growth rates, would be scored at baseline, which means effectively you would not pay for them.

And I would expect us to comply with that budget provision, giving those four exceptions of which the estate tax is one.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman. And I believe, Mr. Speaker, what I'm hearing is that neither the estate tax bill nor the other items included in the budget resolution passed would be paid for, and that there would be an assumption somehow that that money would just be taken care of. And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. It's sort of like your assumptions when we have tax bills on the floor, yes.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for that observation. Again, I just wanted to make the point that, again, as we are in unprecedented times incurring debt unlike we have ever in this country, that these obviously very important bills that need consideration are coming to the floor without being paid for contributing to the exacerbation of the debt situation on our children and their children. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, further—

Mr. HOYER. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTOR. I would yield to the gentleman, sure.

Mr. HOYER. The gentleman, of course, knows that if we don't act on the estate tax that there will be a great cost next year. The gentleman's aware of that which will itself exacerbate the budget.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I'd respond to the gentleman, he and I both know that we actually have shared position on the fact that we need to address the uncertainty surrounding the cliff, if you will, in the estate tax expiration of the repeal.

But, again, if we are in the age of being very concerned about the deficit, the Members, I believe, on our side need to know that the bills coming to the floor are not paid for. They may be compliant with provisions in the budget resolution, but simply are not paid for. And the assumptions made about baseline are just those.

Mr. HOYER. Will my friend yield again?

Mr. CANTOR. I yield.

Mr. HOYER. Given my friend's concern, would the gentleman join me in supporting and getting the votes for a statutory PAYGO on its own? I yield back.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOYER. Because of our concern about the deficit, which I share.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I would say, that I, as well as other Members of our leadership and our conference certainly would be willing to engage in crafting solutions as to how we go about implementing PAYGO provisions without raising taxes because, as we know now, families across this country are hurting, small businesses are having difficulty keeping lights on. And now, certainly is not the time for us to see increased taxes on the working families or small businesses of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman further about what we could expect in terms of the reports surrounding the so-called "doc fix" on the sustainable growth rate formula and whether we can expect such a bill to come to the floor next week and whether that bill would be paid for. And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. As you know, when the former administration was in office, we regularly passed the doc fix which, as you know, wasn't paid for. We think that's not appropriate. But we agree with you that now is not the time to raise taxes. However, we also understand that if we do not address the sustainable growth rate for doctors, that Medicare recipients won't have doctors to go to. We want to ensure that Medicare recipients do in fact have providers who can meet their medical needs.

As a result, Senator REID, as you know, tried to pass the sustainable growth rate modification so there wouldn't be a 21 percent cut in January to doctors. Unfortunately, all of your party voted against that and 13 of my party voted against that, so it lost 47–53. But we believe that that's going to be addressed one way or another so that we assure and we intend to do that, to assure our Medicare recipients that they will not lose the services of their doctors.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the gentleman again, might we expect that bill to come to the floor next week? And if not, when could we expect such a bill to come to the floor? And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I'm not sure that we're going to have it next week, but I can assure the gentleman that we do intend to address the issue so that doctors do not confront a 21 percent cut in their Medicare reimbursements for Medicare patients, yes.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman. And if I could, Mr. Speaker, turn the gentleman's attention to the question of the bill that Ranking Member ROSLEHTINEN and Chairman BERMAN are working on in terms of the Iran Refined Petroleum Sanctions Act. This is a bill, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman has indicated to me, as well as to the chief deputy whip, Mr. MCCARTHY, last week that that bill would be coming to the floor within the next few weeks, and would ask the gentleman, does he expect the bill on the floor next week or the week following? And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for the question. As I have said, Mr. BERMAN expected to mark up the bill, as is my expectation, and Mr. BERMAN will be marking up the bill. As the gentleman probably knows, that bill is subject to joint jurisdiction or co-jurisdiction by three other committees, the Oversight Committee, the Financial Services Committee and the Ways and Means Committee, so they will have to do their work on that bill as well.

But I do look forward to moving that bill, as the gentleman, as I've indicated in the past, and not only that, I want to say to the gentleman, I look forward to discussing it with him in the next couple of days.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman for that, and appreciate his efforts to try and bring that bill to the floor. I know he and I share a commitment to try and make that happen as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman where we stand as far as the schedule for November and December.

As we know now, we are within a week or so of the October 30 targeted adjournment. I guess all of us understand that that is not going to be met. But we've not been given a schedule; and as the gentleman knows, Members on his side as well as ours are used to having some advance notice about scheduling their lives and when they can be home with their families, their constituents, when they will be asked to be here in Washington performing their duties. And I don't recall that we've ever been in a situation where there's not been an official schedule issued this far or this close up to an adjournment.

So I'm asking the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, if he could tell us, officially, what the schedule could be for the next month and the month succeeding that. And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I have, for at least 3 weeks now, been indicating what I thought the schedule was going to be in November. As you know, a little earlier this week I modified that. As I caveated when I announced that we would be meeting the first and third weeks of November, and not the second week of November—because Veterans Day, which all of our Members want to be home with those memorializing those we have lost in the defense of freedom and celebrating those who have served in defending freedom and democracy. Our Members want to be with their fellow citizens at home accomplishing that objective, including myself and, I'm sure, yourself.

The fact is, however, I also caveated that with, if we could pass health care we may use a portion of that week. Therefore, let me make it very clear officially, if you will, that I do not expect and do not plan that we'll be here Thanksgiving week. I expect us to be here the first and third weeks, from Monday through Friday of November.

On the second week of November, which starts with the 9th of November, I want Members to make available and ask their schedulers now for Saturday the 7th, Monday the 9th and Tuesday the 10th as possible dates, possible on which we would meet. The contingency will be whether or not we can move the health care bill, which we believe is the most important piece of legislation that we'll consider, and probably both sides believe that, whatever their view of what they're going to do on that legislation, that we will consider.

And if, in fact, it's possible to pass it prior to Tuesday the 10th, then we will possibly be in on Saturday the 7th, Monday the 9th and Tuesday the 10th. On Tuesday the 10th we would meet no later than 3 p.m.

In December—I've had discussions with the majority leader in the Senate. We are of the opinion that we certainly ought to make every effort and will make every effort to be out of this session, the first session of this Congress, by Friday the 18th of December. The following week is Christmas week and we certainly, my view is, want to have people home on Christmas week. And I have no intention of meeting the following week either. We are in discussions about the first, the month of January, not just the first 2 weeks, but the month of January. I'm hopeful that fairly soon I'll be able to announce what we want to do on that.

□ 1115

As a matter of fact, I would be glad to have discussions with the gentleman from Virginia on that issue.

Mr. CANTOR. I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, and I would just reiterate the custom, which is to release an official schedule so that, as he knows, Members can do their planning.

Mr. HOYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTOR. Yes.

Mr. HOYER. We all want that. But I think anyone who has served any time in the House or the Senate knows that as you begin to wind down a session—in this case the first session of this Congress—legislation passing between the two bodies dictates your schedule more than simply arbitrarily saying we'd like to be out on this day. And as a result, we will have to see where we are as we move along.

The Interior bill I was hopeful that we would consider 2 weeks ago, it's on the schedule for this coming week. As you know, we were unable to get to agreement. We now appear to have got an agreement in the conference, and we're ready to move forward.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman.

Again, whether we are in or whether we are out, I don't think we're advocating a position of being out and certainly not completing work.

But, again, it is rather unprecedented where we are without the ability for us to have an official schedule, which is why I continue, Mr. Speaker, to prod on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, if I could then turn to the question of the piece of legislation that the gentleman referred to, health care reform, and about its timing and, frankly, the inclusion of a public option.

We've been hearing a tremendous number of reports—many of them conflicting—about what will be the timing of the health care bill coming on the floor of this House, what may be included. Again, we are in a position being kept in the dark, which is rather odd given the repeated insistence by this White House and the President—both as he is our President now and when he was a candidate for President, when he proclaimed that negotiations over important bills—and, of course, this would be one of them—would occur in the light of day and even appear on C-SPAN. That's obviously not been the case.

We've heard yesterday from the Speaker quoted in the press that she had the votes for a public option. We then have heard today reports indicating that there isn't the support on your side for a robust public option.

Again, this just underscores the fact that there is so much movement on one side of the aisle without any participation by the other.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman to clarify and give us some clarity on this notion and whether he could define for us what is included in a robust public option, what is the difference between a robust public option or something else which seems to have now captured the interest of everybody in this body and certainly those in the press.

And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I don't know that I am going to get into a long, extended discussion about the substance of this bill or we could be here until late tonight.

I will tell the gentleman, however, that no one ought to be surprised, having watched this bill being considered over the last 6 to 7 months, some 70-plus hearings that have been held over the last 2 years, to know this is a very difficult subject of great magnitude of impact on the American public and the American economy. One-sixth of our economy is health care expenditures.

No one should be surprised that it's receiving a lot of discussion and attention. No one should be surprised that there are differences as to how to get from where we are—which is a system that is escalating at a very rapid rate. Family costs are increasing by probably $1,800 a year, families are being forced out of the market, and the uninsured grow. So we are trying to deal with that issue.

The fact is that in terms of the public option as has been discussed, there are a number of ways to provide an alternative assurance of coverage to individuals other than simply an exchange, which would be like the Office of Personnel Management's Federal employee health benefit exchange—which is private sector—folks competing for our business and the business of those that are employed by the Federal Government. There is a lot of discussion about that.

That discussion continues, and I will tell the gentleman that as the Speaker said and I've said, we will bring the bill to the floor when we think it's ready to come to the floor. And I've further asserted emphatically that we will give the 72-hours notice that we had indicated we would give.

I would tell you further that until such time as we've resolved what the bill is going to look like, it is impossible for CBO to give a final score.

We had pledged that we're going to be deficit free, that is to say the bill will be paid for, will not add to the deficit. The President indicated that in his speech to the joint session, and we intend to do that.

So I tell the gentleman we're having continuing discussions on not just the public option, to which the gentleman refers, and to how that will be configured, but there are other matters as well of concern to the public and to all of us.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I think the gentleman makes one of the points I am trying to convey, and that is these discussions, these continuing negotiations are occurring behind closed doors, they're occurring just on one side of the aisle in and around issues of health care that affect every American—young, old, Republican, Democrat, male, female. It is universal in its application, the issue of health care.

So it is troubling, at the very least, for us to sit here and witness these ongoing negotiations behind closed doors when we on our side, I think, have posited alternatives. The gentleman and I have met on discussions surrounding some points that we can agree upon.

But what's troubling right now is the insistence that we continue to read about that there be a public option. My office has received reports about their being three different public options that your side is considering.

Now, we've heard reports that you have whipped those three distinct public options. My question, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman is, what are those three public options? I think the public deserves the right to know. The public has rejected the notion of a public option replacing their health care. That is really the impetus, I believe, that the gentleman would want to put on display about this discussion about the so-called public option and the three versions that are discussed.

Mr. HOYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTOR. I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I reject the gentleman's conclusion, which I think is incorrect, the premise that the public has rejected. In fact, as the gentleman probably knows, hopefully, the polling data indicates that the support for the public option has risen since August—has risen, I tell my friend. And there are a number of different ways to get there.

The Senate has one that's on public display, has been on the Internet. The House Education and Labor Committee has one option with Ways and Means that has been on the Internet. It's been on the Internet since July. Energy and Commerce has one—a different correlation of that—and it's been on the Internet since July. There have been a lot of discussions, and I would refer my friend to the Internet, and I am sure he has copies of all of those bills.

Nothing is secret, nothing is behind closed doors.

Now, are we having discussions with ourselves about how we want to get there and with people who will vote for the bill?

The gentleman has made it very clear, I don't think your side is for a public option. We disagree on that. That is a fair disagreement. You're not for a public option, and I haven't talked to anybody on your side that's for a public option.

We disagree. We believe that the public option is an option that the public ought to have and not simply be in the sights of insurance companies who may or may not give them the price or the coverage that they could either afford or need. That's the difference. But I haven't talked to anybody on your side who wants a public option no matter how it is configured.

So very frankly, I will tell my friend that discussions with your side on a public option seem somewhat pointless.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I'm a little taken aback by the gentleman's statement saying it's pointless for him to have discussions with Republicans regarding health care.

Mr. HOYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTOR. I will.

Mr. HOYER. I didn't say that.

The gentleman, as he cited, we had a meeting. Am I incorrect in saying that the gentleman indicated to me he was not for a public option? Is that an accurate statement?

Mr. CANTOR. The gentleman is not incorrect because Republicans believe that a public option doesn't bring about competition. I think both of us, Mr. Speaker, agree that competition is what is needed to bring down prices to increase access.

We believe that real competition comes from the ability for individuals to choose not just from two or three insurance companies that may have 50 percent of market share; we believe real competition comes from the ability for an individual to choose from a thousand different insurance plans for that individual and his or her family. That's where we begin to—that's what we can agree on. The competition brings down prices. We don't believe public option brings competition.

And that is the essence. The end shouldn't be public option.

Mr. HOYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTOR. I will yield when I finish.

And I would further say again to the gentleman's representation about where the American public is because of a poll that was taken this week, I think there have been numerous articles written on debunking the methodology behind that poll. In fact, the question when posed, do you support a public option to compete with private insurance, is and would yield a different response than if you were to ask, would you support a public option that replaces the current health care coverage that you have.

And, Mr. Speaker, this is our position. We believe that if you introduce a government that also makes the rules as a competitor, that there will no longer be an even playing field for competition, that you are on a path to single-payer health care in this country. That is the difference, Mr. Speaker. But I don't think that the gentleman is correct in his saying it is fruitless to have discussions surrounding health care because we have a difference of opinion.

And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman misstates what I said. I said discussion regarding a public option when I had talked to nobody on your side who was for a public option.

It seems pointless, from my perspective, to talk to somebody about how a public option ought to be configured if, as you have just stated, you're not for a public option. Therefore, a discussion about a public option does in fact to me seem pointless.

Furthermore, let me say this: The gentleman was here when we—I believe you were here—when we adopted the current part D of the Medicare program. The gentleman will recall in that bill you provided for a public option. You provided for a public option to provide competition and availability of a health care prescription-drug coverage. Now, you provided it in the event that there was no private sector, or at least not more than one, available in any one segment of our society.

So I tell the gentleman, in your own bill—that I think you supported; I don't know that off the top of my head—but my presumption is you supported it or certainly the overwhelming majority of your party supported with very few Democratic votes, and that provided for an option of a public option.

Mr. CANTOR. I would say to the gentleman there are a lot of differences to the construct of the MMA, the legislation passed that created part D than what is being discussed today.

Mr. HOYER. I agree with that. But it did provide for an option of a public option.

Mr. CANTOR. Reclaiming my time.

So I would say if the gentleman is of that opinion that there is an ability to discuss things surrounding health care, then why is it that we continue to see closed door negotiations?

So the gentleman points to the different options, public options or versions thereof, being discussed in the three different committees in the House. Are those the public options that the gentleman and his side have whipped and are being discussed now behind closed doors?

Frankly, any imposition of a public plan is going to cost taxpayers and small businesses money. I would certainly think the gentleman would share the notion that Republicans should be involved, and it would be of concern to both Republicans and Democrats throughout this country that the American people would want their right to know being realized in these discussions, which is my point as to why is it that we can't hear what these three different public options are and what the differences are therein.

Mr. HOYER. I would repeat, you know exactly what the options are. As I just told you, they are online. They have been discussed. They were discussed extensively in the committee on television. Surely the gentleman would not want the Speaker or anybody else to be misunderstood as the fact that your party doesn't have discussions among yourselves as to what options you want to pursue.

If that's your representation, frankly, I tell my friend, I don't think many people are going to believe that. Are we having discussions? We are. I don't believe either you individually or anybody that I have talked to on your side of the aisle is for a public option.

We are discussing how public option ought to be configured. You don't believe there ought to be a public option, period, for the reasons you have stated. We understand that. We have a difference of opinion on that.

Now, if you are for public option on some configuration, then if you will submit that to me, I would be glad to talk to you about it.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, we have always and continue to represent that we are ready to work with him, his leadership and the other side in crafting and affecting positive health care reform. Again, shutting down discussions is not a route to achieve that that could fairly produce what the American people want.

I don't think it could produce fairly or unfairly what the American people want if it is going to be about my way or the highway as far as health care discussions and a bill that passes on this floor.

I thank the gentleman.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2009

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Monday next for morning-hour debate, and further, when the House adjourns on that day, it adjourn to meet at 10:30 a.m. on Tuesday, October 27, 2009, for morning-hour debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

SUFFERING AT HANDS OF HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANIES

(Mr. LUJÁN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUJÁN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard from constituents across my district who are suffering at the hands of health insurance companies.

I have heard from doctors who do their best to treat those without insurance.

I have heard from entrepreneurs who want to start their own businesses but fear that they won't be able to find coverage for their sick children because they have preexisting conditions.

I have heard from women who can't replace their ill children's used catheters because they were denied by their insurance companies.

I have heard from small business owners struggling to afford coverage that their employees depend on.

They need us to act, they are asking us to act, they are demanding us to act, and that's why we must.

We need to fix our broken health insurance system. We need a health insurance system that works for men, for women, for children, seniors and families, for everyone. We need action to combat rising health care costs to make health care more accessible and to offer real choice.

We need a public option. We must demand a public option.

HONORING GREATER MIAMI YMCA

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the wonderful work of the YMCA of Greater Miami and the addition of its new chief development officer, Pat Morris.

Every day, YMCAs across the country help improve our communities and provide positive programs for youth and adults. Over the past year alone, the YMCA of Greater Miami has cared for 4,700 children. The Miami Y has coached and instructed more than 3,650 children in sports, held summer programs for more than 2,900 kids, and mentored over 100 teens.

The YMCA of Greater Miami is working with other community groups to build affordable homes for families and seniors and will open a brand-new preschool in the near future.

With the help of Pat Morris, the YMCA of Greater Miami will continue to foster positive growth in our neighborhoods.

I congratulate my good friend, Pat, for his position as chief development officer. He has dedicated himself to helping our south Florida community, first as cofounder of the community service organization Hands On Miami and now as a member of the YMCA team.

Congrats to the YMCA of Greater Miami, and I wish the agency continued success as they improve the lives of all of our neighbors.

AMERICANS SUPPORT IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a recent survey by Rasmussen Reports shows that a growing majority of Americans want our immigration laws enforced.

Nearly two-thirds of those surveyed believe law enforcement officers should conduct surprise visits at locations where illegal immigrants are employed. Only 19 percent opposed the visits, compared to 24 percent last April. By a 13-point margin, Americans believe that the Federal Government should not prevent local law enforcement officers from checking on individuals' immigration status.

The Phoenix Business Journal and the Washington D.C. Examiner both reported the poll's findings, but coverage in news outlets that regularly cover immigration issues was glaringly missing.

Mr. Speaker, the media should report all of the facts, not omit those they disagree with.

WHERE ARE THE JOBS?

(Mrs. CAPITO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I have one question. Where are the jobs?

We are now more than 7 months from passage of the so-called stimulus package, yet it is more apparent than ever that the bill has fallen woefully short. In my home State of West Virginia, the White House predicted that this legislation would create 20,000 jobs. Well, guess what? At this point, since February, the reality is that we have lost 13,000 jobs. Sadly, the stimulus isn't living up to its promise of job creation.

Additionally, the policies of this administration are actually contributing to job losses in my State. Cap-and-trade legislation will put an economic target on the back of our States, States like mine. Meanwhile, the EPA has continued to hold up mine permits across Appalachia, creating an unprecedented sense of unease and uncertainty that's already costing us mining jobs and threatening thousands more.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents deserve better now, and they certainly deserved better when we first debated this bill. I join them in asking: Where are the jobs?

HEALTH CARE REFORM SHOULD NOT BE ON BACKS OF OUR SMALL BUSINESSES

(Mr. BOOZMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOOZMAN: Mr. Speaker, we need health care reform, but not on the backs of our small businesses. The proposed plan would impose more than $820 billion in new taxes, something hardworking Americans and small businesses can't afford.

In a letter, Gilbert Travis of Travis Lumber Company in Mansfield, Arkansas, described how his company and many other lumber companies have been forced to cut back on the number of days a week in operation. Some have met an even worse fate—closure.

Gilbert is not optimistic that the outlook for these businesses will get better any time soon and writes there is no way the American economy, with its hardworking people, can afford the absolutely wasteful spending and tax increases that Washington is trying to impose at every angle they can possibly think of.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with Gilbert. We cannot be imposing new taxes on hardworking American businesses that are struggling to make ends meet in this economic climate. Let's craft a real reform that will decrease health costs, allowing more persons to get the care they deserve.

THE STIMULUS: IS THAT ALL THERE IS?

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. FOXX: Mr. Speaker, this is an appropriate time to ask: Is that all there is?

Yesterday, President Obama's economic adviser, Christina Romer, testified before Congress' Joint Economic Committee on the so-called stimulus plan. Her testimony was illuminating. She indicated that the stimulus plan's greatest impact on economic growth happened between April and September of this year. We lost hundreds of thousands of jobs during each of these months.

How could they possibly consider this a success? If the greatest impact of the trillion dollar stimulus is behind us and we still experience a terrible loss of jobs, that seems the opposite of success.

This whole scenario reminds me of a Peggy Lee song from 40 years ago, called, "Is That All There Is?"

Where are the jobs we were promised in this stimulus? According to President Obama's economic adviser, the main impact is behind us. Really? Is that all there is?

Republicans have better solutions to get Americans back to work that don't involve reckless, ineffective borrowing and spending that drive us further into debt. Americans deserve better.

GOVERNMENT TAKEOVER OF OUR HEALTH CARE

(Mr. FLEMING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLEMING: Mr. Speaker, as a physician, I must say the news coming out of Washington is all bad when it comes to the government takeover of our health care.

Just last night, Speaker PELOSI got the news that she does not have the votes to pass it. The Senate expects the debate to spill over into next year, and even Democrat candidates back home are turning against this crazy idea.

Why is this happening? Simply put, they can't find a way to pay for it. There are not enough taxpayers and insurance policyholders to pay the exploding tab, and the polls show a continued decline in support. Also, they can't depend on the wealth of the Federal Government anymore as we are broke, broke.

This is not a case of Republicans wanting sick people to die quickly. It is a case of wanting this sick, expensive, ineffective, and wasteful government takeover of health care to die quickly.

PEOPLE OF AMERICA TALKED TO US IN AUGUST

(Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN: Mr. Speaker, one of the problems we have here in Washington, DC, is we often seem to be disconnected with our folks back home. That is a problem. It's sort of an institutional problem, and that's bad enough. When we do it on purpose, that's even worse. We seem to have selective memory, maybe convenient amnesia.

The other side of the aisle appears to have forgotten that there is a month in the year called August. It was when the people of America talked to us, and they told us that they had grave concerns about the proposal that was before us with respect to health care.

Now we are told, well, look at the ABC poll instead. Forget about August. What else have they told us that we can forget about? Oh, that's right, Fox News doesn't exist.

August doesn't exist, Fox News doesn't exist. Maybe next month we will hear that the American people don't exist and we are just here creating a make-believe America with make-believe problems and make-believe solutions. Let's remember August where the real people live with the real problems and the real need for real solutions.

AFGHANISTAN

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENCE: For every American President, there are moments of decision, moments where the credibility of the United States and the fate of people in foreign lands hang in the balance. President Obama faces such a moment in Afghanistan. The President must decide whether to adequately equip our military in Afghanistan or lose the war to al Qaeda and the Taliban.

General Stanley McChrystal was brought on to implement the counter-insurgency strategy the President himself endorsed in March. And that commander has made it clear what resources he needs to get the job done. If we fail in Afghanistan, we risk that country turning into a training ground again for al Qaeda, increasing instability spilling over into nuclear-armed Pakistan. The consequences to our people would only be a matter of time.

Our soldiers and the people of Afghanistan cannot afford to wait any longer. Now is not the time to risk the hard-fought, blood-bought gains in this critical front in the war on terror by extended deliberations and indecision. Now is the time for our President to act decisively, to give our commanders and our soldiers the resources they need to win the war in Afghanistan and come home safe.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest when our whip and the majority leader were talking a while ago about how they would like to work with us so we can reach some kind of agreement on the public option plan, the government plan. It brought to mind when President Obama came to our caucus, our conference, early on in his administration. He indicated he wanted to work with us and he wanted to have our input. He came with great fanfare, and the media was there saying here is this man, he wants openness, and he wants to work with the Republicans. This is the kind of President we need.

He smiled, he shook our hands, he left the room and then wouldn't talk to us anymore. We have had absolutely no input whatsoever into this health care plan, and yet the facade has been created that we have. And they blame us because things haven't happened. It's because their own caucus can't get together on a plan.

The American people know that there is chicanery going on behind closed doors. And they promised us we would be able to participate in the planning for health care reform. Yeah. That was a lot of baloney then, and it's a lot of baloney now.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PERRIELLO). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

HONDURAS: A DEMOCRACY IN SPITE OF THE U.S. INTERVENTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there is trouble in Honduras, and the United States has chosen sides in this conflict. Here are the facts: the people of Honduras are holding an election on November 29. Honduras is a democracy. Their elections will fill 3,000 offices nationwide and all 128 seats of the national congress, and they will elect a new President.

They've had some trouble recently with their current President. Manuel Zelaya attempted to stay in office and be on the November ballot, which is not allowed by term limits in their Honduran Constitution. Zelaya wants to become a permanent President of Honduras and has tried to illegally change the Constitution to keep himself in power.

The people have followed the rule of law, however. They followed their own Constitution. Just as the people of this country would follow our Constitution under similar circumstances, they took proper, legal action to stop Zelaya's illegal behavior, and they removed him from office through the legal court system.

Article 239 of the Honduran Constitution states: "The citizen who has already held executive power"—that would be the President—"may not be President or designee. Anyone who violates this provision or proposes its reform and supports those who do directly or indirectly, must immediately cease the discharge of their duties, and shall be disqualified for 10 years from the exercise of any public function."

Those are pretty simple words. It sounds like the Constitution prevents Zelaya from trying to hijack the government.

The self-governing people of Honduras set forth in their Constitution that a tyrant could not abuse the process and become a dictator. They set rock solid term limits to one term for President. These good people legally removed Manuel Zelaya, the man who would be dictator, a tyrant, and a special friend of Hugo Chavez of Venezuela. Now that's special.

Here's how the people acted legally. After several attempts by legal means to prevent Zelaya from staying in power, the Office of Public Prosecutor filed a criminal complaint. The charges were treason, abuse of authority and usurpation of power in violation of the Honduran Constitution. The Supreme Court of Honduras agreed with the charges and issued an arrest warrant for the armed forces to arrest Manuel Zelaya. So Zelaya was legally arrested. And because he violated the Constitution, he was exiled from the country.

We should be applauding the people of Honduras for following their rule of law. In America, we honor the rule of law. We believe in self-determination and constitutional limits on government power, but we picked the wrong side in this case. We took the side of the tyrant versus the people of Honduras.

Now why would we do that? We cut off foreign aid to Honduras. We have refused to recognize the interim government that followed the rule of law. This is a Honduran Government that is doing everything despite America's interference to make sure that their elections take place as scheduled, to make sure their democracy survives according to the Constitution.

In the meantime, Zelaya, who was exiled, has slipped back into the country. He's holed up in the Brazilian Embassy. He's being funded by guess who? The Communist dictator, Hugo Chavez. Zelaya's thugs are targeting select groups with violent acts, including attacks on Christians. Zelaya is attempting to create chaos, but the popular will does not exist to return this would-be dictator to power. The people want their free elections to take place as scheduled.

One of our Senate colleagues, Senator DEMINT of South Carolina, recently returned from Honduras. He said that the only person he found in Honduras interested in putting Zelaya back in power was guess who? The American ambassador.

Mr. Speaker, it is a moral imperative that we back the rule of law, that we honor the decision of the democratically elected institutions of Honduras, that we support the elections in November, and that we recognize the new government, whoever wins the race.

Why do we, as a Nation, say we believe in self-determination but deny self-determination to Honduras? Why do we say we believe in a constitutional government but bash the nation of Honduras for following their own Constitution? Why do we support the likes of a deposed ruler like Zelaya? And how is it any of our business to determine who should be President of Honduras anyway?

Honduras has been an ally of the United States, yet appears to be another example of how we treat our allies worse than we treat our enemies.

We are on the wrong side of things when we stand by the bandit dictator Hugo Chavez and his buddy, Manuel Zelaya.

And that's just the way it is.

LET AMERICA'S HUMANITARIAN VALUES SHINE IN AFGHANISTAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, Afghanistan appears to be headed for a runoff election in the next few weeks. The United States must insist and we must expect that a credible, democratic Afghan government emerges from this political process because so very much is at stake. A democratically elected government in Kabul that has the trust of the Afghan people is necessary because it's our best weapon in the fight against violent extremism in Afghanistan.

Such a government, a stable, honest government, would stabilize the country. It would encourage Afghanistan's neighbors to engage in a regional diplomatic effort. And it would be the strong partner America needs to deliver humanitarian and economic aid to the Afghan people. Afghanistan desperately needs this aid. It has seen two foreign invasions in the last three decades and years of political turmoil.

Afghanistan is also very, very poor. By some measures, it is just about the poorest country in the world. The United Nations issued its annual Human Development Index earlier this month, Mr. Speaker, and it ranks the countries of the world on criteria such as life expectancy, literacy, school enrollment and gross domestic product. Afghanistan ranked 181st out of 182 countries—next to the last.

That's why the United States must put far more emphasis on economic development, reconstruction, humanitarian aid and improved governance if we are to succeed in Afghanistan. To do this, we must redouble our efforts to bring a "civilian surge" of aid workers to Afghanistan. In fact, President Obama announced this initiative 7 months ago with a great deal of fanfare, but the results so far have been disappointing.

An adviser to General McChrystal, our commander in Afghanistan, told The New York Times last week that "our entire system of delivering aid is broken and very little of the aid is getting to the Afghan people." Another adviser said that the effort has been a "nightmare" and that "vast amounts of aid money have been wasted."

One of the reasons for this problem, Mr. Speaker, is the violence in the country. The aid workers who are on the ground now in Afghanistan are brave and truly dedicated. But some of them are understandably reluctant to leave the relative safety of Kabul and venture out into the countryside.

There are several ways to improve this situation. Some American military personnel could be directed to protect the aid workers. The United States could step up its efforts to train the Afghan army and police so that they can provide local protection. The White House must also provide better benchmarks for measuring the progress of our civilian effort.

We must prove that we are doing a better job of delivering American humanitarian aid, and this can be accomplished with three extremely important goals: it would improve the lives of the Afghan people and give them a reason to reject violence. It would demonstrate that America offers the Afghan people a better future than the extremists offer them, and it would help to remove the impression that the American Army is an occupying army.

Mr. Speaker, if we want to succeed in Afghanistan, we must let America's humanitarian values shine through. That's the best way to help build a stable Afghanistan that can't be used by the Taliban or other extremists to threaten our security, their security, and the peace of our world.

TAKE A LESSON FROM PRESIDENT RONALD REAGAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the Obama administration, led by its Council of Economic Advisors, indicated that if we spent $1 trillion with the stimulus bill, that we would create 3.5 million new jobs. Well, here it is, what, 8, 9 months later, we've spent a great deal of the stimulus money, and instead of creating 3.5 million new jobs we've lost 3 million jobs. That's a 6.5 million job swing.

Yesterday, Dr. Christina Romer, the Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, said that the economic stimulus package, $1 trillion—and remember, we're $1.4 trillion in the hole this year—that the economic stimulus package at $1 trillion wasn't going to work anymore for the next several months and we should expect the economy to continue to drift downward, with unemployment reaching 10 percent. The reason I bring this up is because 49 out of the 50 States have lost jobs while we spent $1 trillion to create the jobs.

Now, just stop and think about that. We're throwing money at this situation as rapidly as possible, the government is getting its nose into every aspect of our economy, moving toward a European socialist-type economy, and the economy continues to drift downward.

And why is that? Because we're taking more and more money and spending it that we don't have, number one. And number two, they're going to tax us to death at a time when we're suffering economic calamity in this country.

What should we be doing? Well, Ronald Reagan came into office back in 1980 when Jimmy Carter had 12 percent unemployment—worse than now—and 14 percent inflation—worse than now—with a misery index of 26 percent. And they said you had to raise taxes because we had such problems, we had to have more money. Ronald Reagan said, well, I think we ought to cut taxes. And so they cut taxes across the board, and he was criticized severely for it.

They said, well, there is going to be a shortfall in money coming into the Treasury. We were bringing in $500 billion a year in taxes at the time, and 4 years later we were bringing in $1.3 trillion. Do you know why? Because when you cut taxes, you give people more disposable income, business has more money to invest. And so business invests, people buy more products because they have more money, because of that they produce more products, more jobs are created, and the economy expands. It makes common sense; if you have more money, you're going to be able to spend more money.

And so what happened was we had the longest period of economic expansion in the history of this country because we had a President that could see what really needed to be done—let the free enterprise system work and let people have more of their money to spend. Cut government spending and cut government taxes. Well, Reagan did the job.

So what are we doing today? We've got a government that thinks they should control everything, and they're moving toward a socialist economy very similar to what you see in France and England and other parts of the world that are really suffering and continue to suffer through economic chaos.

All I can say, if I were talking to the President, is, Mr. President, get real. Wake up. Forget this socialist nonsense. Take a look at the history book and look at what Ronald Reagan did. And if you would do that, and instead of raising taxes cut taxes, you would stimulate economic growth, put people back to work, and get this economy heading in the right direction.

I don't know if the President pays attention to what we're saying around here, Mr. Speaker, but if he does pay attention, I hope he'll listen and look at the history books and check out what Ronald Reagan did.

WALL STREET, WE ARE WATCHING YOU

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, this week, The New York Times reported that Credit Suisse, the largest Swiss bank, stated how it will overhaul compensation for its banking executives. The changes go into effect in January and include their compensation for 2009 and 2010.

Importantly, Credit Suisse ties compensation and bonuses to the firm's future performance and return on equity. In other words, if your decisions yield solid performance, you will be rewarded on that, not on arbitrary bonuses taken just because you can. I'd like to commend Credit Suisse's experience to other big banks in our country. We should follow suit in an even more rigorous reimposition of discipline.

By contrast, in a speech on September 9, 2009, Goldman Sachs' Chief Executive Officer Lloyd Blankfein put forth some principles on compensation. We asked when Goldman Sachs was going to implement those changes; we haven't heard back. But Credit Suisse already did it; they did it in line with the principles established by the G-20 in Pittsburgh earlier this year.

In their press release, Credit Suisse reaffirms the bank's commitment to fair, balanced, performance-oriented compensation policies that align long-term employee and shareholder interests.

So, once again, Wall Street could have led the charge and embraced, for the sake of our Nation, reforms of employee compensation which rewarded short-term gains and encouraged excessive risk-taking as well as increased moral hazard. Instead, Wall Street stood up only for themselves again, first, last, and always. They simply have too much power.

Moreover, Credit Suisse's approach claws back bonuses if the banks perform poorly. Why should America accept that if a bank performs poorly, that bonuses should be paid out when our taxpayers' money is propping them up and at risk? In particular, if the government saved your bank and therefore your pay despite your poor performance, why should you get a huge bonus? It makes no sense.

Congress and the administration, by allowing huge bonuses in the wake of huge bailouts, have ceded our people's power to Wall Street. These individuals are making three, four, five, six—10 times as much as the President of the United States.

Today, Obama pay czar, Kenneth Feinberg—who was not vetted by the Senate through normal procedures—is supposed to address this situation for our country. Feinberg is expected to cut the average pay only of the top earners at the seven bailed out firms, AIG, Bank of America, Citigroup, General Motors, Chrysler, GMAC, and Chrysler Financial. Remember, the American taxpayer saved them all—for example, they saved Citibank from its downfall. So their jobs were saved, their companies were saved by us, yet they get bonuses?

Some say we would be a lot worse off if this lopsided approach had not been imposed, but far too many Americans find it hard to imagine that as they have lost their jobs, their homes, their access to credit, their sense of hope, and their self-respect. Meanwhile, they see Wall Street titans enriching themselves even more and the biggest banks getting even bigger. That's what is happening across our country.

Wall Street should have been leaders for our republic, helping the Americans whose money saved them, but their culture of ordinary greed continues to stampede forward. They simply don't care about the rest of us. The distance between those elites and our people are growing, and with each step the have-nots suffer more and pay for those that have far too much.

Amidst the compensation fiasco is the core problem: These megabanks are too unaccountable and too big—some call them “too big to fail.” As many have said, those institutions too big to fail are actually too big to exist. It's time to break up the biggest banks, sell off their healthy parts, and never let another bank or financial institution become too big to fail. Wall Street comeuppance is long overdue.

Main Street USA is paying close attention to your shenanigans. We don't intend to take the spotlight off until justice prevails and the stampeding bulls are put back in very tight cages.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 21, 2009]

CREDIT SUISSE OVERHAULS COMPENSATION (By Graham Bowley)

As Wall Street looks forward to a new era of blowout bonuses, the unthinkable is happening, at least at Credit Suisse, the big Swiss bank. It said on Tuesday that it would radically change the way it paid its employees.

In a break with longstanding industry practices, Credit Suisse intends to alter the mix of salaries and bonuses for its top employees, tie the bonuses to a specific financial measure and effectively claw back the payouts if the bank's fortunes dim.

The move will not necessarily reduce compensation at Credit Suisse, which is moving aggressively to compete with American banks on Wall Street. But the shift nonetheless brings Credit Suisse in line with pay practices endorsed in September by the Group of 20 nations and puts the bank ahead of resurgent rivals like Goldman Sachs, some of which are contemplating similar changes but have yet to make their plans public.

Goldman, for its part, announced new pay principles in May, which it says embrace best practices on compensation.

A year after Washington rescued the financial industry, bonuses are once again front and center as some big banks roar back in profitability. Goldman, for instance, is on track to award bonuses that could rival the record payouts it made at the height of the boom.

But the likelihood that Wall Street will enjoy big paydays as many ordinary Americans are struggling has angered some policy makers and created a public relations headache for banks. Many are struggling to defuse the resentment directed at the industry.

The Credit Suisse plan will cover roughly 2,000 employees in the United States. Top executives will receive a greater portion of their total compensation in the form of their monthly cash salaries, while bonuses will be split evenly between cash and stock.

The stock will vest over four years, and the cash portion will pay out in three. But both components will be adjusted based on the bank's performance over that period, with a particular emphasis on its return on equity, a closely watched financial measure. The performance of an executive's business will also be taken into account.

By tying payouts to a specific measure like return on equity, Credit Suisse will essentially be able to take back bonuses in the event the bank's fortunes take a turn for the worse. Credit Suisse earlier introduced a bonus plan linked to some of the bank's troubled assets.

Claw-back provisions are becoming increasingly common on posteris Wall Street. Critics say the industry's decades-old bonus culture, which focused on short-term profits, encouraged the excessive risk-taking that led to the crisis. Morgan Stanley introduced provisions for a portion of its employees' bonuses last year, and another Swiss banking giant, UBS, imposed similar rules on deferred pay.

But Credit Suisse executives and compensation experts said the bank's plan was the most detailed and comprehensive yet to take back pay if senior executives—and the bank—failed to perform adequately.

“As far as we know, we are the first major bank to announce a compensation structure that is consistent with the best practices laid out at the recent G-20 summit,” Brady W. Dougan, chief executive, said in a statement.

The bank is also introducing a minimum share ownership requirement for members of management committees and the executive board to align the most senior executives' pay with shareholders' interests, although it did not specify the new thresholds.

Lynn A. Stout, professor of securities law at the University of California, Los Angeles, said Credit Suisse's four-year stock deferral was at the outer limit of what many banks were considering.

She said many other banks were thinking of changing compensation practices along similar lines to rein in practices that made multimillionaires out of many financial executives during the housing bubble.

“You get a sense that there is a cultural shift in boardrooms and a new awareness about looking to the longer term,” she said.

At a meeting of the G-20 last month, leaders agreed on recommendations to defer bonus payouts for several years and reduce the incentives for people to take short-term gambles, although they avoided any explicit call for a ceiling on remuneration. The return to big profits at some banks and big bonus payouts, even at firms that received billion-dollar federal bailouts, has raised questions about whether compensation should be even more tightly controlled.

In the summer, the Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association, a financial industry trade group, put forward guidelines on best practices, which included tying bonuses more closely to long-term performance and a more independent role for bank compensation committees.

The Federal Reserve is now preparing to release its own guidance on compensation for the more than 5,000 banks it regulates. It would cover staff at all levels within banks, not just at the most senior levels, and would apply to Goldman and Morgan Stanley, which became bank holding companies last year.

In broad scope, the new rules being considered depart from the largely hands-off approach that dominated bank regulation in the United States for the last three decades. They give banks freedom in how they structure their compensation. The rules are intended to inhibit pay plans that encourage reckless behavior by rewarding only short-term gains. But they would not stop million-dollar pay packages or address issues of fairness.

The stimulus bill that President Obama signed into law this year restricts companies that accept federal bailouts from paying bonuses that exceed one-third of an executive's total annual compensation.

Now, Kenneth R. Feinberg, the administration's pay czar, is due to publish by Oct. 30 his finding on pay at the seven major banks that still have not returned large amounts of federal support.

His report will include judgments on the 25 most heavily compensated executives at each of the banks—citing pay levels and composition of pay, and whether compensation is properly aligned with performance.

CREDIT SUISSE ANNOUNCES ITS COMPENSATION STRUCTURE FOR 2009 AND 2010

ZURICH.—October 20, 2009.—Credit Suisse today announced its compensation structure for 2009 and 2010. The new structure is consistent with the guidelines for best practice that were recently announced at the G-20 summit and reaffirms the Bank's commitment to fair, balanced and performance-oriented compensation policies that align long-term employee and shareholder interests.

Brady W. Dougan, CEO of Credit Suisse Group, said: “At a time of strong focus on executive compensation, we are announcing a compensation structure that enables us to strike the right balance between paying our employees competitively, doing what is right for our shareholders and responding appropriately to regulatory initiatives and political as well as public concerns.”

“We have been using deferred, share-based compensation instruments for many years and we continue to be committed to these principles. They are at the heart of our compensation structure for 2009 and 2010.”

“The changes to our compensation system follow a number of measures Credit Suisse has taken over the past two years in response to changes in the financial services sector. These measures include making adjustments to our business strategy, significantly reducing our risk exposures, including introducing a reduced-risk, capital-efficient business model in the Investment Bank, and strengthening our capital base.”

OVERVIEW OF KEY FEATURES

The changes announced today will be effective from January 1, 2010 and will apply to compensation awarded for the year 2009. The most important features of the structure are:

1. A shift in the mix of discretionary variable (bonus) and fixed compensation for Managing Directors and Directors, which will result in a change in the proportion of non-deferred compensation paid as fixed base salary.

2. The introduction of two new instruments for deferred variable compensation awarded to Managing Directors and Directors: Scaled Incentive Share Units (SISU) and Adjustable Performance Plan Awards (APPA). A significant proportion of this population's variable compensation will be delivered in these new type of awards (50% each).

SISU are similar to Incentive Share Units (ISU), an equity based instrument that has been in place for the past three years. The new SISU will deliver a base share amount on a four-year pro-rata basis. Delivery of additional shares will depend on the average share price as well as return on equity (RoE) over four years.

APPA is a cash-based award which will have a notional value that adjusts upward annually based on Credit Suisse's RoE over three years. A mechanism will adjust the outstanding awards downward, should the business area of the employee be loss-making.

The principles and instruments used for Managing Directors and Directors also apply to members of the Executive Board but not to employees at the level of Vice President or below.

In addition, Credit Suisse will introduce minimum requirements relating to Credit Suisse share ownership for members of Divisional and Regional Management Committees and for the Executive Board.

CONFORMITY WITH G20 GUIDELINES AND REGULATORY ENVIRONMENT

The new structure and the new vehicles are consistent with the guidelines for best compensation practices that were recently announced at the G-20 summit and reaffirm the Bank's commitment to fair, balanced and performance-oriented compensation policies that align long-term employee and shareholder interests. Credit Suisse will continue to refine the provisions of the plan as well as the governance process for compensation decisions and disclosure to shareholders, based on competitive factors and the evolving regulatory environment.

DETAILS OF THE CHANGES IN COMPENSATION 2009/2010

The following is a brief summary of the changes and the new compensation instruments announced today. A detailed description will be included in the Group's Annual Report 2009.

CHANGES TO BASE SALARY FOR MANAGING DIRECTORS AND DIRECTORS

In order to strike an appropriate balance between fixed and variable compensation, Credit Suisse is planning a shift in the mix of variable and fixed compensation for Managing Directors and Directors. This will result in the payment of an increased proportion of compensation in the form of fixed base salary. Employees up to and including Vice Presidents will continue to be reviewed for potential annual salary adjustments, consistent with previous practice.

VARIABLE COMPENSATION

Cash Awards

Discretionary variable compensation will continue to be paid in unrestricted cash for amounts below CHF 125,000 / USD 100,000 (or the local currency equivalent). For higher amounts, table will indicate the proportion of variable compensation subject to deferral. Deferred compensation will be split 50/50 between SISU and APPA.

SCALED INCENTIVE SHARE UNITS

Scaled Incentive Share Units (SISU) are similar to the existing Incentive Share Units (ISU) with a new element that increases or decreases in value based on Credit Suisse's average RoE. As with traditional ISU, the base share amount vests annually, in the case of SISU on a four-year, pro-rata basis. My additional shares will vest on the fourth anniversary of the award date, based on the price of Credit Suisse Group AG registered shares. A new feature will link the final number of additional shares to an additional factor: If Credit Suisse's average RoE over the four-year period is higher than a pre-set target, the number of additional shares will be adjusted upwards, and if it is below the target, the number of additional shares will decrease.

ADJUSTABLE PERFORMANCE PLAN AWARDS

Adjustable Performance Plan Awards (APPA) will have a notional cash value subject to a three-year, pro-rata vesting schedule. Awards adjust upward on an annual basis using Credit Suisse's RoE in the respective year as a multiplier. However, should a business area be loss-making, outstanding APP awards held by employees of that business area will be adjusted downwards. The metrics within the revenue divisions will be based on each business area's financial contribution. The metrics for Shared Services, Regional Management and embedded support functions within the divisions will be based on the financial performance of Credit Suisse Group.

CZAR TO SUBSTANTIALLY CUT PAY: SUMMERS (By Caren Bohan and Karey Wutkowski)

WASHINGTON (Reuters).—Top White House economic adviser Lawrence Summers said on Wednesday the administration's pay czar will "substantially reduce" the paychecks at firms that have received billions of taxpayer dollars.

"With respect to the companies that have been major recipients of federal support, Ken Feinberg is reviewing them . . . (and) will, I suspect, produce an outcome where they will be very substantially reduced," Summers told the Reuters Washington Summit.

Feinberg, the pay czar appointed by President Barack Obama in June, is expected to cut total compensation by an average of 50 percent for the top earners at seven bailed-out firms, sources familiar with the matter said on Wednesday.

The administration has faced public outrage, as Wall Street firms that were recently propped up by federal assistance have brought their bonuses back to pre-crisis levels even as the general population faces the highest unemployment level in 26 years.

Summers said Feinberg's rulings—which are expected to be publicly released in the coming days—will ensure taxpayers' interests come before those of shareholders and incumbent management at the beleaguered firms.

The seven bailed-out firms under Feinberg's jurisdiction are AIG, Bank of America, Citigroup, General Motors, Chrysler, GMAC and Chrysler Financial.

SEES FINANCIAL REFORM BY YEAR END

Summers also said he was still hopeful that legislation to broadly rewrite U.S. financial regulations would pass by the end of the year.

"I don't see any reason why it can't get done this year," Summers said.

Analysts following the debate on Capitol Hill have become increasingly skeptical that Obama can meet his goal of enacting it by year-end. Some say that early next year might be a more realistic time frame.

While some critics say the bill is not robust enough, Summers said he believed the changes would have a chance to have a major impact on financial stability for years to come.

He said that while the administration wants to guard against efforts by the financial industry to water down the bill, he said the main principles behind it were not at risk.

"I've always put this in terms of some core principles," Summers said.

If an institution is big enough and interconnected enough that its failure could damage the financial system, then it must have a regulator that is accountable, he said. "And there has to be a plan in place for managing your failure if it comes."

Summers said the proposals under consideration achieve that goal.

TAXPAYERS FIRST

The administration is also committed to fundamentally reforming pay, starting at the firms that have received multiple government bailouts, Summers said.

"It is important where taxpayers have made a central contribution to make sure that taxpayer interests are being put first rather than those of shareholders and certainly rather than those of incumbent management and that's why Ken Feinberg is involved in reviewing compensation levels at the companies where the TARP has made the most major investments."

Officials have also proposed a broad crackdown on pay, including giving shareholders more say on compensation packages, forcing firms to disclose more on their pay practices and encouraging regulators to shut down risky compensation schemes.

"With respect to companies that are not currently recipients of major support, the focus is really going to be more on process and more on the incentives they create," Summers said.

Amid the rhetoric of a strong clampdown on compensation that encourages risk taking, the administration has been careful to say it does not believe in setting explicit caps.

Summers said the administration is sensitive to the need for firms to keep top talent and remain competitive, while not letting Wall Street return to its old ways.

"We are concerned that some in the financial sector would like to go back to the regulatory nonculture and risk management nonculture of the recent past. That wouldn't be acceptable to us," he said. "But the president's always said that we think it's very important that people succeed in America so framing this in terms of the goal being to reduce profits or to eliminate compensation, that would not be our approach."

UK BANK GOVERNOR CALLS FOR LENDERS' BREAK-UP

(By Chris Giles)

Banks should be split into separate utility companies and risky ventures, governor of the Bank of England Mervyn King urged last night, saying it was a "delusion" to think tougher regulation would prevent future financial crises.

Mr. King's call for a break-up of banks to prevent them becoming "too important to fail" puts him sharply at odds with the direction of domestic and international banking reform.

Mr. King borrowed Churchillian language in a speech in Scotland to highlight the burden banks had placed on taxpayers. "Never in the field of financial endeavour has so much money been owed by so few to so many. And, one might add, so far with little real reform."

The forcefulness of Mr King's language reflects his belief that the structure of the banks needs to be put firmly on the international regulatory agenda, where focus has been on strengthening capital and regulating bankers' pay. The Bank governor wants to see the utility aspects of banking—payment systems and deposit taking—hived off from more speculative ventures such as proprietary trading. "There are those who claim that such proposals are impractical. It is hard to see why," he said.

Although he said ideas to force banks to hold debt that automatically turns into equity in a crisis were "worth a try", he downplayed their likely effect. "The belief that appropriate regulation can ensure that speculative activities do not result in failures is a delusion."

Many experts believe the governor will get his way on separation but by default rather than by design, because proposals for tighter capital regulations on risky parts of banking will make these unprofitable and banks will choose to ditch them.

U.S.-COLOMBIA FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to reaffirm my long-standing support for the Colombian people, the Colombian-American community in south Florida, and to urge my colleagues to approve the U.S.-Colombia Free Trade Agreement as soon as possible.

Colombia is one of our strongest allies in the fight against extremism and drug trafficking, not only in our hemisphere, but around the world.

When I was first elected, Colombia was under siege. Leftist rebel groups and drug cartels such as the FARC and the Medellin and Cali Cartels had taken over large areas of that country. Colombians were prisoners in their own land, fearful for their lives, and watching their country descend further into chaos and darkness. Now, however, after many years of bravery and sacrifice, the Colombian people and its government have taken back their country, and each year Colombia becomes more secure and more prosperous. Colombians have continued to do so despite the unrelenting attack and assault by known FARC sympathizers and supporters of Hugo Chavez and Fidel Castro to derail Colombia's progress. Well, the government and the people in Colombia have persevered.

At a time when U.S. interests throughout the hemisphere are under attack, Colombia has remained a steadfast ally, an indispensable partner in ensuring our security and freedom in the region. The pending U.S.-Colombia Defense Cooperation Agreement will further strengthen that alliance and will serve as a major boost to our joint efforts to fight narcotraffickers and leftist rebels.

In discussing this agreement last month, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton highlighted, "This agreement ensures that appropriate protections are in place for our servicemembers. It will allow us to continue working together to meet the challenges posed by narcotraffickers, terrorists, and other illegal armed groups in Colombia."

Together, the U.S. and Colombia have had enormous success in battling those groups, but much more remains to be done. This agreement will ensure that we are fully equipped to do so.

The United States and Colombia also share growing economic ties. The U.S. is the largest source of foreign investment in Colombia, which has quadrupled over the past 7 years. My own district in Miami, Florida, had nearly $6 billion in total trade with Colombia in 1 year alone.

Colombia is Miami's number one trading partner in volume and second leading international market. But although U.S.-Colombian economic ties are strong, we have only just begun to tap their potential. That will require passage of the U.S.-Colombia Free Trade Agreement.

Unfortunately, the free trade agreement has been in limbo for 3 years, largely because of partisan opposition. But opponents fail to understand that the primary purpose of this trade pact is to eliminate Colombia's barriers to U.S. goods. Colombia would immediately eliminate a majority of its tariffs on U.S. exports, with all remaining tariffs eventually phasing out gradually. More exports means more sales, which means more jobs here in the U.S. The benefits would be felt immediately.

The U.S. International Trade Commission estimates that U.S. exports to Colombia would quickly increase by over $1 billion, and that's not even counting a major increase in service-related exports.

Given today's difficult economic climate, with so many hardworking Americans striving to make ends meet, it is unbelievable that Congress continues to refuse to take the simple step to expand trade and create jobs in this country.

But there is more at stake, Mr. Speaker. By strengthening Colombia's ability to fight drug traffickers and fight leftist guerrillas, and by demonstrating that the U.S. will stand by its loyal ally, passage of this trade agreement will advance U.S. security and economic interests not only in that country, but throughout the hemisphere. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to approve the U.S.-Colombia Free Trade Agreement and to do so as soon as possible.

Again, I would like to commend the people of Colombia for their remarkable progress that they have achieved and express my ongoing support for the strong ties between our countries. We are blessed in south Florida to have a wonderful, robust, patriotic, American-loving, Colombian-American community. They have, indeed, enriched our area.

DEMOCRATS' PLANS TO REFORM HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. GARRETT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about the Democrats' plans to "reform" our health care system.

You know, many promises have been made by the other side of the aisle about what these reforms would actually do, but now we actually have a definitive analysis, performed by the chief government actuary of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, to look at the consequences of these reforms. Well, Mr. Speaker, the diagnosis is not that good.

Both the President and his economic advisors have said that whatever bill the President signs he wants to make sure that he bends the cost curve. Well, how does the Democrat health care stack up to that pledge?

According to that chief actuary whom I just mentioned, total spending on health care would actually increase by $750 billion more than if we did nothing at all. That's right. The Democrats' plan would bend the cost curve all right, but it would bend it in the wrong direction. You see, the real overall cost of this bill would be $1.2 trillion. That's with a T. By 2019, the annual cost of the entitlement expansion would be $236 billion, and that would be rising at an annual rate of 9 percent every year. After all of this spending, there would still be around 20-some-odd million uninsured Americans. So, for those folks who are trying to keep score of all of this, that comes out to be about $35,000 per uninsured person out there.

Now, another promise that the President made was that he said, "if you like your current coverage, you keep it." Well, again, look back to that government actuary whom we talked about before. According to that chief actuary, that's not true if you're a senior on Medicare, because 8.5 million seniors on Medicare today would lose their current coverage, and they would be forced into some different coverage.

Also contained in the bill are what we call arbitrary, across-the-board payment cuts to hospitals, to nursing homes and to home health agencies. Again, let's see what the chief actuary says. The chief actuary says the cuts could force such organizations, such as nursing homes and home health agencies, to leave the Medicare program and, thus, “possibly jeopardizing access to care for beneficiaries.” That doesn’t really sound like keeping the coverage you want, does it?

So maybe now, finally, the Democrat leadership in Congress will start to listen to at least a few of the ideas put forward by the Republicans. What we want to do is try to increase the access to health care coverage, to increase access to the health care delivery system and to make insurance more portable and affordable. What we want to do is try to reduce those long-term spending plans and to reduce the curve downward in order to bring down the cost of medical liability and to create a sustainable health care system.

Finally, at the end of the day, Republicans stand today, as we have always in the past, ready to work with the Democrats to enact real reform to our health care delivery system as soon as they are ready to work with us.

UNCLE SAM IS GOING BROKE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, this is a poster of Uncle Sam going broke. America is going broke, and we are taking away the future economic security of our children, grandchildren and of everyone listening.

The national debt is racing toward $12 trillion, and it is growing at rates that haven’t been matched since World War II. It will double over the next 10 years.

Maya MacGuineas, president of the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget, hit the nail on the head in this week’s National Journal when she said, “It’s like fiscal jenga, where people are piling on more and more debt, and finally, something’s going to be the cause of it collapsing, but no one believes their thing is going to be the tipping point.”

Why is this Congress, Mr. Speaker, willing to keep piling on the debt? Why are we turning a blind eye toward our children and grandchildren?

The FY 2009 fiscal year ending September 30 registered a $1.4 trillion deficit, leaving red ink as far as the eye can see, and leaving trillion dollar deficits as far as the eye can see. Medicare and Social Security add up to a massive $57 trillion in promises Uncle Sam has made but can’t keep.

Make no mistake. Unsustainable spending has far-reaching implications for the United States. It touches every sector from health care to job creation, and it gives the foreign investors who hold America’s debt more control.

What is this administration doing? Is Congress prepared to let America sink? How can this Congress stand by record joblessness that is almost reaching 10 percent? Does Congress care?

Our manufacturing base is crumbling. The state of the dollar is falling. Foreign lenders own nearly 40 percent of our domestic economy, and China and Saudi Arabia have now become our bankers. If lawmakers in this body were serious about the debt and about the deficit issues that Americans are increasingly worried about, Congress would have an honest conversation and would do something about it.

In June of 2006, they stood in the same place, and spoke about the introduction of a bill called the SAFE Commission Act. They explained that the country is having trouble. It’s a bipartisan commission, and it puts every spending program on. It comes back and requires—it requires, Mr. Speaker—that Congress vote up or down. In a bipartisan manner, Congressman COOPER and I have had this bill in now for 3 years.

I have little faith that this Congress will act through regular order and will tackle this enormous, growing problem. It will take this approach: Instead of dealing with these issues, Congress will ignore them.

In closing, it reminds me of the Simon and Garfunkel song, which they sang in Central Park, called “The Boxer.” It says: Man hears what he wants to hear, and disregards the rest. I would change the words to say: Congress hears only what it wants to hear, and disregards the rest.

Therefore, this Congress is allowing Uncle Sam to go broke. It is time for us to deal with it in a bipartisan way for the good of our children, for the good of our grandchildren and for the good of everyone who lives in this country.

MOVING GUANTANAMO DETAINEES TO U.S. SOIL AND CONGRESSIONAL TRANSPARENCY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I thank the Speaker for the recognition.

Yesterday was a very interesting day in an open hearing in the Intelligence Committee. It’s something that doesn’t happen very often. We had the opportunity to hear from a small business person from Standish, Michigan—Dave Munson. The hearing was about congressional notification.

When is it the requirement of the executive branch, of the President and of the executive agencies, to fully brief Congress in a timely manner on the actions that they are taking?

The law is fairly clear. Congress needs to be fully and currently informed of intelligence matters.

So why would David Munson, a small business man from a small town in northern Michigan, be testifying in front of the Intelligence Committee?

David Munson is asking that this Congress, that the Michigan legislature, that the city council in Standish, and that the citizens of Standish, Michigan be fully and completely informed and be on a timely basis informed on what this administration’s policies are for moving Guantanamo prisoners to the United States.

On January 22, the President made a statement that he now is finding is very, very difficult to finish. He promised that, within 12 months, the prison in Guantanamo would be closed and that the Gitmo detainees would be moved somewhere else, either overseas or perhaps to the United States. Many of us who have been working on this issue for years recognized how ill-advised the President’s statement could be.

President Bush had said that he wanted Guantanamo closed, and as he started taking a look at how he would make it happen, he found out it was very, very difficult to do. He diminished the number of detainees in Gitmo, but he wasn’t able to close it completely. President Obama, really with no analysis, said he would close it in 12 months. He has now found out how difficult that is.

Other countries don’t want to take these detainees. They don’t want to take them into their countries. We don’t want them in the United States. As soon as they move from Cuba to the United States, they get a whole new set of legal rights and legal authorities. So why would we want to do that for some of the most dangerous people in the world? Yet the President seems committed to moving these people to the United States.

One of the sites that he is supposedly investigating, or that the Department of Defense and the Department of Justice are considering, is a closed corrections facility in Standish, Michigan. The Department of Defense has been there. Mr. Munson believes that some of the elected officials in the community are having ongoing discussions with the Department of Defense about moving these detainees, these prisoners, to the State of Michigan even though the community is opposed.

Just like most of Michigan, this is a community that is hurting. We’ve got a 15.3 percent unemployment rate—the highest unemployment rate in the country, so we need an economic stimulus; but what the people of that community have said is we don’t need an al Qaeda stimulus in our community. If the President is considering moving these prisoners to Michigan, what they do want is transparency. They would like to know exactly what the status of the negotiations is.

Are there negotiations actually taking place? If there are, then they’d like to know: What’s the impact on our community going to be? They'd like to have a better understanding.

As Mr. Munson said yesterday, exactly who are these individuals we're considering moving into our community? What are their backgrounds? Why are they being held in Gitmo? Why have we detained them for years? He would also like to know, as would other people in the community, if we've held these people in Gitmo for a number of years, what have we learned while we have held these people in detention? What kinds of risks and challenges might they pose to the people who are guarding them and to the community where they are housed? What has been our experience in holding al Qaeda and radical jihadists in prisons around the world? Have there been attempted prison breaks? Have there been attempted prison entries where people outside have targeted the communities where these facilities are held?

These are the kinds of questions that the people in Standish, Michigan and the people of Michigan want answers to. The people in Standish have asked for that information. The Michigan legislature has asked for transparency. I have asked for transparency as the ranking member of the Intelligence Committee, but consistently, Secretary Gates and the Obama administration have replied with stone silence. They are totally unwilling to share any information with elected officials or with the citizens of Standish about what their plans and intentions may or may not be.

For an administration that said we are going to be transparent, to have a hearing in the Intelligence Committee where we're saying we want to talk about transparency and about what some would say is a lack of transparency by the previous administration and now by this administration and about keeping Congress fully and completely informed on a timely basis, it was the perfect hearing in which to have that discussion.

What David Munson clearly articulated is that people in Michigan and people in Standish are concerned, and they want answers. This administration has been unwilling to keep the citizens of Standish informed on this issue. It is disappointing. This is a community that is concerned about their economic future. They are concerned about the character of their community. They are concerned about the future. With the closing of the corrections facility in Standish recently, the city faces some very, very tough economic times. The community faces tough economic times. A lot of people have lost their jobs because of the decisions that have been made by the State of Michigan.

So they're trying to wrestle, and they're trying to deal with those issues, but the thing that they realize is that, as they move forward and as they look toward the future as to how they're going to fill it, they would just like some information. They would like some information and some transparency from this administration, and they're disappointed that they're not getting it.

Today, again, we reiterate the request to the Department of Defense, to the Department of Justice and to the Obama administration: Please, please be more transparent in what your plans and intentions are for the Gitmo detainees because there are two debates. There are many of us who believe that even considering moving the Gitmo detainees to U.S. soil is a genuinely bad idea.

Let's have that debate. Let's have that debate first, and then if somehow at the conclusion of that debate there are still people who believe that moving these individuals to the United States is a good idea, then let's be fully transparent as to the ramifications, the risks, and the implications to local communities.

What we have seen so far is that the Obama administration is totally unwilling to engage in the first debate as to why and what the benefits are to closing Gitmo and moving those prisoners to the United States. Now they have moved directly to the second, without any consideration or any dialogue on the first, and now they are doing the second one in total secrecy.

It is time to change that process. I think it is time to go back to the beginning of this process and reconsider that first decision that says we are going to close Gitmo. Then I think what we will find out is this second discussion may not even be needed.

PROVIDING HEALTH INSURANCE TO EVERY AMERICAN

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I want to just change the topic now to how to insure every American on health care.

A colleague of mine wrote an op-ed that was published in the Wall Street Journal recently that said there are different ways to ensure that every American has access to health insurance. People say, do Republicans have a plan? Of course we have plans. We have had plans for a number of years on ways to address the health crisis or the problems that we face in health care and with health insurance in America today. We were very, very clear that there is a plan that can do that. We also identified what some of the problems may be.

If you take a look at why we have some of the issues, go to your local hospitals. Go to your local doctors. Ask them, when someone comes in with government health care, Medicare or Medicaid, how are you reimbursed for the expenses that you incur? And what they will typically tell you is, well, if someone comes in with a Medicaid card, for every dollar of expenses that we incur, we receive about 40 cents of reimbursement. If they come in as a Medicare patient, they will say, well, that is a little bit better. We get paid at about 60 cents for every dollar of expenses we incur.

You ask, why is the private sector being squeezed and why do you see the insurance rates in the private sector going up? It is because the government programs are terrible payers and the cost has to be borne by the private sector.

There are really five types of patients that will walk into a health care facility: those that are on Medicaid; those that are on Medicare; those that have private insurance; the fourth would be those that have no insurance, they are going to pay out of their pocket; and then the last would be uncompensated care, people that go into an emergency room or go into a doctor's office, they are sick, they are going to get the care, but they have no way to pay for the care that they are going to receive.

All of those, everything except the private insurance plans, they are all squeezing private insurance, and that is what is forcing private insurance plans to escalate their costs and their premiums very quickly. Think about what would happen if the government programs actually paid $1 of reimbursement for $1 of care given.

The other thing that we find is that our Tax Code incentivizes employer-provided health care, rewards health insurance companies by insulating them from accountability, and punishes those that lack employer-provided care. If individuals want to go out and buy health insurance for themselves, the Tax Code penalizes them, versus their neighbor who may be getting it from their employer. We need to fix this.

But the bottom line that we come to in terms of insurance and making sure that every American has access to insurance is to empower patients and to give them more choice. We are going to talk a little bit about the alternative plans that are out there in just a minute. But our focus is driving towards patient choice, patient affordability, providing the mechanisms in the Tax Code and through tax credits or subsidies to enable individuals to go out and access health care, rather than having the government-run health care.

It is a very, very different model between the two parties, one of which says we are going to empower individuals and give them access and they are going to keep the authority and the responsibility and the accountability and the opportunity to go out and buy their own health care, ensuring that they keep that power and that control.

We are not empowering anybody. That is a word that we use all too often here, that we are “empowering.” No. Individuals already have that authority. The Constitution protects those kinds of individual rights and individual freedoms. They are not getting that from this Congress. They are getting that because that is what the Founding Fathers gave to them. Now what we want to do is create a framework so they are better able to use that power and have access to health care.

On this side of the aisle—and you saw it more recently with the passage of the Baucus bill out of committee over on the Senate side as well as in the bills that have come out in the House side—what do we see? What we see is, rather than individuals having the power, it is this body and Congress taking the power from individuals and taking it into this body and then giving it to Federal bureaucracies. And we know what happens when those decisions move from individuals to Washington.

As a matter of fact, there was an op-ed written in the Investor Business Daily, again written by Congressman SHADEGG and myself, and the title of that op-ed, as they put it on, we did not, but it says “Lies, Earmarks and Corruption All in One Bill.” You kind of take a look at it and say, that is a pretty harsh indictment of a piece of legislation moving its way through Congress. Let me tell you where John and I see some of the evidence of this.

People talk about this legislation and they say, well, it reduces the deficit by $70 billion or $80 billion over the first 10 years. And you look at it and say, yes, as my colleague before said, it is time for us to address the deficit. You say, yes, we are excited about that.

But then you peel back the layers and you say, but how does it do that? We have got this massive expansion of health care to more Americans and these types of things. How do we do that and save money? As you peel back the layers, it says, yes, the taxes start day one when this bill goes into effect, but the benefits or the expansion of health care really doesn't start until year 3 or 4. So we have got 10 years of taxes and only 7 years or 6 years of health care.

Well, what happens when we have 10 years of health care and 10 years of taxes? Same old thing. We are back to massive new deficits. Is that a lie? I don't know. But it sure looks like Enron-style accounting. People in the private sector have gone to jail for similar types of accounting.

They also indicate that they are going to pay for this with $404 billion of cuts in Medicare and Medicaid. If there are those types of savings available in Medicare and Medicaid, let's do those right now. The reality is those types of savings aren't identified in Medicare and Medicaid. They never have been. As a matter of fact, the other body now is considering a doctor fix. They are not going to put it into this health care bill. Why? Because it is an increase of $250 billion of reimbursements to doctors. It is called the doc fix.

So rather than finding savings in Medicare and Medicaid, what they are identifying is massive new expenditures for Medicare and Medicaid; $133 billion in cuts to Medicare Advantage.

Earmarks. There are State earmarks. Think about it. There are people from different States in this auditorium and on the floor of the House. There are new massive mandates in here for Medicaid, expansion of Medicaid.

You say, well, let's apply those equally across all 50 States. The mandates go across all 50 States. In 46 of those States, the States have to pick up their share of the costs of these new mandates. In Michigan, it would normally mean we would pick up 40 percent of the cost of these new mandates. But, for some reason, four States are exempted. The Federal Government will pick up 100 percent of the expanded Medicaid costs. Michigan is one of those States. I say to the other 46 States, thank you, in this case, for subsidizing Michigan health care.

There is another feature in here, another earmark, where there are going to be new taxes for individuals who have golden health insurance plans. What is the earmark? You would think this new tax would apply equally to all 50 States. Wrong. Seventeen States are exempted and only phase into this program over a period of time. You say thank you to the other 33 States, because you are now subsidizing, in this case, 17 States who will not have new taxes imposed on them.

Those Senators, those Members of the House, maybe were more effective in negotiating and saying, I will only vote for this health care if you exempt us from the Medicaid, the new Medicaid fees, or if you exempt our State from the new taxes.

It hardly seems fair. It hardly seems to have much to do with the delivery of quality and quantity of health care. It seems to reflect more on who has power and who does not have power in the process of designing this new legislation.

There is a better way. As I have gone through and as some of my colleagues have gone through and said, you know, let's take a look at health care. At one of my first town meetings, someone said, PETE, I know you came out of the business world. Now, you came out of Herman Miller and you came out of a marketing background, but you were working for a Fortune 500 company, and because you worked in product development, you spent a lot of time working with engineers. Take a look at our health care system from an engineer's standpoint.

What an engineer would do is they would look at this thing systemically. They would identify where the problems were in the system, what parts of the system were broken and what parts of the system actually worked. Then they would focus in like a laser on fixing the parts of the system that were broken and leave the rest of the system working. That is kind of where we are with health care.

Eighty-five percent of Americans have health care. Surveys indicate that most of these folks are satisfied with the health care that they are getting, but they are also compassionate and saying we ought to take a look at fixing the parts of the system that right now are barriers to other Americans getting health care.

So the question is, why not focus on those? I have introduced and sponsored a series of bills that say, let's take a look at these seven targeted fixes for health care reform. They address the issues of cost, so that we have more competition. We have the tax credits and the cost subsidies, so every American will have the resources to go out and buy insurance. And they will also have an opportunity to have more choice, and there will be more competition, so that prices should come down.

In terms of access, we are also going there, because we are saying we do need to do something. It is inherently unfair that individuals who have a pre-existing condition find it difficult, if not impossible, to access health care in America. Let's make sure that we put in place a process in our insurance system that allows people that have pre-existing conditions to make sure that they are covered and that they also have the opportunity to have the confidence that if they get a different illness or they get a different health care problem, that they are covered and they can be covered for their pre-existing condition and other things that may happen to them.

Then we put in a bill that deals with tort reform. All of these bills could be implemented immediately, and in 3 years we would find out how much impact we have had. As a matter of fact, these things could be implemented right now. We would have 3 years of experience in improving our current health care system, and in 3 years we could say, how much have these programs and these bills improved health insurance and health quality and quantity in America? If they are working, we could say, okay, maybe we have to tweak them, we have to modify them a little bit.

But why the 3-year window? Remember that under the President's plan, the health care programs don't kick in for 3 years.

And at the rate that we're going, you wonder why 3 years. It also happens to be, means they'll kick in after the next election, so Americans who will lose their health insurance or will have to change their health insurance, they won't be hit with that reality until after the next Presidential election. Interesting timing.

But when we get to health care, there's a way to improve health care that says we're going to enable individuals, individual American citizens, to keep the power that they have to direct their health care, the choices that they have versus a plan that says we're going to have that choice and that opportunity and that freedom taken away from individuals and moved to the government and government bureaucracy where we see all the kinds of shenanigans that are going on in the current Senate bill and going on in the current House bills.

There is an alternative: Freedom versus massive government programs. And there are alternatives that go out and say, in a very targeted way, here's how we can address the issues and improve the access, the quality and the price of health care for every American and do it today, rather than waiting 3 years.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this gets to be a much more open process than what we have today, a much more open process than what we have had up until this point. It appears that some are driven and they've bought into the idea that government needs to run health care. That is fundamentally wrong because if we move in that direction, it means we will grow government and we will take freedom away from Americans. That is the wrong way to address this problem.

Let's bring Republicans and Democrats together, and let's focus on providing individuals the tools that they need to be able to go out and get the quality and the quantity of health care that they need and that they want.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IN HONOR OF BILL COSBY, WINNER OF THE MARK TWAIN PRIZE FOR HUMOR

HON. CHAKA FATTAH

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. FATTAH. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate a hometown hero and constituent of mine—the distinguished and very funny Philadelphian, William Henry Cosby, Jr.

Bill Cosby has been tickling the nation's funny-bone and prodding its conscience throughout his adult life. He has won a trophy room of honors, but none like this one. Bill Cosby's talents and his insight have earned him the 12th annual Mark Twain Prize for American Humor, awarded by the Kennedy Center on October 26, 2009. The star-studded and laugh-filled presentation will be shown on PBS nationally on Wednesday, November 4, always one of PBS's most popular and acclaimed programs.

Bill Cosby—aka Heathcliff Huxtable, friend of Fat Albert, “America's Dad”—is no stranger to the nation's viewers and comedy fans. Less well known, but looming large in terms of character and values, is the Bill Cosby who has served as role model, activist, educator, author, anti-violence crusader, fundraiser and valued citizen of his native Philadelphia.

Bill Cosby was born in the Germantown section of Philadelphia into a modest family that valued hard work—the son of a maid and a Navy cook. He was raised in the Richard Allen Projects, attending Channing Wister Elementary, Fitzsimons Junior High, Central and Germantown High Schools, playing various roles as class clown, class president, star athlete, shoe repair apprentice, produce seller, and ultimately Navy hospital corpsman.

As a young adult he began a lifetime relationship with Philadelphia's premier public institution of higher learning, Temple University. Building on his high school equivalency diploma, earned through correspondence courses, he enrolled in Temple in 1961 on a track and field scholarship, also playing full-back. Cosby, telling jokes as he earned a living, interrupted his studies to pursue show business, returned to academia and ultimately received a bachelor's degree from Temple.

Eventually Bill Cosby would become Doctor Cosby. He earned a masters and a doctorate from the University of Massachusetts, a springboard to his later involvement in advocating for educational opportunity. But Bill Cosby, proud alum, has never left the Temple family, happily donning the cherry and white for football and basketball games, cheering on the Owls during and after the tenure of his close friend, Coach John Chaney.

Cheerleading isn't all Bill Cosby has done for Temple. He has endowed scholarships (including one for graduates of Philadelphia schools he attended), established a lecture series, generated the University's Cosby Scholarship Committee of the Provost's office, appeared at numerous fundraisers and alumni functions, and served as the public face for Temple on countless occasions.

Another side of the Bill Cosby Philadelphia Story is his anti-violence work. I have marched with Bill Cosby and my friend Bilal Qayyum through the streets of our city beneath the banner of Men United for a Better Philadelphia to denounce the scourge of violence, murder and gang activity. He has been outspoken—and raised considerable controversy—in denouncing the gang-minded culture and the negative, hateful cultural influences that fan street violence among our youth. He aimed his toughest words at parents, calling on them to step up and take responsibility for their children's education, safety and values.

Education has been another Cosby cause. He and I share the passion for leveling the playing field, providing every child the resources, the quality teachers and the full opportunity to achieve his or her dreams. Earlier this year he donned a T-shirt from Central High School to stand with Governor Ed Rendell and advocate for fairer school funding.

In his famous 2004 “Pound Cake Speech” Bill Cosby raised some hackles by telling African American parents they need to do a better job teaching their children morals at home. He chided those who “had forgotten the sacrifices of those in the civil rights movement” and declared that many young African Americans put too much emphasis on sports, fashion, and acting tough in the streets.

The controversies raised by Bill Cosby still ripple through communities of color, but the points he raises are valid. And of course he has never lost his sense of humor. In all these ways, Bill Cosby is a worthy recipient of the Mark Twain Prize and the legacy of Mark Twain himself.

I urge my colleagues in the House to join me in congratulating and thanking Bill Cosby, Philadelphian and American, upon this great occasion.

HONORING THE 125TH ANNIVERSARY OF BENSENVILLE, ILLINOIS

HON. PETER J. ROSKAM

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. ROSKAM. Madam Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 125th Anniversary of the incorporation of Bensenville, Illinois, in the heart of my Congressional District.

In 1884, the Village of Bensenville was incorporated, and George Cogswell became its first President.

In the years since its humble founding, Bensenville has become a center of culture and commerce, serving as a home to businesses, professionals, churches and organizations that have made this a vibrant and thriving community. Over the years, Bensenville has developed a well-deserved reputation as an enjoyable place to live, work and raise a family.

On the occasion of this 125th Anniversary, we join together to celebrate Bensenville's legacy of growth and prosperity, and to look ahead to the opportunities facing our local community and our nation. Today both marks 125 years of working together to build a brighter future, and reminds us that our work continues.

Madam Speaker and Distinguished Colleagues, please join me in recognizing Bensenville Village President Frank Soto, the Village Board of Trustees and the citizens of Bensenville in wishing them happiness on this special occasion.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. GEOFF DAVIS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. DAVIS of Kentucky. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information regarding earmarks I secured as part of H.R. 3183, the Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2010.

Requesting Member: Congressman GEOFF DAVIS

Bill Number: H.R. 3183

Account: Corps of Engineers—Investigations

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: U.S. Army Corps of Engineers—Huntington District

Address of Requesting Entity: 502 Eighth Street, Huntington, WV 25701

Description of Request: Appropriate $1,793,000 for the Ohio River Basin Comprehensive Study, WV, KY, OH, PA, IL, VA, AL, TN, NY, MD, NC, MS & GA. Funds will help to complete the Reconnaissance Report and initiate the Feasibility Report. This project is an important use of taxpayer dollars because it is the first step in the development of a comprehensive analysis and strategy for the administration and management of the Ohio River Basin system. The project will eventually identify and document stakeholders and their needs for water resources products and services that are now or could be generated by the current system and will determine the current condition of the system infrastructure.

HONORING THE LIFE AND SERVICE OF JOE MASELLIHON. STEVE SCALISE

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. SCALISE. Madam Speaker, I rise today with a heavy heart to honor my friend Joe Maselli, the son of Italian immigrants who passed away on October 18, 2009. Joe Maselli was a proud New Orleanian for over 60 years. He may best be known as a proud and tireless advocate for the preservation of Italian heritage and culture, and a devoted family man.

Joe Maselli earned his Bachelor of Arts degree from Tulane University and served for three years in the U.S. Army.

Joe devoted much of his life to the celebration of the Italian cultural contribution to America. He helped create the Italian Village at the 1984 Worlds Fair in New Orleans, and founded the American-Italian Renaissance Foundation, as well as the American-Italian Sports Hall of Fame, which awards scholarships to up and coming athletes and scholars.

Joe was an Ethnic Affairs Advisor to Presidents Ford, Carter, and Reagan. In 1992, the Governor of Louisiana chose him to chair the Louisiana Quincentenary Commission honoring Louisiana's 500th Anniversary.

Even with all of Joe's accomplishments, he always put his family first. Joe is survived by his wife of 63 years, Antoinette Cammarata, their four children, and eight grandchildren, which I know he considered his greatest accomplishments.

I extend my sincere condolences to the Maselli family and will work to ensure that the distinguished legacy of my friend Joe Maselli is not forgotten by future generations.

COLUMN: NET NEUTRALITY ISN'T A NEUTRAL TERM, AND IT ISN'T
GOOD FOR THE NETHON. JOHN SHIMKUS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. SHIMKUS. Madam Speaker, I submit the following column, written by David Nicklaus of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

NET NEUTRALITY ISN'T A NEUTRAL TERM, AND IT ISN'T GOOD FOR THE NET

David Nicklaus, St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Some beats, like banking, need tougher cops, but others, like the Internet, are doing fine with no cop at all.

So when the chairman of the Federal Communications Commission weighs in on an important Internet issue by vowing to become "a smart cop on the beat," we should worry that the Web's best years, characterized by rapid growth with little regulation, may be behind it.

Of course, FCC Chairman Julius Genachowski doesn't characterize his stance that way. His idea of a "smart cop" is one who enforces the principle that all Internet traffic should be treated equally. And he argues that his brand of policing will encourage innovation, not stifle it.

The principle Genachowski endorsed this week—and one he intends to codify into FCC regulations—is referred to as net neutrality. Despite the lofty-sounding name, however, a net neutrality rule wouldn't be neutral. It would amount to favoring one group of Internet companies, the content creators, in an ongoing turf battle with broadband providers.

Broadband firms, like AT&T, Verizon and the cable TV industry, own the Internet's infrastructure. Companies like Google and eBay own the content that travels over those broadband networks.

These two groups obviously need each other, but that doesn't mean they have to like each other.

A net neutrality rule would require broadband providers to treat all content alike in terms of pricing and access. Without it, content companies worry they might face an extra fee for speedy delivery of bandwidth-gobbling applications, like video downloading sites or Internet telephone services.

Say Microsoft, for example, paid the fee, but Google didn't. Microsoft's site would get an unfair advantage, the net neutrality advocates argue, allowing the Verizons of the world to pick winners and losers—and perhaps to snuff out competitors of their own video and phone businesses.

The broadband companies counter that they have invested huge sums in Internet infrastructure, including $70 billion last year alone. They generally don't use discriminatory pricing now, but some people in the industry think it would be one way to pay for a next-generation network that could carry far more data at faster speeds.

If those investments aren't made, the information superhighway will eventually look like I-70 at rush hour, with video file-sharers slowing things down for the folks who just want to read e-mail or check an airline schedule.

Scott Cleland, a consultant who runs the broadband-industry-backed site NetCompetition.org, says a strict net neutrality regime would discourage infrastructure investment and make the Internet less secure. If the network owners can't discriminate among forms of content, he argues, they would lose their ability to root out viruses and other malware.

Cleland may be overstating the security argument. Any reasonable FCC regulation would surely allow the broadband companies to police their networks for harmful files. His larger point, though, is a good one: Why risk messing up something that isn't broken?

Existing antitrust law should prevent, say, AT&T from discriminating against an Internet-phone competitor like Skype. Beyond such an obvious abuse, it's hard to see what harm can come from letting the broadband firms price their network however they want.

It's often said that on the Internet, information wants to be free. That four-letter word has two meanings—free as in zero cost, and free as in unregulated and unrestricted—and they are at odds in this debate.

If we impose regulations just to keep down the cost of certain services, we may find that we've lost the very freedom that makes the Internet so successful and so valuable.

CELEBRATING THE 100TH ANNI-VERSARY OF STS. CONSTANTINE
& HELEN GREEK ORTHODOX CHURCH IN PALOS HILLS, ILLI-NOISHON. DANIEL LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. LIPINSKI. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Sts. Constantine & Helen Greek Orthodox Church as they celebrate 100 years of community, faith and service. Throughout their history, the parishioners of Sts. Constantine & Helen Greek Orthodox Church have strived to embody their calling as members of the community of faith, and in doing so have served commendably as a pillar of the Palos Hills community.

Originally located on South Michigan Avenue in 1909, Sts. Constantine & Helen relocated in 1926 when a fire consumed the building, and then relocated to its new location on the corner of 111th Street and Roberts Road in Palos Hills with an opening ceremony in 1976.

Today, Sts. Constantine & Helen is as vibrant as ever under the faithful guidance of Rev. Nick Jonas, and the parish continues to serve the worship needs of over 400 families. The church is expecting some 1,200 participants at its centennial celebration on October 24, at which time Rev. Byron Papanikolaou will also mark his incredible 50th year with the congregation.

It is my honor to recognize Sts. Constantine & Helen Greek Orthodox Church on the occasion of its 100th anniversary. The parish has fulfilled a vision of a proud community that works together, learns together, and worships together. With its legacy of remarkable pastors and committed parishioners, the parish is truly deserving of this recognition.

HONORING THE FISHER HOUSE AND THE REPUBLICAN CLUB OF CENTRAL PASCO COUNTY, FLOR-IDAHON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the Republican Club of Central Pasco County for their support of the Fisher House at the James A. Haley Veterans' Hospital in Tampa, Florida.

Military families are the first line of support for our servicemen and women: they sit up at night waiting for their phone call and they send them comforts from home to sustain them while they fight for our freedom a half a world away.

Some families are called on to support and encourage their loved ones long after they've returned from the battles of war. For them, the Fisher House often becomes their "home away from home".

Since it opened its doors in 2007, the Fisher House in Tampa has hosted more than 1,200 people. The 16,000-square-foot house can accommodate up to 21 families at a time, and averages 35 guests per night. The average length of stay is two months, but two families have been there since the house opened.

Nationwide, the Fisher House program has made available nearly three million days of lodging since the program originated in 1990. They are operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs and rely on donations to the Fisher House Foundation so that no family has to pay to stay at any Fisher House.

The Republican Club of Central Pasco County, Florida, continually supports the Fisher House Foundation and our military men and women. This weekend, they will host the 2nd biennial event, "A Night for Heroes" in support of the Fisher House Foundation.

Madam Speaker, just as our military men and women believe it is their duty to serve our Nation; it is our duty to support them. The Republican Club of Central Pasco County has truly answered the call. On behalf of this Congress, I thank them for their unyielding commitment to this most important cause.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. DENNIS A. CARDOZA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. CARDOZA. Madam Speaker, I was unable to be present for several votes taken on the House floor yesterday afternoon, Thursday, October 22, 2009, due to illness. As a result, I missed rollcall votes No. 801 through No. 811. Had I been present: on rollcall vote No. 801 I would have voted "no"; on rollcall vote No. 802 I would have voted "aye"; on rollcall vote No. 803 I would have voted "aye"; on rollcall vote No. 804 I would have voted "aye"; on rollcall vote No. 805 I would have voted "aye"; on rollcall vote No. 806 I would have voted "aye"; on rollcall vote No. 807 I would have voted "aye"; on rollcall vote No. 808 I would have voted "aye"; on rollcall vote No. 809 I would have voted "aye"; on rollcall vote No. 810 I would have voted "aye"; and on rollcall vote No. 811 I would have voted "aye."

HONORING THE CITY OF INVERNESS, CITRUS COUNTY, FLORIDA

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the city of Inverness, Florida; they have been designated the "National City of the Year" by the veterans honor organization, the Forty & Eight.

Since 1920, the Forty & Eight organization has worked tirelessly to insure that the legacies of our service members endure alongside the freedom that they fought so selflessly to defend. They are committed to serving our veterans and their families: those who are still with us, those who have gone before us and those whose fate is still yet unknown.

John Kaiserian is the Grand Chef de Train of the Forty & Eight and a member of Voiture 1219 of Citrus County, Florida. He cited several factors which contributed to the City of Inverness receiving top honors on both the state and national level. Among them were the city's numerous parades and ceremonies honoring veterans, monuments that they have erected to honor those killed in combat, the annual Patriotic Evening on July 3rd and the City's very own Liberty Park. He refers to Inverness as Citrus County's "veterans' city".

On September 9, 2009, City Manager Frank DiGiovanni, City Clerk Debbie Davis and Mayor Bob Plaisted traveled to Rochester, New York to proudly accept the award on the city's behalf. They recognized the support of local residents and veterans' organizations that made the award possible. They especially thanked the veterans for all they have given to this country: City Manager, Frank DiGiovanni said, "Loss of life is the ultimate sacrifice and many have given all".

Madam Speaker, the Forty & Eight organization captures the American spirit in communities all across the country. I am honored and very proud to recognize Inverness, Florida as the Forty & Eight "National City of the Year".

HONORING THE SORGE FAMILY OF SORGE'S RESTAURANT IN CORNING, NY

HON. ERIC J.J. MASSA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. MASSA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor a landmark in New York's 29th Congressional District and its proprietors, the Sorge Family of Sorge's Restaurant. Renato and his brother Remo Sorge came to the United States from Italy in 1936 and through hard work and determination realized the American Dream.

On June 5, 1951, Renato and Loretta Sorge opened Sorge's Restaurant at 68 W. Market St. in Corning, NY and it quickly became an area favorite. From its humble beginnings with a counter and 11 booths, the restaurant eventually grew, and expanded to the adjacent building and a seating capacity of 225 persons. Offering quality food and a welcoming atmosphere, it is easy to see how the restaurant became a Corning institution.

A true family business, Renato's sons, Joseph and Michael, followed in their parents' footsteps working in the restaurant part-time while growing up. They both eventually pursued restaurant management degrees at Cornell and SUNY Cobleskill, respectfully. Upon graduation, Joseph and Michael returned to Corning to carry on the Sorge Family tradition of providing the finest Italian/American food, and quality service at reasonable prices.

An unfortunate fire in December 2008 burned the original Sorge Restaurant; yet, this setback has not dampened the Sorge's spirits. Instead it serves as a testament to the Sorge Family commitment to the District as they have chosen to stay and rebuild this community institution. The site is now recognized as an historic landmark.

As friends and family gather in Corning today to celebrate a new beginning at 68 W. Market St., it is my honor to recognize the Sorge Family and Sorge's Restaurant on behalf of the United States Congress.

HONORING THE FISHER HOUSE & THE REPUBLICAN CLUB OF WEST PASCO COUNTY, FLORIDA

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the Republican Club of West Pasco County for their support of the Fisher House at the James A. Haley Veterans' Hospital in Tampa, Florida.

Military families are the first line of support for our servicemen and women: They sit up at night waiting for their phone call and they send them comforts from home to sustain them while they fight for our freedom a half a world away.

Some families are called on to support and encourage their loved ones long after they've returned from the battles of war. For them, the Fisher House often becomes their "home away from home".

Since it opened its doors in 2007, the Fisher House in Tampa has hosted more than 1,200 people. The 16,000-square-foot house can accommodate up to 21 families at a time, and averages 35 guests per night. The average length of stay is two months, but two families have been there since the house opened.

Nationwide, the Fisher House program has made available nearly three million days of lodging since the program originated in 1990. They are operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs and rely on donations to the Fisher House Foundation so that no family has to pay to stay at any Fisher House.

The Republican Club of West Pasco County continually supports the Fisher House Foundation and our military men and women. This weekend, they will host the 2nd biennial event, "A Night For Heroes" in support of the Fisher House Foundation.

Madam Speaker, just as our military men and women believe it is their duty to serve our nation; it is our duty to support them. The Republican Club of West Pasco County has truly answered the call. On behalf of this Congress, I thank them for their unyielding commitment to this most important cause.

HONORING DR. HO LUONG TRAN

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. HONDA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. Ho Luong Tran, President and CEO of the Asian & Pacific Islander American Health Forum (APIAHF) on the occasion of her retirement from the Forum to pursue new advocacy opportunities.

Dr. Tran has spent 7 years working with sincere, focused dedication to build APIAHF into a leading policy. Dr. Tran has been leading innovative legislative, policy, and community initiatives with an outstanding ability to establish coalitions among the public, private and community sectors for more than 20 years.

Under Dr. Tran's leadership, APIAHF has partnered with the W.K. Kellogg Foundation on a groundbreaking initiative, Health Through Action, to provide local communities with funding, training, and technical assistance to address health issues and strengthen a national network of advocates to create a broader health movement. During her tenure as the President and CEO of APIAHF, Dr. Tran has helped create the Native Hawaiian & Pacific Islander Alliance and the National Council of API Physicians.

Furthermore, she led the development of a national policy blueprint for Asian American, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islander health and enhanced the organization's national presence and reach in Washington D.C.

She has worked in health care since earning her degree at the University of Saigon in 1972. Her family fled Vietnam as refugees in 1978, an experience which has shaped and deepened her commitment to the health of her community. I have worked with Dr. Tran and the APIAHF since I was elected to Congress. Her leadership and the excellent work of the Health Forum have enabled the Congressional Asian Pacific American Caucus, the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, and Congressional Black Caucus to help significantly positively impact health policy and the conversation around health disparities.

Her leadership has been critical in the fight for greater understanding of the challenges facing the Asian American and Pacific Islander communities. I know the APIAHF will carry on her legacy of excellence and thank her for her unfailing commitment to improving the health of all Americans.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BILL PASCRELL, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. PASCRELL. Madam Speaker, yesterday I missed the final three rollcall votes of the day. Unfortunately I missed these votes because I had to return to my district.

Had I been present I would have voted "yea" on rollcall vote No. 809, On Ordering the Previous Question—H. Res. 853—Providing for consideration of H.R. 3619, Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2010.

Had I been present I would have voted "yea" on rollcall vote No. 810, On Agreeing to the Resolution—H. Res. 853—Providing for consideration of H.R. 3619, Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2010.

Lastly, had I been present I would have voted "yea" on rollcall vote No. 811, On Motion to Suspend the Rules and Agree—H. Res. 836—Expressing support for Teen Read Week.

HONORING SANDOR KIRSCHKE

HON. MIKE QUIGLEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. QUIGLEY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in honor of Sandor Kirsche. Mr. Kirsche was born in Czechoslovakia in 1926 and arrived in Chicago after surviving Nazi persecution in concentration camps at both Auschwitz and Bundenwald. Sandor overcame his personal struggles, including the deaths of his brother and father, and dedicated his life to making the lives of Jewish Americans easier. To that end, he opened the first full-service kosher supermarket in the Chicago area and gave back to the community with a life's worth of charity and philanthropy.

In 1971, Sandor opened a kosher butcher shop, which initially lost money. But through his hard work, long hours, and perseverance, he expanded the store to include kosher fish and packaged goods. The existence of a kosher supermarket was invaluable to the Jewish community, who now had a place where people could purchase kosher goods. Today, the store is known as Hungarian Kosher Foods and is still family owned.

Anyone who met Sandor knew he was much more than a businessman, and understandably, everybody knew him. At his stores, he never just sold meats and canned goods. He was always ready with a smile and a story, and a piece of candy for his younger patrons. He kept up on issues in the community, history, politics, and spoke seven different languages. He fought tirelessly to bring his sisters to the United States, and after twenty years of never giving up, he was successful in bringing them here from Soviet Russia in 1972.

I am honored to recognize and remember Sandor Kirsche today. He exemplified family and community values even after overcoming great hardship. His uniquely American story is an example to not only the Chicago and Jewish communities, but to everyone who has ever faced long odds.

HONORING JACK E. ATCHISON, HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor an American Hero and Purple Heart recipient, Jack E. Atchison of Spring Hill, Florida. Wounded during an enemy attack in Vietnam, Sgt. Atchison's service to our nation will forever be remembered by this Congress.

Born in Oskaloosa, Iowa on March 11, 1934, Jack attended Park College in Missouri where he studied Hospital Administration. Following his schooling, he courageously served 21 years in our nation's military.

In December of 1965, Sgt. Atchison bravely participated in an attack to repel enemy forces from a strategic location. During the battle, a bomb exploded in close proximity to Mr. Atchison, causing shrapnel wounds to his legs. In a genuine act of valor, despite his injuries, Mr. Atchison remained with his fellow wounded soldiers, and prepared them for transport via helicopter back to Flagon Embassy Hospital. Fortunately none of the 17 wounded American soldiers perished from this attack. The professional skill and personal devotion displayed by Sgt. Atchison reflect his immense commitment and sacrifice.

In addition to his Purple Heart, Sgt. Atchison was awarded the Bronze Star Medal, the Air Medal, the Army Commendation Medal, the Good Conduct Medal Bronze Clasp with 5 Loops, the National Defense Service Medal with OLC, the Korean Service Medal, the Vietnam Service Medal, the United Nations Service Medal, the Republic of Vietnam Campaign Medal with Device 1960, the Honor Medal 2nd Class (Vietnam), the Parachutist Badge, and the Combat Medical Badge.

Following his service in the military Jack went on to a successful career as the President of the South Georgia Real Estate Association. Jack has been married to his wife, Virginia, for 56 years and they have 5 children, Jackie, Katie, Cindy, Jack Jr., and Donna.

Madam Speaker, it is an honor to recognize Jack E. Atchison. He is a beloved American hero. On behalf of a grateful nation, this Congress, his family and friends, I thank him for his service and sacrifice to our country.

RESOLUTION HONORING THE SERVICE AND ACHIEVEMENTS OF WOMEN OF THE ARMED SERVICES AND FEMALE VET- ERANS

HON. SUSAN A. DAVIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution honoring the service and achievements of women in the Armed Forces and female veterans.

Every time I visit military installations, both at home and abroad, I am constantly impressed by the tremendous job our service members are doing.

And I am always particularly struck by the essential and natural role our brave service-women play in so many parts of our Armed Services.

There are close to 350,000 American women currently serving in our Armed Forces.

And it's hard to believe they were only granted permanent status in the regular and Reserve Armed Forces in 1948—because women were certainly making their mark well before then.

Women have voluntarily served in every military conflict in our country's history since the Revolutionary War.

They have been on the frontlines as nurses, waterbearers, and even saboteurs.

For years, dedicated women had to disguise themselves as men in order to enlist in our military.

Today, that's not the case—our service-women play an increasingly important role in America's military forces, and our country is the better for it.

Women are flying helicopters and fighter aircrafts; they are saving lives as nurses and doctors; they are driving support vehicles and policing perimeters.

They do not seek special recognition, but I believe it is important to understand and recognize the additional burdens that are inherent in the many roles they play outside of work—as wives, mothers, and caretakers.

The resolution recognizes the sacrifices our servicewomen and their families make to keep our country safe.

As Chair of the House Armed Services Subcommittee on Military Personnel and Co-Chair of the Women's Caucus Task Force on Women in the Military and Veterans, I am privileged to honor the legacy of servicewomen in the past, the courage with which women serve today, and the enthusiasm of the young women who dream of serving this great nation in the future.

Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to introduce this resolution today.

TOM CONNELLY MARKS THIRTY YEARS AS EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF MASSACHUSETTS CHAPTER OF NAHRO

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Madam Speaker, on October 9th of this year, one of the leaders in increasing the supply of affordable housing in the State of Massachusetts, Tom Connelly, marked his 30th anniversary as the Executive Director of the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Association of Housing & Redevelopment Officials (MassNAHRO). I have benefitted enormously in my work on housing in the Committee on Financial Services from Mr. Connelly's good judgment, his broad and deep knowledge of all aspects of housing matters, and his passion for helping this become a fairer society.

NAHRO nationally has been a great partner for those of us trying to improve the housing situation for many in this country. One of the strong aspects of NAHRO's work is their continued recognition that for many low-income people, the answer for their housing needs is not homeownership but decent rental housing, and a failure to understand this is one of the contributing factors to the housing crisis that led to our current recession. NAHRO, MassNAHRO and Tom Connelly in particular have been supportive of appropriate efforts to promote homeownership, but they have also understood the importance for a very large number of low-income people of affordable rental housing, so they are not pushed into inappropriate home mortgages.

Madam Speaker, in his thirty years as Executive Director, Tom Connelly has set a high standard for organizational leadership and for housing policy. And I should add that among the contributions he has made to the field of housing is his daughter, Meredith, who works on housing matters for the Committee on Financial Services and carries on her father's tradition of doing excellent work for the housing needs of low-income people.

Madam Speaker, I submit this statement for the RECORD because I hope that people will look at the work that Tom Connelly has done and that it will serve as a model for those interested in helping with housing issues.

CONGRATULATING IVAN "IKE" ACKERMAN

HON. BRUCE L. BRALEY

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Ivan "Ike" Ackerman on his retirement as Mayor of the city of Waverly. At the end of the year, Ike Ackerman will be retiring after serving 12 years as Mayor.

Over the past 12 years, Mayor Ackerman has been a proven leader in moving the city of Waverly forward and bringing the community together. With Mayor Ackerman's command, the city of Waverly has seen successes from economic development to upgrading the city's wellness opportunities.

Waverly is one of northeast Iowa's fastest growing communities with a highly diversified economic base. Mayor Ackerman has focused on bringing new life to old Waverly through downtown revitalization, economic development and new recreational facilities.

During Mayor Ackerman's tenure the city of Waverly experienced the worst flooding the city had seen in decades. In June of 2008, the Cedar River reached a record high and 25 percent of the community was impacted by the dangerous waters. The city suffered millions of dollars in damages. With Mayor Ackerman's leadership the city is rebuilding, putting in place future mitigation plans, and revitalizing the community one day at a time.

With Mayor Ackerman's retirement we are losing years of institutional knowledge and a champion for the needs of Waverly residents. I am proud to represent Mayor Ackerman and the city of Waverly in Congress. I wish him the best in all his endeavors.

HONORING RICHARD H. BENNETT, PASCO, FLORIDA

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor an American hero and Purple Heart recipient, Mr. Richard H. Bennett of Shady Hills, FL. A proud member of our Nation's military during Vietnam, Mr. Bennett honorably defended the freedoms that all Americans hold dear.

Born on August 10, 1949 to Harry and Claire Bennett in Canandaigua, New York, Richard began his service to the Army in June of 1969. Shortly thereafter he was deployed to Vietnam where he fought courageously, putting his life on the line every day. During his tour he suffered shrapnel in his back on account of gunfire, wounds to his left arm and left leg due to an ambush firefight in the jungle, and was exposed to Agent Orange. Along with his Purple Heart Medal, Mr. Bennett is a recipient of the Vietnam Service Medal, the Republic of Vietnam Campaign Medal, the National Defense Service Medal, and the Combat Infantryman's Badge.

Following Mr. Bennett's service in the Army, he worked with "Somebody Loves You Ministries" helping the less fortunate improve their lives.

Madam Speaker, it is important to recognize Americans like Richard H. Bennett for their service to our Nation and for their commitment and sacrifices in battle. Our Nation, this Congress, and Mr. Bennett's family and friends, will always remember his bravery and dedication.

HONORING ELEANOR CAINES 100TH BIRTHDAY

HON. JOHN L. MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. MICA. Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to recognize the life of a wonderful American and personal friend, Eleanor Caines, as she celebrates her 100th Birthday.

I know that I join family and friends in extending our best wishes as she reaches this special life milestone.

It has been my privilege to know Eleanor for more than three decades as we attended Maitland's Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd.

Nearly always several pews in front of the Mica family, Eleanor has been one of the most faithful parishioners of the congregation.

Her special smile, warm greeting and positive glow have brightened both the day and the path of those she meets!

A native of Asheville, North Carolina, whose family hailed from Massachusetts, Eleanor honorably served in the WACS during World War II. She and her late husband, Basil, who passed in 1982, resided in Central Florida.

Active in Church and community affairs, the Boston University graduate has faithfully been a strong supporter of veterans and university alumni affairs.

It is wonderful people like Eleanor Caines who every day of their lives have worked and contributed to make this a great nation. I know that I join her niece and nephew, Charlotte and David Hunt, family and friends at Mayflower and fellow parishioners at the Church of the Good Shepherd in extending our best wishes to Eleanor Caines as she celebrates this special birthday. I know my colleagues also join in saying thank you to a special American, Eleanor Caines!

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. XAVIER BECERRA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. BECERRA. Madam Speaker, I was unavoidably detained yesterday and missed roll-call No. 804. If present, I would have voted "yea."

RECOGNIZING NEW YORK CITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION NO. 2166 IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 22 AND 658

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. RANGEL. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the Council of the city of New York's Resolution No. 2166, calling upon the U.S. House to pass H.R. 658—the Access to Postal Services Act. Thanks to our work in Congress, H.R. 22—the U.S. Postal Service Financial Relief Act, has passed the House and similar legislation has cleared the Senate. This great legislation assists the U.S. Postal Service with financial expenses and stops the unnecessary closure of neighborhood post offices, increasing community input as the Postal Service reorganizes its branches throughout the city of New York.

If we do not follow-up with the speedy passage of H.R. 658, the Postal Service will be forced to close over 700 locations throughout the United States, including 53 locations in New York city alone. In addition to the borough of Queens, Manhattan will be adversely affected with the closure of 25 locations, which includes my Harlem community.

In my own district, the Tejada Post Office was almost a victim to these closures. The well-regarded institution was named after a member of the 3rd Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment who was killed during combat operations in Baghdad, Iraq on April 11, 2003. He died at the tender age of 26. But thanks to the help of people like District Leader Maria Luna, City Councilman Robert Jackson and Assemblyman Denny Farrell and Adriano Espallat, as well as Councilmember-Elect Ydanis Rodriguez, Community Board 12, and the Northern Manhattan Improvement Corporation, a grass-roots coalition came together and demanded that it remain open.

We ought to work to make sure that nothing of the sort happens in communities across this great nation. Both these bills will assist people in staying connected with the world, while not hoisting greater financial burdens on New Yorkers or other Americans who rely on these nearby post offices. Senior citizens and low-income Americans would be most vulnerable to these shutdowns, and as Americans, we ought to look after the most vulnerable in our society. May the Congress work as quickly as it can to alleviate this problem and ensure that these post offices remain open.

RECOGNIZING THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF JONESBOROUGH VETERANS PARK

HON. DAVID P. ROE

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Madam Speaker, I am so proud to recognize and commend the town of Jonesborough and Washington County for its 10th year anniversary of the Jonesborough Veterans Park. In 1999, Washington County celebrated this park at the groundbreaking ceremony, and on Memorial Day of 2000, the Jonesborough Veterans' Park construction was completed.

Memorial Day of 2000 was extra special for veterans all throughout Washington County because of the Jonesborough Veterans Park.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced a Resolution, congratulating the Jonesborough Veterans Park for their 10th anniversary and for a decade of successful management and preservation of the park land. This will be a reminder that we in the First District are committed to honoring our veterans.

I want to thank the volunteers in Washington County who worked on this park and who remain dedicated to honoring our veterans.

CHAIRMAN SEUNG YOUN KIM'S MESSAGE OF SUPPORT TO THE PEOPLE OF AMERICAN SAMOA IN AFTERMATH OF DEVASTATING
TSUNAMI

HON. ENI F.H. FALEOMAVAEGA

OF AMERICAN SAMOA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Madam Speaker, I submit the following message of support from Seung Youn Kim, Chairman of the Hanwha Group, in response to the massive tsunami that struck American Samoa on Tuesday, September 29, 2009.

OCTOBER 1, 2009.

HON. ENI FALEOMAVAEGA,
Rayburn House Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FALEOMAVAEGA: I would like to offer my deepest condolences to you and the people of Samoa for the losses and sufferings caused by the natural disaster yesterday.

Everyone in my family was shocked by seeing the devastated sites of Pago Pago and Leone through the media. I am greatly concerned on the tragic news, not as a bystander but a personal friend of yours.

I can only imagine the grief that you must feel and the immensity of the tasks you face, but I also know that you are a man of undefeatable courage who will once again lead the way out from this disaster. It is slightly relieving to me that acts of courage and kindness surfaced and that the U.S. government and the international society take the matter seriously moving quickly in aiding the region.

I heard that you have already flown out to Samoa, and I only wish I could come to the area and join you in person to help. I am personally committed to supporting you, pondering over how I could help you on the efforts for the recovery of Samoa and its people.

Once again, my heart and thoughts are with you and the people of Samoa wishing safety and hope for all those who have been affected.

Truly yours,

SEUNG YOUN KIM.

RECOGNIZING BETH SHOLOM
AHAVAS ACHIM SYNAGOGUE

HON. MIKE QUIGLEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. QUIGLEY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Beth Sholom Ahavas Achim Synagogue in Chicago. On October 25, 2009, the congregation will celebrate its 50th anniversary with a special dinner and ceremony. I commend the entire congregation for its dedicated service to the Hollywood Park neighborhood and the surrounding communities. I would also like to recognize the contributions of Beth Sholom's spiritual leader, Rabbi Moshe Soloveichik. Rabbi Soloveichik is one of the most respected rabbis in the country and has been instrumental in the growth of Beth Sholom.

The Beth Sholom synagogue is a wonderful example of an active faith community whose members work to better themselves and those around them. The Orthodox Jewish faith is rich with tradition and an important part of both our diversity in Chicago and across the country. The congregation of Beth Sholom continues to enrich that tradition and pass it along to future generations.

The 50th anniversary celebration also honors an outstanding member of the congregation who passed away two years ago. Sandor Kirsche, a Holocaust survivor, opened Hungarian Kosher Foods, the first full-service kosher supermarket in the Chicago area, and was a member of Beth Sholom until his death. His service to the congregation and all of Chicago is greatly appreciated. Although he is missed, he will always be remembered.

I am honored to recognize Beth Sholom Ahavas Achim and Rabbi Soloveichik, and I am proud to have such active, thoughtful, and faithful men and women in my district.

CONGRATULATING TIM HURLEY

HON. BRUCE L. BRALEY

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Tim Hurley on his retirement as Mayor of the city of Waterloo. At the end of the year, Tim Hurley will be retiring after serving three terms as Mayor.

Over the past 6 years, Mayor Hurley has been a proven leader in moving the city of Waterloo forward and bringing the community together. With Mayor Hurley's command, the city of Waterloo has seen successes from economic development to upgrading the city's recreational opportunities.

Mayor Hurley has been focused on four key initiatives: economic development, improved financial health of city government, improved delivery of government services and an improved city image. These are no small tasks, but Mayor Hurley has managed to turn them into a reality.

During Mayor Hurley's tenure, the city of Waterloo experienced the worst flooding the city had seen in decades. In June of 2008, the Cedar River reached a record high of 25.39 ft, 13.39 ft above flood stage and the city suffered millions of dollars in damages. With Mayor Hurley's leadership the city is rebuilding, putting in place future mitigation plans, and revitalizing the community one day at a time.

With Mayor Hurley's retirement we are losing a chief advocate for the needs of Waterloo residents. I am proud to represent Mayor Hurley and the city of Waterloo in Congress. I wish him the best in all his endeavors.

HONORING PAULA WELENC AND THE TAMPA FISHER HOUSE

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 23, 2009

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Paula Welenc and the Fisher House at the James A. Haley Veterans' Hospital in Tampa, Florida.

Military families are the first line of support for our servicemen and women. Some families are called on to support and encourage their loved ones long after they've returned from the battles of war. For them, the Fisher House often becomes their "home away from home." At the Fisher House in Tampa, Florida, Paula Welenc is there to welcome them with open arms.

Paula is the manager of the Fisher House at the James A. Haley Veterans' Hospital in Tampa. She has been with the facility since it opened in July of 2007. A clinical social worker by profession, she spent twenty years on active duty in the United States Air Force. In 2004, after retiring from the Air Force, she and her family moved to Spring Hill, Florida where Paula was hired as the Department of Defense's Domestic Violence Victims Advocate at MacDill Air Force Base.

Paula's military and civilian backgrounds give her a unique understanding of the issues facing our military families who are dealing with the illness or injury of their loved one.

In a recent newspaper article about the Fisher House in Tampa, Paula remarked, "We strive so hard to have this calm, relaxing, very comfortable setting for them while they're going through what might well be one of the most traumatic things that has ever happened in their life."

Since it opened its doors, the Fisher House in Tampa has hosted more than 1,200 people. The 16,000-square-foot house can accommodate up to 21 families at a time, and averages 35 guests per night. The average length of stay is two months, but two families have been there since the house opened.

Nationwide, The Fisher House Program has made available nearly three million days of lodging since the program originated in 1990. They are operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs and rely on donations to the Fisher House Foundation so that no family has to pay to stay at any Fisher House.

Madam Speaker, just as our military men and women believe it is their duty to serve our Nation; it is our duty to support them. Paula has truly answered the call. On behalf of this Congress and the families that have benefited from this program, I thank her for her unyielding commitment to this most important cause.

SENATE—Monday, October 26, 2009

The Senate met at 2 p.m. and was called to order by the Honorable MARK R. WARNER, a Senator from the Commonwealth of Virginia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Gracious God, we confess our need of Your presence and Your help for the journey ahead. You have promised that You will never fail or forsake us, so we place our trust in You, come what may.

Today, show Your will to the Members of this body in the maze of paths their feet may take. Lead them through the perplexity of issues to reach Your desired destination. Meet them in the thorny questions they confront, through the encircling gloom of indecision, as You open their ears and hearts to hear and heed Your guidance. Lord, keep them from embarking upon a path that is less than Your best.

We pray in Your sovereign Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable MARK R. WARNER led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 26, 2009.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable MARK R. WARNER, a Senator from the Commonwealth of Virginia, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. WARNER thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following leader remarks, the Senate will turn to a period of morning business. Senators will be permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each. As announced earlier, there will be no rollcall votes today. The next vote will occur at about 2:15, Tuesday, October 27. That vote will be on the confirmation of the nomination of Irene Berger to be U.S. district judge for the Southern District of West Virginia. Upon disposition of the nomination, the Senate will immediately proceed to vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to H.R. 3548, the unemployment compensation extension. In addition to considering the unemployment bill this week, we hope to consider the Commerce-Justice-Science appropriations bill and the Military Construction appropriations bill. We also need to pass a continuing resolution before the end of the week because the current CR expires Saturday night. We also expect to pass the 6-month highway extension bill.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S. 1858

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I am told that S. 1858 is at the desk and is due for a second reading.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the bill by title for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1858) to require Senate candidates to file designations, statements, and reports in electronic form.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I object to any further proceedings with regard to this bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The bill will be placed on the calendar.

WALL STREET NARROW-MINDEDNESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the global economic crisis is very complicated. It was born of both brazen, unabashed abuses and elaborate schemes alike. It brought complex concepts such as “mortgage-backed securities” and “credit default swaps” and “derivatives trading” into our everyday vocabulary. Prior to this financial meltdown, rarely did we hear the words “mortgage-backed security,” “credit default swaps” or “derivative trading,” but now they are in every newspaper we read. They are all over the television, all over radio. But when we peel back all the layers of this crisis, its foundation is nothing more than a simple concept: greed. When we cut through to the root causes of why so many families are hurting and why so many businesses are suffering, the core elements are evident: Excess, irresponsibility, and reckless risks.

Wall Street ran wild, then it ran out of steam. Last year's emergency required an urgent dose of medicine, and we supplied it. Our entire national economy was on the brink. Our entire world economy was on the brink. Our swift action prevented a terrible situation from getting even worse. For the past year, we have continued to act in strong, sensible, and prudent ways. We taxpayers did what we needed to do to help keep the economy afloat and didn't ask much from Wall Street in return. We would have gladly accepted a simple “thank you.”

So one can understand America's disgust upon realizing in recent days that Wall Street has ignored the lessons of last year. Reckless Wall Street traders continue to write themselves checks for billions of dollars—much of it our dollars. The Wall Street Journal found that major banks and securities firms are going to pay their employees $140 billion this year. That is a record high, and 20 percent more than last year. But the greed is evident not only in salaries; it is in bonuses and other benefits also. The Washington Post reported that the Nation's biggest financial firms, including the firms that took nearly half the emergency TARP money, are actually increasing the perks they are handing out to their employees this year.

Here is what is happening on Wall Street today: CEOs are giving their traders huge incentives—usually cash bonuses—to swing for the fences and make deals that put their entire firms and the larger system at risk. That is the height of irresponsibility. It is the height of arrogance. Risky bets on exotic securities are precisely what sparked the financial crisis and fueled the housing crisis. These events devastated Nevada and many other States.

But that same carelessness continues, I am sad to say, on Wall Street today. A gluttonous glorification of the bottom line led to the credit crisis that has led so many hard-working families into bankruptcy and worse. But that same narrow-mindedness continues to guide financial firms today. Short selling and shortsightedness—rewarded with stratospheric salaries and bloated bonuses—contributed to a shameful culture of excess. Yet that same greed continues today.

A bonus that dwarfs an average American worker's entire annual salary is excessive. Doing so in a way that threatens our economy is dangerous, wrong, and a slap in the face to the American people. Main Street jobless rates and Wall Street bonuses should not rise at the same time. Seniors who rely on Social Security should not be shortchanged while the traders who threaten our economic security are rewarded. Taxpayer money that was supposed to keep our economic pillars from collapsing should not go directly from your savings to a brash broker's pocket.

If the executives who designed these windfalls came out of their corner offices, they would see how badly Americans are suffering. They would see how offensive these paydays are. They would see how desperately hard-working families are struggling to hold on to their jobs, to their homes, and to health care. And they would be ashamed.

We must put an end to the recklessness that got us into this mess. We cannot accept more of the same.

Last week, the Treasury Department announced that it would reasonably limit the excessive paychecks of the top executives at companies in which you and I and every American now own an equity stake. I support that plan. Then the Federal Reserve announced it will rein in banks that reward the riskiest practices—gamblers that endanger all of us. They should be reined in. I support that too.

In the near future, we will reform our financial industry through legislation commonly referred to as regulatory reform. We will make sure banks are compensating their employees in a prudent way. That means firms won't be able to throw cash at a trader who closes a big, risky deal—one that puts the whole bank at risk and that threatens taxpayers and the greater financial system as well.

The Treasury, the Fed, and the Congress will play their parts. Regulation has its role, but I have never believed government is the answer to everything. That is why Wall Street has to take responsibility for its own actions also.

This industry, more than any other, knows the importance of sending signals. The stock market hinges on hints, the trading floors run on rumors, and these public companies live and die by the confidence they instill, the impressions they inspire, and the messages they send. So these firms—whether or not they owe the government for their survival—should be careful about what their actions say about them because the American people are listening closely. Greed got us into this mess; it will not get us out. If we are going to continue to recover and ultimately prosper, this perverse culture and destructive behavior cannot continue. How many more times must we learn the same lesson?

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST— H.R. 3548

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 174, H.R. 3548, and that the following amendments be the only first-degree amendments in order, except in the case where the second-degree or side-by-side amendment is indicated, with the majority amendment to be voted first in any sequence of a second-degree or side-by-side amendment; that general debate time on the bill be limited to 1 hour equally divided and controlled between the leaders or their designees; that debate time on any first-degree amendment be limited to 60 minutes equally divided and controlled in the usual form; and that debate on any second-degree or side-by-side amendment be limited to 30 minutes equally divided and controlled in the usual form:

Reid-Baucus substitute amendment No. 2668, to be modified, and that any debate time on this amendment be within the parameters of time available on the bill; Baucus side-by-side amendment regarding home buyer tax credit/net operating loss/tax relief; Isakson-Dodd amendment regarding home buyer tax credit—Mr. President, for everybody here, I note that the Baucus side-by-side relates to the Isakson-Dodd amendment and another amendment that was given to us earlier by Senator BUNNING; this covers both of those—McConnell amendment regarding tax relief; Johanns amendment regarding alternative substitute; Corker-Warner amendment regarding TARP; that upon disposition of the listed amendments, the use or yielding back of all time, the substitute amendment, as amended, if amended, be agreed to; the bill, as amended, be read the third time, and the Senate then proceed to vote on passage of the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I will have to object, I am going to offer a counter unanimous-consent request that includes a universe of eight amendments. The majority leader has six.

We would be happy to accept short time agreements. It strikes me that under my consent agreement we would finish about as rapidly as we would under the consent agreement the majority leader just propounded.

With that, I object.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I say to the senior Senator from Kentucky that I think the amendments we have suggested are in keeping with what we are trying to do. We deal with a first-time home buyer tax credit. We deal with the loss carryback, which people talk about being very important. We talk about another bipartisan amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Tennessee, setting up a program where there would be trustees to oversee the ownership we have in various TARP properties. I think we have been so reasonable.

I understand my friend, the Senator from Kentucky, not being able to agree at this time. I hope we can get this done. I do not want to have just a vote on cloture. I think probably on this we could do it, but I think it is the wrong message that we cannot work out some amendments.

I see no reason that we have to do immigration on this bill; that is what E-Verify is about. I don't know how many more times we have to pound on ACORN. We have voted on that many times already. I think we are being reasonable.

I think Senator BUNNING, if he would look at the amendment we have suggested, which is out of the Finance Committee—and it is my understanding it is bipartisan—which would cover net operating losses, then Senator BUNNING would get everything he asked for under his amendment. It is just where the money would come from. It is all paid for.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST— H.R. 3548

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, again, the two consent agreements have a universe of six amendments on my friend's side and eight on our side. We are willing to agree to short time agreements on each amendment. I am fairly confident in saying it would not take much more floor time, if any, to pursue the underlying bill, which almost everyone supports, in a form that would encompass the opportunity to offer eight amendments.

With that, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to immediate consideration of H.R. 3548, which was received from the House, and that the following amendments be the only amendments in order:

Reid-Baucus substitute; Baucus side-by-side amendment for housing tax credit; Isakson-Dodd, home buyer tax credit; Johanns, alternative substitute; Vitter, ACORN; Bennett-Thune, TARP sunset; Corker-Warner, TARP; Sessions, E-Verify; Bunning, operating losses.

I further ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the above-listed amendments, the bill, as amended, be read the third time, and the Senate proceed to a vote on passage.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, frankly, I think it is unfortunate that we could not just vote on extending the unemployment benefits for the masses in our country who are out of work and are desperate. There are thousands and thousands of people who are waiting for us to get something done.

The issues that are brought up are issues we can deal with, but it should not be at the expense of wasting all this time. We have been trying to get this done—the unemployment extension—for weeks. With each day that goes by more people in America have less money. If we want to talk about stimulating the economy, try giving a check to somebody who is out of work. They spend that money.

I will continue to try to be fair and reasonable with the Republicans, who are so bound and determined to slow us up on everything, including checks for people who are desperate for work. I hope we don't come to a point where we have to just vote on extending unemployment benefits. That would be unfortunate. The proposals they have made are unnecessary, but I am trying to go above and beyond what is fair. We are willing to step way in the other direction just to move things along. But to vote on immigration matters and on ACORN, which we have done so many times, is only dilatory.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, as my good friend, the majority leader, knows, the easiest way to move it along is with a time agreement, as opposed to going through the normal processes in the Senate. I have a feeling the majority leader wants to object to my consent.

Mr. REID. I object.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, the reason for having a consent agreement is to expedite the process, do it more quickly. We have two competing consent agreements: one with six amendments and one with eight. Either one would move the process along. We will continue to talk about it and, hopefully, we can get this worked out in a way that is mutually satisfactory.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST— H.R. 3548

Mr. REID. Mr. President, these are not competing consent agreements. This is an effort to try to get something the American people should have—the most unfortunate people who have been out of work for an extended period of time—which is unemployment compensation checks.

I ask unanimous consent that we pass H.R. 3548 with no amendments; that is, benefits that will go to people who have been out of work for an extended period of time. This is an act to amend the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 2008 to provide for the temporary availability of certain additional emergency unemployment compensation. I hope we can move forward with that.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, we have just had a discussion about two consent agreements, each of which has a very limited number of amendments. There is no reason we cannot reach an agreement to take up the underlying bill, with a limited number of amendments, and finish the bill expeditiously.

Simply cutting people off and not allowing any amendments at all is not an acceptable approach. Therefore, I object.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is not a question of having no amendments. We agreed to have six. I think that is unnecessary. My friends in the minority are continuing to slow-walk unemployment compensation, while people are desperate for these small checks that they get to keep the rent paid and pay for groceries for their kids. I think we should do this today, get it done now.

I understand there is an objection. I think it is unfortunate.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Well, Mr. President, the only thing that would slow this down would not be to reach a consent agreement. We will continue to talk to the majority leader and, hopefully, we can reach an agreement for a reasonable amount of amendments.

I yield the floor.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There will now be a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

THE PUBLIC OPTION

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, I will let the majority leader make his own announcements, but there are a lot of discussions in the news media today that in a short period of time he intends to hold a press conference announcing that he will push ahead with the so-called public option in the health care legislation—one that currently includes an opt-out provision for States.

I don't know whether he intends to do that or whether he doesn't. He is entitled to make his own announcement, as I said. But it provides a good opportunity to talk about what we mean by a public option in health care, or a government-run health care plan, putting government in the health care business, and how it already works, and how it might work if States were allowed to opt out.

The reason it is easy to talk about this is—and the former Governor of Virginia, who is presiding, knows this as well as I do, and maybe better because he has been Governor more recently—we already have in existence in the United States today a public option health insurance program which States may opt out of. It is called Medicaid.

Medicaid is the largest government-run program we have in health care—even larger than Medicare. Medicare, for older people, has about 40 million persons who depend on it. Medicaid, which sometimes offers confusion, is a different program. It is a program for low-income Americans. It started out for women and children, but it gradually expanded, and today it has nearly 60 million Americans who depend on it. The health care legislation, which is coming forward in the Baucus bill out of the Finance Committee and the HELP Committee, on which I serve, and the bills in the House of Representatives—all those pieces of legislation would expand the Medicaid Program—not Medicare for seniors but the Medicaid Program—and send part of the bill for that expansion to the State.

So let's talk about that a little bit, particularly if it is true that the majority leader is about to propose that we have yet another government-run insurance program, giving the States the right to opt out, which sounds pretty good. Let's see how this one works that we already have, especially since the health reform bill that is headed our way would expand Medicaid, and according to the Congressional Budget Office, cost States an additional $33 billion in State dollars and add 14 million people to Medicaid.

I guess the first thing to know about a government-run health insurance program which States can opt out of is that they can't. I mean, in the real world, they can't. Not one has. Every State in America has Medicaid. The Federal Government pays roughly 60 percent of it; State taxpayers pay the rest. Most of the rules are written in Washington. States can ask for exemptions from the rules, but it is a long and burdensome process. It is not realistic to say the States can opt out of the Medicaid Program for low-income Americans. I suppose it might not be realistic, therefore, to say the States would be able to opt out of a new government-run program—a government-run, public-option program—that may be suggested by the majority leader. We should wait and see what he proposes, but I think we would be wise to pay attention to the fact that in the current government-run program we have today, no State finds it realistic to opt out.

Expanding Medicaid, which is what the health reform bill coming toward us on the floor proposes to do, is not just an expensive item for the Federal Government and for States, it is a terrible vehicle for health care reform. The current Governor of Tennessee—Governor Bredesen—a Democrat—has said putting more low-income Americans into Medicaid is not health care reform. Why would he say that? Because it makes it worse for those Americans as they seek to get access to care from doctors and hospitals and as they seek to get good, quality care. Plus, the program is riddled with so much fraud and abuse that, according to the Congressional Budget Office, $1 out of every $10 is stolen or wasted.

Most Governors who have struggled with Medicaid—and I am one of them—agree that its expansion is a bad idea. They unanimously have said to us in Congress that if you in Washington want to expand Medicaid, then you in Washington need to pay for Medicaid. That is the theory of no more unfunded mandates that every Governor whom I know about has agreed with for years. In fact, there was nothing that used to make me angrier as a Governor than for a distinguished politician in Washington to stand, make a speech, come up with a good idea, hold a press conference declaring a problem solved, and then send the bill to the States. So what does the Governor and the legislature and the mayor and the city council have to do? They have to cut services, they have to raise taxes, they have to run up tuition, they have to cut out some classes because somebody in Washington thought it was a good idea to do this. Well, that is what we are proposing to do with Medicaid. We are saying to the States: We have a great idea. We want to expand Medicaid by dumping another 14 million low-income Americans into this program, but congratulations, we are going to send you the bill to help pay for it.

The Washington Post quoted my home State Governor, Governor Bredesen, to whom I just referred, this way in regard to health care reform:

I can't think of a worse time for this bill to be coming. I would love to see it but nobody is going to put their State into bankruptcy or their education system into the tank for it.

One of the most painful letters I have ever read was from Governor Bredesen, which he sent on October 5, when he wrote about Tennessee's fiscal situation—similar to the condition in most States. He said:

By 2013 we expect to return to our 2008 levels of revenue and will have already cut programs dramatically—over $1 billion. At that point we will have to start digging out—we will not have given raises to State employees or teachers for 5 years. Our pension plans will need shoring up. Our rainy day fund will be depleted . . . we will not have made any substantial investments for years . . . There will be major cuts to areas such as children's services. On top of these, there are the usual obligations that need to be met—Medicaid, for example, will continue to grow at rates in excess of the economy and our tax revenues.

Our idea of health care reform is to expand Medicaid and send Governor Bredesen a bill for $735 million over the next 5 years, which we can't afford.

The other legislation, from the HELP Committee, would cost the States even more. According to an actuarial report from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, Medicaid represented 40 percent of the Federal Government's cost expenditures for health care; 41 percent of State health care costs. It is the largest source of general revenue-based spending in health services—larger than Medicare.

I can vividly remember, 25 years ago, 30 years ago, as Governor, every time I made up a budget, I would start with roads. That comes from the gas tax. I would go to prisons. The court said to fund that. I would go to K-12 grades. Our Presiding Officer, the former Governor of Virginia, has had this experience. That is pretty much a set thing. Then you get down to the end and what are you choosing between? You are choosing between higher education—the University of Tennessee or the University of Virginia—and Medicaid. What is happening? Medicaid is going up like a rocket and State spending for higher education is flat. Our great higher education systems across this country are under great stresses because of poor State funding because we have allowed Medicaid to grow out of control.

Not only do we do that, we are now about to expand it—about to expand it and send more of the bill to the States. The Governors are saying: Don't do that. Their revenues are down 17, 18, 20, 35 percent in some States. If you are going to pass it, they say: Pay for it. That is a question Governors should have a chance to ask and get an answer to.

According to the Texas Medicaid office, the current proposal to expand Medicaid will cost the State $20 billion over the next 10 years. We are passing it, they are paying for that much of it. According to the South Carolina Governor's office, $1.1 billion over 10 years. Governor Schwarzenegger has said for California it could be as high as $8 billion a year.

A New York Times article, in late September, said this:

The recession is driving up enrollment in Medicaid at higher than expected rates, threatening gargantuan State budget gaps even as Congress and the White House seek to expand the government health insurance program for the poor and disabled . . .

The New York Times went on to say: . . . enrollment in state Medicaid programs grew by an average of 5.4 percent in the previous fiscal year, the highest rate in 6 years. . . . In eight states, the growth exceeded 10 percent.

So States have headlines such as this: "State Looks at $1 Billion in Cuts." Their Medicaid is already growing at a rate faster than they can pay for, and we are sending them more bills than they can pay for.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. DURBIN. We had a bill considered earlier this year—a stimulus bill—that sent $80 billion to the States so they could deal with the expenses of Medicaid during the recession and also, obviously, their State's declining revenue, an attempt for us to help Governors facing the horrible decisions which the Senator described.

If I recall correctly, only three Republicans voted for President Obama's stimulus package to help these States with $80 billion in aid. Would the Senator like to factor that into his conversation about sensitivity to what the States are facing?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the distinguished assistant Democratic leader for raising the point. It is a point I would be delighted to address.

I voted against that proposal. That proposal was a backdoor effort in what was a so-called jobs bill to spend $85 billion over 2 years for Medicaid. That is one reason why we have 10 percent unemployment today, because the money that was supposed to be for the stimulus was borrowed from the biggest deficits we have ever run up in history and spent on something other than jobs.

What it also did was it unrealistically lifted the level of Medicaid spending in Tennessee and every other State, forcing an expansion of that program, which I will go on to show in a minute is nearly cruel to the people who are dumped into the program because doctors and hospitals will not serve them.

So I was glad to vote against that program. I was sorry it passed because it borrowed money we don't have to spend on programs that didn't create jobs, and it artificially lifted and expanded Medicaid, which is already bankrupting the States.

Medicaid expansion is not real health care reform. One reason is because 40 percent—according to a 2002 Medicare Payment Advisory Committee survey—of the physicians restrict access for Medicaid patients; meaning they will not take new Medicaid patients because reimbursement rates are so low. Only about half of U.S. physicians accept new Medicaid patients compared with more than 70 percent who accept new Medicare—those are the seniors—patients.

According to a 2002 study in the Journal of American Academy of Pediatrics, the national rate for pediatricians who accept all Medicaid patients was 55 percent. In Tennessee, it was lower than that. Why is that? It is because reimbursement rates are so low. Today, doctors who see patients who are on Medicare get paid about 80 percent of what private insurers pay. Doctors who see patients who are on Medicaid get paid about 61 or 62 percent of what private insurers pay. For doctors who see children, it is sometimes lower than that. So doctors don't see those patients. What is going to happen if we dump 14 more million low-income Americans into a system such as that? Those patients—especially those children—are going to have a harder time finding doctors and hospitals to take care of them. It would be akin to giving somebody a ticket and a pat on the back to a bus line that only operated 50 percent of the time.

Further, the quality of care for Medicaid patients is significantly lower than those with private insurance and even those with no insurance. According to a survey by the National Hospital Ambulatory Medical Care, Medicaid patients visit the emergency room at nearly twice the rate of uninsured patients. A 2007 study by the Journal of the American Medical Association found that patients enrolled in Medicaid were less likely to achieve good blood pressure control, receive breast cancer screening, have timely prenatal care than similar parents in private plans, and they had lower survival rates.

I mentioned this a little earlier. According to the Government Accountability Office, Medicaid—the program we are seeking to expand, the government-run insurance program that sounds so good, the so-called largest public option plan we have to date, the plan where about half the doctors will not take new patients who are on the program—had $32.7 billion in improper payments in 2007 alone; 10 percent of the program's total spending is wasted.

So as we consider a so-called public option, I hope we will look at the public option we already have—called Medicaid—one which already has an opt-out provision for States, one which already has 60 million low-income Americans in it, one into which we plan to put 14 million more Americans, so that 50 percent of the doctors will say to new patients: I can't see you because the reimbursement rates are so low. Medicaid is the public option we have right now. States could opt out of it, but quality is low, fraud is high, costs are up, and Governors of States on both sides of the aisle are saying: We are headed toward bankruptcy at the present rate. If you are sending us more bills, if you want to expand it, pay for it. And doctors are turning away patients.

The American people deserve better than that. I am a cosponsor of a bipartisan bill that would actually reduce the number of patients on Medicaid. It is called the Wyden-Bennett bill. It adds no cost to the government. That bill is not being seriously considered.

The other approach that we Republicans believe we should take is focusing on reducing costs to the government, focus on reducing the cost of premiums; take four or five steps in the right direction and expand services to uninsured patients as we go. One way to do that, of course, would be the Small Business Health Insurance bill, which has broad support in both Houses, which would permit small businesses to come together and pool their resources. The estimates are that at least 1 million more Americans would be covered by employer insurance if that were to happen. Some estimates say many more millions.

But especially on a day when the press has it rumored that the majority leader may offer a new government-run insurance program with the States having the opportunity to opt out, I hope Americans will look carefully at the current government-run insurance program which States have the option to opt out of, but none do, and note that it has 60 million Americans—it is soon to have 74 million; half the doctors won't see new patients because of reimbursement rates; and $1 out of $10 is wasted. It is not a solution to health care and neither is a new public option.

I yield the floor and thank the Senator from Illinois for his question.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I think we ought to step back and take a look at this health care debate. The Senator from Tennessee has raised some interesting questions that we should consider and discuss.

The reality in America today is that the cost of health care is out of control. We know it as individuals because the health care premiums keep going up. In fact, the health insurance industry not only announced but threatened 2 weeks ago that if we pass health care reform, premiums are going to go up again. Businesses are now reporting they anticipate the cost of health insurance premiums to cover their employees to go up at least 15 percent next year.

This is not new. Unfortunately it has become a pattern, a pattern that continues to raise the cost of health insurance across America. Fewer businesses offer protection, fewer individuals can afford to buy health insurance, and that is the reality, where we are today.

We have put forward now five different proposals, and the sixth is coming, to deal with health care reform. President Obama challenged this Congress to work together on a bipartisan basis to solve this problem, to bring costs under control. During the course of our debate on it, we identified some other serious problems in our health care system. We know what the health insurance companies do to people across America. They hire literally hundreds if not thousands of employees to sit in front of computer terminals with a sign above them that says just say no, so when the doctor calls and says I wish to admit Mrs. Smith for surgery or I wish to keep her in the hospital an extra 2 days, the answer is no and the battle is on. I know this because I have been in the hospitals of my hometown of Springfield, IL, standing with doctors at the nurses desk as they call the health insurance clerks in faraway States and beg them to allow a person to stay in the hospital so she will be there the night before her surgery. They were turned down and one doctor turned to me and said, "I cannot in good conscience send this woman home. I am going to have her stay and we will fight them later on." I said, "Does this happen often?" And he said, "All the time."

Fighting health insurance for coverage when you need it the most, as they go through your application and find out that you did not put in some minor medical experience that you had—you know, it is not a fanciful story. In fact, it is a sad story. People have been turned down for coverage for health insurance when they need it the most for surgery because they failed to disclose they had acne when they were teenagers. It sounds as though I am making that up, but I am not. That is a fact. When they want to turn you down, any excuse will do. We know this is happening. People, because of pre-existing conditions, are being denied coverage. When they need their health insurance the most, after paying into it year after year, here comes that diagnosis that is going to require expensive treatment or a surgery or hospitalization or missing work, they find out the coverage is not going to be there or there is going to be a cap on the coverage.

We know these stories. We live with these stories. People are calling us, saying the health insurance company says no, they won't pay for it. And the battle is on. So part of health care reform is to deal with this health insurance reform too.

I have to say in all candor to my Republican colleagues, they have yet to come forward with any proposal for health care reform. They just say no. Whenever we come up with a proposal, it is not good enough, it doesn't reach the goals they want to reach. But when we ask them what would you do, they have nothing. When the HELP Committee, which is the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee of the Senate, now under the chairmanship of Senator HARKIN and then under the temporary chairmanship of Senator CHRIS DODD of Connecticut while Senator Kennedy was going through his cancer therapy—when they considered this bill they had literally hundreds of amendments, 500 amendments in open hearing as they went through this bill.

It is not a surprise. This is a big undertaking. Health care reform is the biggest domestic issue we have ever faced in this country—ever. It comprises one-sixth of our economy. There were 500-plus amendments, day after day, hour after hour, debating back and forth. At the end of the day, the bill was finished. The committee had adopted over 150 Republican amendments they had offered to the bill. Senator DODD believed it had a fair hearing—it is a bipartisan bill with input from both sides—and he called the roll in the committee to see if we could move the bill forward to the floor. Not one single Republican Senator would vote for it. Even after adding all those amendments they would not stand up and vote for the bill to move forward to the floor. Again, faced with the challenge of writing a bill, it is easier to stand back and say here is what is wrong with what you are doing. But in good faith they should step forward and be part of it.

Senator MAX BAUCUS in the Senate Finance Committee had one of the toughest assignments. He had to deal not only with policy but also with paying for it. That is what the Senate Finance Committee is all about. So what Senator BAUCUS did, for months, was to engage three Republican Senators on his committee: Senator GRASSLEY of Iowa, Senator ENZI of Wyoming, Senator SNOWE of Maine. Three Democratic Senators sat down with three Republican Senators and said let's come up with a bipartisan bill. Let's try to reach agreement among ourselves as to how to do this in a bipartisan fashion. Eventually, after literally months of trying, two of the Republican Senators left, leaving only Senator SNOWE of Maine, who ultimately supported the committee bill that came forward.

She is an unusual profile in courage in the Senate. She is the only Republican in the House or Senate who has ever voted in committee as a Republican to bring a bill forward on health care reform. It showed extraordinary courage on her part. But it also showed that despite the best efforts in both of these committees in open session and in closed meetings, we could not get Republican buy-in for health care reform. They are opposed to everything.

Unfortunately, to be opposed to everything is not a way to solve a problem. The current health care system in America is unsustainable. It costs too much. The costs are going up too fast—not just for individuals, families, and businesses, but for government as well. The health insurance companies are running roughshod over people who, when they need it the most, cannot count on the health insurance protection they thought they had purchased. It is a reality that in the bankruptcy courts across America today, two out of three people filing for bankruptcy in America are filing because of medical bills. It has grown over the last few years from one out of three to two out of three. Sadly, that percentage is going to continue to grow because you know what happens—a person goes in after an accident, a diagnosis, goes into the hospital for what appeared to be a brief stay and the next thing you know a bill comes rolling through for $80,000 or $100,000 or more. These bills pile up in an amazing fashion and you have no control over them. You are there at the instruction of your doctor, receiving the care the doctor said you should receive. You don't stop before the nurse leaves the room and say how much do those pills cost? It is the reality that we are helpless, defenseless, when we are in that position.

So people have these medical bills stack up in an attempt to find a cure or to save a life. At the end of the day, the health insurance doesn't cover them. They file for bankruptcy. But here is the statistic you should remember. In addition to 2 out of 3 people in bankruptcy because of medical bills, 74 percent of those people filing for bankruptcy because of medical bills have health insurance. They are not uninsured. They have health insurance that was not there when they needed it; health insurance that cut them off when they thought they had coverage; health insurance that had a limit on how much it would pay and they were left in a position where they were about to lose everything. They may be able to hang onto a truck or a toolkit or maybe even a small home, but their savings are gone, wiped out, because of a diagnosis or an accident.

That is the reality of where we are today and why we continue to engage this issue, despite the controversy that surrounds it.

Senator HARRY REID is the majority leader in the Senate and he has a tough job. He is in the process of taking the two bills prepared by the Senate committees, bringing them together into something that can pass the Senate. It is hard. There are a lot of policy questions and a lot of strong feelings. Within the Senate Democratic caucus are members who are very conservative, moderate, and liberal. We have it all, a wide range. We agree on some things but there is disagreement when it comes to other things. One of the questions that came up, one of the issues of controversy, was about the so-called public option. In shorthand, the public option is an attempt to create some form of health insurance protection that is a not-for-profit plan—it doesn't have to worry about paying profits to shareholders; isn't going to buy a fortune's worth of advertising; doesn't have to hire a lot of clerks to say no but tries to keep costs under control and compete with private health insurance companies.

We should be concerned about this because, without a public option—and it is only an option—without a public option, these health insurance companies have virtually no restrictions on what they can charge us. I say that because health insurance—insurance in general but health insurance companies—enjoy special treatment under American law. There are only two businesses in America that are exempt from antitrust law. One happens to be organized baseball; the other, the insurance industry. You say: What does that mean? It means that back 110 years ago when they took a look at the insurance industry, they argued that because it was subject to State regulation in every State, it was not interstate business. Students of the Constitution know there is an interstate commerce clause there that gives the Federal Government authority when we are dealing with interstate business. So health insurance companies and insurance companies in general were judged to be State businesses and exempt from antitrust law.

Then fast forward about 50 years. The Supreme Court took a look at insurance companies and said this has changed. These are no longer small insurance companies regulated State by State. They are now doing business nationwide, and so the Court decided in the 1940s that the exemption from antitrust law would no longer apply. A Senator from Nevada serving at that time, Senator McCarran, offered the McCarran-Ferguson bill, which became law and exempted insurance companies from antitrust laws.

That is a long lead-in to where we are today. What it means is that the insurance companies, unlike any other businesses in America, can literally meet in a closed room and decide to fix their prices. They will decide what premiums they will charge for insurance policies all across America. They can decide to allocate the market. One insurance company X, you take Chicago; insurance company Y, you take St. Louis; insurance company Z, you get New York. Any other business that tried to do that would be sued by the Federal Government for restraint of trade, for killing competition. But they are exempt and that is a fact.

So when the insurance companies, health insurance companies, tell us they are going to raise premiums, mark their words; they are going to do it and they have the power to do it and they can do it speaking as one and we cannot stop them under the current law as it exists. That is the reality.

The public option says there at least will be a choice out there for everybody who is in an insurance exchange, looking for a choice. There will at least be a choice out there that is not a private health insurance company: a not-for-profit company, not subsidized by the Federal Government, that is going to deal with providers across America to try to bring costs down.

The Senator from Tennessee said this public option is what Medicaid is but he is mistaken. Medicaid is different. Medicaid is a government insurance plan. What is the difference in this situation is there would be no government subsidy to this public option and the public option entity, the insurance company, the not-for-profit insurance company, would have to negotiate arm's-length transactions, negotiate with doctors and hospitals on the rates they would be paid. There is no government mandate on the rates paid. That is not the case in Medicaid at all. So the analogy falls apart. When the Senator from Tennessee says public option is basically Medicaid, it is not. Medicaid is a government plan, public option is not a government plan. Medicaid has government command and control when it comes to the amount they are paying. This plan has to negotiate arm's-length transactions. It is totally different.

I might say a word about Medicaid. I asked the Senator from Tennessee, earlier this year because of the recession, President Obama said: We think the States are in trouble. We think the governments are in trouble. With the recession, fewer people are working, fewer people are paying taxes, and the demand for government services is going up. So we need to help them. We came up with $80 billion, $85 billion to send back to the States in a rescue fund so they could get through this recession. Unfortunately, we didn't have the support from the other side of the aisle. So when the Senator from Tennessee comes in and says these governments are facing hard times, it is true they are, but the times would have been much harder for these governments without President Obama's stimulus package, which tried to help these States get through this rough period.

In the stimulus bill, the State of Tennessee received almost $760 million in FMAP, which is basically Medicaid payments. There are only three Republican Senators who voted for it, not including the Senator from Tennessee. So when we tried to help the States deal with the expenses they face, many of those who are coming to the floor today did not vote for it. I think that needs to be part of the record.

Let me also say the costs are going up for health care in general, and that affects the cost of Medicaid. Medicaid is for the poorest people in America. Medicaid, by and large, when it comes to those under the age of 65, covers children. These are the children of poor families. The only compensation to the doctors and hospitals when they show up, if there is any, comes from Medicaid.

Also, it covers those who are elderly and very poor. You find some of them living in nursing homes across America. They have lost everything. They have nothing left. They have their Medicare and the help of Medicaid.

The argument that Medicaid is a bad system and poor system—it is easy to criticize that system, and it should be improved. What would we do without it? What would happen to these elderly people who have nowhere to turn and no savings, who are living the last months and years of their lives because of Medicare and Medicaid?

The States, of course, say the Federal Government should give them more money for Medicaid. I wish we could. In my State, incidentally, it is about a 50-50 split in Medicaid. For every dollar in Medicaid, 50 cents comes from the Federal Government and 50 cents from the State government. Other States are more generous with more money coming in.

The fact is, I know it is tough on governments to keep up with the expenses. What is the alternative? Is the alternative to ignore any health care for poor people? They will still get sick. As sick as they turn out to be, they will still show up at the hospital, and in our compassion we will treat them and the cure will be paid for by everybody else who has health insurance.

I might also say I believe the opt-out provision, which is being discussed as part of our approach, says we are going to create these public options, these not-for-profit health insurance companies in States across the Nation. But if a State decides through its Governor and its legislature they don't want to be part of it, they can opt out of the system.

I cannot think of a fairer approach. It will be tough for some States to do that because the public sentiment is pretty strong, almost 2 to 1 in favor of a public option. People understand they want to have a low-cost alternative and not be stuck with the premiums the private health insurance companies decide to charge.

So I say in response to my colleague from Tennessee, whom I respect and call a friend, I don't believe characterizing the public option as the same as Medicaid is a fair characterization, and I don't think opt out is an unfair approach. I think there is fairness to it, allowing each State to make the decision what it will do based on the needs of the people who live in that State, and the people in the State will have the final say at the next election as to whether the legislature and the Governor made the best choice.

EXTENDING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, it has been 18 days since the Senate Democrats tried to pass a strong unemployment insurance extension only to see the bill blocked by the other side of the aisle. Since that time, over 125,000 Americans trying to find work have lost their unemployment benefits; 125,000 families across America now have the hardest possible question to answer: How are we going to keep food on the table? How are we going to keep a roof over the heads of myself and my family? Unfortunately, we have been unable to move an extension of unemployment benefits on the floor of the Senate.

This is unusual because in times gone by, this was never even controversial. Extending unemployment benefits was expected. If the economy was in recession and jobs were lost, we stepped up, both parties, and said: We can debate a lot of things, but let's understand there are a lot of Americans in very difficult circumstances who need a helping hand. That is not this time. Unfortunately, at this point in time, it has become a politically controversial issue about whether to extend unemployment benefits to people.

I have heard from a lot of people back in Illinois. A week ago in Chicago, I met with a room full of unemployed people and talked with them about their expenses first hand—people who have been out of work for long periods of time and are desperate to find a job. These people were all in training to improve their skills to get a better chance at employment. They told me about losing their health insurance. They worry about losing their homes. They are depleting their savings. They don't know which way to turn.

That is the reality. Any image anyone has of people on unemployment enjoying it and lazily waiting for the next check I think would be completely obviated by a visit with people who are unemployed.

I hope all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will sit down with these families who are asking us for unemployment benefits.

A 50-year-old woman in Machesney Park wrote me recently:

I have worked steadily since I was 16. I am now 51 and have only had to collect unemployment once in those 35 years. I received my last unemployment check the first week in September [of this year]. I [look for] work every day. If I could just find a part-time job at 25 to 35 hours a week, I could get by. . . .

[Our families] have exhausted our retirement accounts just to keep [paying the bills]. Now we fear not being able to survive when retirement comes. So I do want to thank you and wish to stress the urgency in getting this bill passed. Do not give up on us hard-working American citizens.

A wife and mother in Fox River Grove wrote me and said:

I am a 59-year-old educated woman who lost my job in April 2008. I was just informed that my unemployment benefits will run out in [30 days]. I have been actively looking all this time but there is little out there for me.

I can't believe that people are going to be turned away for benefits when there is nothing out there for us to do. . . .

After years of working, putting two kids through college (MBA and [another master's degree]), we thought at last we could save for our retirement. I guess now keeping our house should be [a higher priority]. My 94-year-old mother has moved in with us because she lost her house so we are trying to [help her get along].

Please convince Congress to extend unemployment [benefits] until we can see a light at the end of the unemployment tunnel.

A young lady from Chicago wrote me:

I have been out of work since January 2009. I am currently collecting unemployment benefits, but am nearing the end [of eligibility for benefits].

I don't have crazy outstanding bills, actually, I have no debt other than a $300 credit card that has fallen into arrears. I'm just trying to get by living in the city of Chicago. I have $12.58 in my checking account and $5.81 in my savings account.

I don't have a mortgage. I don't eat out. I don't even have cable. No kids in school. No health club membership. I also don't have insurance. I know you're working on that for us now, and I appreciate that. But this unemployment bill needs to pass quickly because as I understand it, 20,000 Illinois residents will lose their benefits in the next few months and I am one of [them].

I spend 10 [or more] hours a day dividing my time between job searching and trying to drum up business for a small business I am trying to get started. . . .

Senator, please, please, please pass this bill. If not for me whose credit has been ruined by nonpayment of a $300 bill, then for the 20,000 other Illinois residents who have much larger bills, mortgages and families counting on them.

How are we supposed to justify to the people we represent across America that we cannot take up and pass this extension of unemployment benefits? These unemployment benefits are paid from a fund that is collected from workers and their employers during the course of their work career. We put a little bit of money away each week on the chance that someone facing unemployment will need that money to get by.

These people are asking for an extension of their benefits from a fund into which they paid. It is deeply troubling to me that we can't help these people and thousands like them.

The Senator from Kentucky, Mr. McCONNELL, the Republican leader, came earlier and said the reason we can't do this is because we need to consider a few amendments to it.

Last week, the No. 2 man in the Republican leadership, Senator JON KYL of Arizona, said his side, the Republican side, wanted amendments to the unemployment compensation bill on "stuff that pertains to the subject—how do you pay for it, for example."

I will tell you that the list of amendments given to us to add to the unemployment bill go far beyond what the Senator from Arizona said. For example, there is a group of Senators over there who want to get into a debate about immigration. This is an important issue, don't get me wrong, and it is one we should take up and will take up, probably not this year but the beginning of next year. But to hold up unemployment benefits for these hard-working Americans whose citizenship has never been questioned so we can debate immigration? I don't believe that meets the test Senator KYL said we had to meet: that he would want amendments that pertain "to the subject—how you pay for it, for example."

Secondly, the Senator from Louisiana wants to offer an amendment about an organization called ACORN. You remember ACORN. Those are the folks who were caught on the videotapes counseling people on conduct that if it is not criminal should be criminal. Those employees of ACORN have been dismissed. I am sure they are being investigated, and they should be. What we saw on those tapes is not only troubling but could be actionable. I am not saying hold back at all with regard to ACORN.

In response to that, I offered an amendment calling for the GAO to do an investigation of all the Federal expenditures related to this agency. I want to find out if there is any other wrongdoing, whether we should cancel work that is being done, investigate payments that are being made. I want to get to the bottom of this. The House went further to cut off ACORN from any business with the Federal Government. They voted for that.

So to say this organization has been ignored is wrong. There is a lot that has been said and done about ACORN. The Obama administration cut them off on work on the census, and they are investigating their work in a lot of other areas. But to hold up this bill on unemployment benefits so we can again debate ACORN, how do you explain that to people in Louisiana and Illinois, folks who have lost their unemployment benefits? You have to say: Just hang on. We sure would like to send a check to take care of your family, but first we have to revisit the ACORN debate and go through all this all over again at some new level.

That, to me, is irresponsible. It is wrong for us to deny basic benefits that people need when they are out of work so that people can come to the floor of the Senate and argue about issues that have nothing to do with these poor unemployed people and the struggles they are going through.

There are literally six unemployed people in America for every open job. It is no wonder they are having a hard time finding employment. It is starting to turn around ever so slightly, and I hope it turns around quickly. That is the reality.

In the meantime, could we not come to agreement, Democrats and Republicans, that this safety net is critically important; that the people affected by it couldn't care less what our party labels are, couldn't care less about another debate about ACORN? All they want to do is get by another day, week, or month in the hope they can find that job.

Time and again the Democratic leader has offered our Republican friends an alternative coming forward: doing this bill, passing it quickly, and sending it out so we can extend up to 20 weeks coverage of unemployment benefits in some of the States hit hardest by unemployment. But time and again the Republicans on the other side of the aisle have said no, as they have on so many other issues.

They don't have an alternative to paying unemployment benefits. They know we have to do it. We should do it. But they want to debate other issues. They don't have an alternative to health care reform. They don't like what we are proposing, but they don't have an alternative. They basically want to stay with the current system in America, which is not good for us in the long run.

What we need is more positive efforts toward cooperation, and I hope we will achieve it. For the people and families in Illinois, they have my assurance that I will continue to work to extend unemployment benefits so more and more Americans, not only in my State but across the Nation, will have the peace of mind knowing they can get through this tough recession.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CORNYN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CORNYN. I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 15 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE PUBLIC OPTION

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I listened to the majority leader, Senator

REID, talk about his melded bill, the combination of the Finance Committee bill and the HELP Committee bill that he has now completed merging behind closed doors. He said he is going to send it to the Congressional Budget Office to get a score or a cost estimate. My hope is we will all be able to see it soon. We have not been able to participate in the process since it has been a process taking place between the majority leader and presumably Senators DODD and BAUCUS, the chairmen of the two committees, without Republicans being present. So we don't know what is in it, and we don't know how much it costs. Certainly those are two critical questions the American people are asking and those of us who will be required to vote on this legislation at some point would like the answers to. When will we be able to see it? When will the American people be able to see it? How much will the bill cost?

Today, I wish to focus on another question: Why is it that some people in this country think another government-run health care plan is the answer? A government-run plan goes by a lot of different names. It is an attempt, in part, to obfuscate what people are trying to do. Sometimes people like to call it the public option because it sounds innocuous. Who could be against a choice, an option, if it is not mandatory? Others say they are not for a public option unless it has a trigger. Others talk about opting in, and we heard the majority leader talk about a bill he intends to introduce that provides an opt out for the States. The reality remains the same. We are talking about a brandnew entitlement program, a brandnew government-run health care program run out of Washington, DC, based on the fundamental and misguided belief that one size fits all for a nation of 300 million people.

Some of my colleagues believe a government plan is gaining momentum. I appeared yesterday on a Sunday television show with Senator SCHUMER, the distinguished Senator from New York, who said he thought Congress was right on the cusp of a public option or government-run plan. The more the American people find out about what is meant by the public option, the less they like it.

Last week, we saw the Washington Post-ABC News poll that supposedly said that support for a government-run plan was growing. In fact, support has fallen by 5 points since June. These numbers can be misleading. As the Presiding Officer knows, in politics and public opinion polling, he or she who gets to ask the questions or frame the questions, he or she who gets to decide what the sample is can have a dramatic impact on the answers given to a poll. It is absolutely the case that support for the so-called public option drops dramatically when we explain to people what it would actually do.

ABC News polling director Gary Langer wrote about this dynamic in June. He noted that while 62 percent initially favored a so-called public option, that number dropped from 62 percent to 37 percent once it was explained to people that it would put many private insurers out of business because they couldn't compete with the Federal Government and the so-called government plan.

In other words, support dropped when people realized they would not be able to keep what they have now—which is one of the President's promises—because many insurers would simply be driven out of business. Thus that promise President Obama has made time and time again would not be possible under the public option or government plan.

Today in the Washington Post, Fred Hiatt explained why a government plan would end up breaking President Obama's promise: A government plan would work like Medicare and Medicaid—those are two government plans—and they would, as Medicare and Medicaid do, pay providers at low rates.

As a matter of fact, last week we had a vote on a bill—actually, on a cloture motion on a motion to proceed—a technical vote but one that would have taken us to a bill to basically reverse the cuts in Medicare reimbursement rates to Medicare providers. But it was not paid for. It would have added $300 billion to the national debt. So 13 Democrats joined with Republicans to defeat that. Hopefully, we will go back to the drawing board and come up with a bill that will be paid for.

But the point is, any new government plan, as Fred Hiatt pointed out, would work like Medicare and Medicaid and pay providers much less than they could get under private insurers. So providers would, as they do now, make up the difference by charging private plans more for the same services. This is a so-called cost-shifting phenomenon. Then private insurance premiums—if you have private coverage now—would increase for people who have health insurance coverage now. Ultimately, some of them would be forced to drop their private insurance because it would be more expensive, not less, which is what I thought the object of this exercise was about: how to bring down costs, not how to drive them up, and the cycle would continue until all private insurers would go out of business, and all Americans would find themselves on a single-payer, government-run health care plan. So much for the option in the public option.

So the fact is, the government plan would not be just a competitor; it would, in fact, act as a predator by calling the shots. Even as it takes the field, the government plan would undercut the private market and create another Washington monopoly.

Some people have described the so-called public option as a Trojan horse. I have used that phrase myself. But the person who actually devised the public option said this—his name is Jacob Hacker, and he is a professor at Berkeley—he put it this way last year:

Someone once said to me, "This is a Trojan horse for single payer," and I said, "Well, it's not a Trojan horse, right? It's just right there."

Professor Hacker said:

I'm telling you, we're going to get there, over time, slowly.

The truth is, we should not be creating another government plan when the ones we have now are not working very well at all.

As Robert Samuelson wrote in today's Washington Post:

Why would a plan tied to Medicare control health [care] spending, when Medicare hasn't?

He noted that from 1970 until 2007, Medicare spending had risen by 9.2 percent annually. Let me say that again. From 1970 to 2007, Medicare spending had risen by 9.2 percent annually. He says this is just one reason the so-called public option is what he called a "mirage."

We know there are current entitlement programs that have major unfunded liabilities. Medicare has a $38 trillion unfunded liability and will effectively go bankrupt in 2017. Yet this bill, at least the Finance Committee bill—I presume the bill coming out of Senator REID's office will do the same—takes $500 billion from Medicare to create a new entitlement plan, a new government-run health care plan, when Medicare itself has $38 trillion in unfunded liabilities. It just does not seem to make any sense.

Medicaid, which, of course, primarily helps pay health care costs for the poor, reduces access to health care in many communities because reimbursement rates are so low that many providers simply cannot take new patients. As "60 Minutes" reported just last night, fraud and abuse in government health care programs cost taxpayers about $90 billion a year. Does this sound like a model we want to hold out—a new government-run plan—when the ones we have now are broken and need fixing?

On the Medicare fraud and abuse, according to FBI special agent Brian Waterman, Medicare fraud is a bigger problem in South Florida than the drug trade. He said:

There are entire groups and entire organizations of people that are dedicated to nothing but committing fraud, finding a better way to steal from Medicare.

One former Federal judge looked at his Medicare statement and found that someone had billed the government for two artificial limbs on his behalf even though he still has the ones God gave him. In other words, he did not need any artificial limbs, but somebody charged them to Medicare on his bill without his knowledge.

I agree with our colleague, Senator LANDRIEU from Louisiana, that a government plan would just replicate the same kinds of problems we have seen in Medicare and Medicaid. As she said:

Why don't we fix the two public options we have now instead of creating a [new] one?

Well, supporters of a government plan say we need to have more competition and give consumers more choice. I could not agree more. But this is not—this is not—the way to do it. Competition occurs when we have more private insurance companies competing in marketplaces, which would happen under some proposals made by our side of the aisle—if we would simply create a system where individuals could buy health insurance in any State across the Nation and were not just confined to buying health insurance in their own State. Competition increases when we get more insurance carriers to enter the market, not by creating a government plan that will drive them out of it.

We have proposed ways, as I have said, to increase the number of private insurance options in every State. We think if that is the goal, certainly we ought to be able to come together in a bipartisan way to accomplish that goal. But I do not know why in the world we would settle for a health care proposal that would ultimately drive people to a single-payer, government-run health care plan, would raise taxes on the middle class, raise premiums on those who have insurance now and depress the wages of those who have that health insurance now, and would cut, as I mentioned a moment ago, $500 billion from a Medicare Program that is scheduled to go bankrupt in 2017. Why would we settle for something that would make things worse instead of better for more than 100 million Americans? Why would we vote to spend $1 trillion or more on a new entitlement program without fixing the ones we have now?

Well, it is not just me saying that this so-called public option with the opt-out the majority leader has now proposed—which he admits does not have 60 votes, and the one Republican, Senator SNOWE, who said she would vote for the bill said she would not vote for a bill with a public option. So I am not sure why, with one Republican supporting the Finance Committee bill, they have now apparently rejected Senator SNOWE's support and opted for a strictly partisan proposal coming out of Senator REID's conference room.

But I also checked, and another health care expert whom I respect shares some of my views about the dangers of the so-called public option.

Secretary Mike Leavitt, who is the former Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, said:

Advocates for a public health-care plan continue to look for a way to give political cover to moderates while advancing their goal of implementing a government-run health-care system.

He said:

[Ultimately,] it is designed to undercut private insurance.

He said it is “dangerous for three reasons.” He said:

One, it would be cheaper for employers to stop offering private [coverage to their employees and to] funnel their employees into the government-run plan. Employers, not employees, would get to make that choice.

Secondly, he said:

[A] government-run plan would use the coercive force of government to dictate the prices that [are going to be] charged by others—by doctors, nurses, and hospitals—in a way that private entities cannot.

Third, he said this proposal is dangerous because a “government-run plan would be subsidized by American taxpayers, while private plans are not.” In other words, he says, if, in fact, States will be given a chance to opt out of the so-called public option, they would not have a chance to opt out of the tax dollars their taxpayers would spend in order to subsidize the so-called public plan.

As he concludes, he says:

The state “opt-in” is a transparently false choice. It is just another gimmick to try to find votes for an unwise policy that would increase the federal government's control over health care.

We can do better. We must do better. I urge my colleagues not to take the bait on this so-called public option, whether it has an opt-out or not, because it is just another disguised way to try to end up with a single-payer, government-run health care system out of Washington, DC.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, first of all, let me say to my friend from Texas, the wake-up call is out there. People are fully aware of what is going on right now—the fact that you have a government option; you have a form of socialized medicine; you have something that has proven not to work in areas such as Canada and Great Britain and elsewhere. It is kind of interesting to me that we see those countries trying to emulate something we are doing at the same time we are edging over in their direction. I do not think that is going to work.

CAP-AND-TRADE

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I will tell you something else I do not think is going to work. During the August recess, people were upset mostly about—because it was the most visible issue at the time—the prospect of socialized medicine for America. But at the same time, as a close second, there was another issue that was very much of concern; that is, a cap-and-trade bill.

Just to refresh your memory, this goes all the way back almost 10 years when we had the Kyoto Treaty. That was back during the Clinton administration, and we were supposed to be ratifying the Kyoto Treaty, which would have been a big, massive cap-and-trade or tax increase. In fact, the analysis of that was done by the Wharton Econometric Survey, from the Wharton School of Economics.

The question put to them was, What would it cost if we ratified the Kyoto Treaty and lived by its emissions standards? The answer was it would be somewhere between $300 billion and $330 billion a year. I always go back, when I am trying to figure out what that would mean to individual families, and I recall that the Clinton-Gore tax increase of 1993 was the largest tax increase in three decades, increasing marginal rates, capital gains, inheritance taxes, and all other taxes. That was a $32 billion tax increase. So that would be 10 times larger. That was the Kyoto Treaty. We did not ratify it.

Then along came the McCain-Lieberman bill in 2003 and then again the McCain-Lieberman bill of 2005, and the same thing was true. Other universities' analyses came in and tried to determine what the cost would be. I remember MIT came in and did an analysis of those bills, and it was somewhere in excess of $300 billion a year. Then along came the Warner-Lieberman bill—not the current Senator WARNER but the past Senator Warner—and that was essentially the same.

What I am saying is, it does not really matter whether we are talking about Waxman-Markey or what we are going to be voting on sometime in the near future, I would assume, that is going to be a form of Waxman-Markey. By the way, I say that because when several Senators were trying to get information to analyze what it is we are going to be starting to have hearings on tomorrow and then ultimately marking up, they said the bill is a lot like Waxman-Markey, so just go look at the analysis of Waxman-Markey. If you want to do that, at least we now know there is a target out there. We have something we can talk about.

While I have serious problems with EPA's analysis of Waxman-Markey and its 38-page “meta-analysis” of Kerry-Boxer—that is 38 pages of a 923-page bill—the latter is not entirely EPA's fault. It is a drive to ram the Kerry-Boxer bill through the legislative process before people really know what it is. Now we know what it is because it is essentially the same thing we had in the Waxman-Markey bill that went through the House of Representatives.

It is kind of interesting. This massive tax increase called the Waxman-Markey bill passed the House after very little debate because it came up—in fact, they finished it at 3 o'clock in the morning the day they voted on it, so people had not had a chance to read any of it. So it passed by 219 votes in the House of Representatives. That is barely a majority. It is one that was—interestingly enough, the last time they had a massive energy tax increase such as this, it was called the Btu tax of 1994. That passed the House by 219 votes, the same margin. Obviously, that was killed later on in the Senate, as I believe this will be.

I come to the floor now to talk about this because tomorrow we start hearings, exhaustive hearings, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. They are not going to be talking about the specifics of the bill; it will just be more propaganda. The main thing we want to do is make sure everybody knows it is going to be a very large tax increase. It wasn't long ago that Representative JOHN DINGELL, who is a Democrat from Michigan—he said it right. He said: Cap and trade is “a tax, and a great big tax at that.”

So we have something we know we are going to be faced with. We know we are going to have hearings. The question has to be asked: If we know there are not votes to pass it in the Senate, why are we having our hearings now? I would suggest to my colleagues we are having them because there is a big party that is going to take place in Copenhagen. Every year, the United Nations throws this party. You might ask: The United Nations? Yes, that is where it all started, the IPCC. It is going to take place in Copenhagen during the middle of December. I thought it was interesting last night when President Obama announced he probably was not going to be going to this party in Copenhagen because it didn't look as if they had the votes to pass something in the Senate.

So I would only say to get ready. We are going to have more of the same. We went through it back during Kyoto, 10 years ago, and since then with four bills on the Senate floor and we are going to be talking about it more and more.

I just came from my office. This is kind of interesting. This is a hat signed by the Young Farmers and Ranchers, which is tied to the American Farm Bureau or the Oklahoma Farm Bureau, in this case. It says: “Don't Cap Our Future.”

When you stop and think about what would happen to the farmers—I hate to even single out farmers or any other groups because it is going to be just as punishing to the entire manufacturing base. It was interesting the other day, when we asked the question of the newly appointed Director of the Environmental Protection Agency, Lisa Jackson, as to what would happen if we were to pass the bill in the Senate and it would become law, as did the Waxman-Markey bill, how much would it reduce CO₂ emissions. She said: Well, it wouldn't reduce them. Because if we act unilaterally in the United States, then things happen where—this isn't where the problem is. In fact, we know we would have a massive exodus of our manufacturing base to such countries as China, Mexico, India, and others.

But nonetheless, here are the farmers who are concerned about this because, if you look at the cost of fertilizer, one of the major ingredients there is natural gas, and you look at the cost of diesel and everything else, it is very serious.

Bob Stallman, the president of the American Farm Bureau, just the other day said:

Increased input costs will put our farmers and ranchers at a competitive disadvantage with producers in other countries that do not have similar greenhouse gas restrictions. Any loss of international markets or resulting loss of production in the United States will encourage production overseas in countries where production methods may be less effective than in the United States.

In other words, we can do it more efficiently in the United States, but if we don't have the energy, we will not be able to do it.

So I think the farmers, of all the people who should be concerned and are concerned, the wake-up call is out there. They better be ready when they come up with allocations. The allocations will not be available to us during the next 3 days of hearings. The allocations are something that are held back in secret so they can go to different elements of the society and say: Well, you are going to have an allocation where you can be a winner. They tried this with the Wheat Growers of America early on during the Warner-Lieberman bill, and they actually endorsed the bill until they realized it was a fraud and withdrew their endorsement.

I think Senator KIT BOND said it well. They did a study in the State of Missouri, and the study found that the proposed cap-and-trade legislation will cost the average Missouri farmer an additional $11,000 a year in 2020 and more than $30,000 a year by 2050.

So let me say to Tyler and to all my friends at the Oklahoma Farm Bureau: I have your hat, and I will wear it with dignity all the way to Copenhagen to make sure this thing doesn't pass.

I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAGAN). The Republican leader is recognized.

HEALTH CARE WEEK XV, DAY I

Mr. MCCONNELL. Madam President, as the debate over health care continues, I think it is important, once again, to remind the American people that every lawmaker in Washington recognizes the need for reform. Health care costs are rising at an unsustainable rate, and if we don't get these costs under control, we can't expect to maintain the quality of care or the access to care most Americans currently enjoy. This is the primary problem with our system, and it is the primary reason our Nation is so engaged in this debate.

One of the proposed solutions for increasing access is the expansion of Medicaid. This afternoon, some of my Republican colleagues have been discussing why we, and many others from across the political spectrum, believe this is a very bad idea. The proposal that is being considered would expand Medicaid to about 14 million new people by 2019, including nearly 250,000 in my own State of Kentucky. On its face, this seems like a potentially effective way to increase the ranks of the insured. The reality is, however, it would make current problems much worse.

First of all, Medicaid is already in serious trouble. Leaving aside its exploding costs, the program is increasingly unable to match doctors with patients because a growing number of doctors refuse to see Medicaid patients. This is a serious problem already. It would be a far worse problem if the program is expanded to include millions more without any expansion in the number of doctors willing to see Medicaid patients.

So while the need to expand coverage is real, Medicaid is exactly the wrong program to choose as a foundation for achieving that goal. Senator ENZI, the ranking member of the Health Committee, put it best when he said:

Instead of trapping poor Americans in a substandard health care plan, we should be giving everyone more options to find the care they need. Senators get to choose between competing private plans; so should low-income Americans.

Another reason we shouldn't be looking to Medicaid as a solution to our problem is the States, which run the program, are begging us—begging us—not to. There is a simple reason why: The States simply don't have the money. The recession is hitting the States particularly hard, and expanding Medicaid would make their problems far worse. That is because, unlike the Federal Government in Washington, every State except one is either constitutionally or statutorily required to balance its budget. In other words, while lawmakers in Washington continue to ring up everything on the government credit card, States actually have to pay their bills at the end of the year. So if Washington tells them they have to expand Medicaid by $1 billion, that is $1 billion less they have for something else. For States, expanding Medicaid would almost certainly mean shrinking services or raising taxes in the middle of a recession.

It is easy to see why the bill writers would propose Medicaid as a solution. It is a lot easier for Washington to push its problems onto the States, but in the context of reforming health care, this makes no sense at all. Expanding Medicaid would worsen the quality of care for those who already have Medicaid, and new enrollees would be entering a system with even fewer doctors per capita than there already are. Additionally, States could very well be bankrupted by the additional cost imposed by Washington, and even if they weren't, there is no doubt services would be reduced.

This is why Governors of both parties are insisting Washington not use Medicaid as a vehicle for expanding health care. Here is a sample of what we have heard. Governor Rendell, Democrat of Pennsylvania, put it this way:

We just don't have the wherewithal to absorb it without some new revenue source.

Gov. Bill Richardson, Democrat of New Mexico, said:

We can't afford [it] and [it's] not acceptable.

Bill Bredesen, a Democrat of Tennessee, called the plan:

The mother of all unfunded mandates.

Ted Strickland, the Democratic Governor of Ohio, summed it up like this:

The States, with our financial challenges right now, are not in a position to accept additional Medicaid responsibilities.

Senators who have worked in State government also recognize the problem. That is why so many of them from both parties are expressing serious misgivings about forcing States to expand Medicaid. Take one example. Senator NELSON of Nebraska, the former Governor, has explicitly said he would not support the new mandate. As he put it:

I will not support saddling the states with further obligations . . . you can take me out of the governor's office, but you can't take the governor out of me.

Even Senators who haven't said they oppose the idea are acknowledging the problem by working behind the scenes to have their States exempted from the mandate or to have it softened, a tacit admission of what the rest of us are saying; that expanding Medicaid is bad for States and bad if the goal is better health care.

Republicans tried to keep the idea out of the final health care bill, but those attempts were rejected. It is a shame, since there are a good many ways to increase access without expanding Medicaid—ways that would lead to better care and which wouldn't harm States financially. Increasing competition would lower costs and enable those who are currently uninsured to get good private coverage, private coverage that would provide them with far greater access to the care they need than Medicaid would and which would help lower overall costs for everyone. We should look to these ideas rather than looking to Medicaid as a solution to our problems, especially since so many people from both parties are massing against the idea of expanding Medicaid.

It is not too late to seek common-sense solutions to the problem of access. All of us acknowledge the problem. Now is the time to come up with a solution that all of us—Republicans and Democrats alike—support.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. KYL. Madam President, first of all, let me associate myself with the remarks of the Republican leader just now. I came to the floor because I wanted to reflect a little bit on what the majority leader said a few moments ago at a press conference. He announced that as a result of the efforts of a couple weeks of discussions behind closed doors—namely, in his office—he and a few other Democrats in the Senate have decided on what will be in the health care reform legislation. That is the first matter I wished to discuss, briefly.

The American people were told by the President they would be a full participant in the development of the legislation. They would know what it says. They would all be on C-SPAN. They would get to see everybody hash out all the details, and they would understand what the Senate was about to do. On the contrary, what has happened is, a small group of Senators on the Democratic side went behind closed doors in the Democratic leader's office, and they have been working now for many days to put together this piece of legislation. We still don't know exactly what it says, but the majority leader has described it very generally, and he has described one of the most contentious pieces. It will have government-run insurance, he assures us. Well, government-run insurance is a very controversial concept. Obviously, that is going to be the subject of a lot of debate. But the American people have a right to understand what this is all about, what it means.

I think the first thing I would like to do is to say that Republicans are going to stand for certain principles in the consideration of this legislation. The first thing is we are going to want to know what it says. The American people have a right to know what it says. So as we find out, little by little, as the majority leader trickles out details about what is in here—or maybe one of these days we will actually get a written copy and we can read it and understand what is in it—we will share that information with the American people.

They have a right to know what it costs. Obviously, one of the things that has to happen is that the Congressional Budget Office or CBO, which has this responsibility, needs to examine the legislation, do all of its cost estimates and revenue estimates, and tell us what they think it costs. The American people have a right to know because they are very concerned about passing on the costs of this legislation to the next generation—to our kids and grandkids.

That brings up the third thing: How much will this increase the deficit? Does anybody believe that a $1 trillion health care bill is not going to increase the deficit? I don't know of anybody who doesn't believe that it is going to increase the deficit. But by how much? A week ago, we had the first vote on the health care debate, and it was on a bill to borrow $247 billion in order to ensure that physicians fees would not be cut. I am all for paying physicians. We need to pay physicians. My personal view is we need to pay them more, not less. But this legislation should have been part of the health care reform debate, because it is part of the overall cost of Medicare—for example, how much we reimburse physicians to take care of Medicare patients. No, that was going to be inconvenient because it would actually result in creating a larger deficit and, therefore, adding to our national debt. So we take that piece out and try to run it through as a separate bill—and by “we” I mean the majority leader. And he got a rude surprise. All of the Republicans said, of course, no, we should not do it that way, and 13 of his Democratic colleagues agreed. They cared about the deficit. They said: We don't want to add to the debt and, therefore, this is the wrong way to go about it. We need to find a better way.

Another question the American people need to have answered is not only how much will it cost but how much will it add to the deficit, and then how much will it add to the debt that our children and grandchildren will have to pay? Republicans believe that any legislation should provide protection to all patients, whether they be seniors on Medicare, folks relying on Medicaid, or people in the private sector. Nobody should interfere with their physician or get between them and their physician. That is a very sacred relationship—the doctor-patient relationship—and the government should not get in between that. But that is what government-run insurance is all about.

Republicans are going to insist on protection of the American people from a delay and denial of care. Why do we raise delay and denial of care? Throughout the legislation considered by the committee so far, there have been numerous provisions that will result in the delay and denial of care and, in the long run, rationing of health care. I have talked about that on the Senate floor. We will examine the legislation that has now come out from behind the majority leader's closed doors and see what kinds of protections they have built in. If it is not much different than the bills already considered, my guess is there won't be any protections. Republicans will have to again present better ideas, our alternatives, that include protections for patients from having their care delayed and denied to the point that it is even rationed.

Another thing Americans are going to want to insist on with this new spending is they are not going to pay for it indirectly in the form of higher taxes or premiums. I think No. 5 or 6 on my list is that Republicans will want to provide protections so that the increased costs of the legislation are not passed on to the American consumer in the form of higher taxes or in the form of higher premiums.

Why am I concerned about that? Because, again, the CBO, which examined the legislation before the committees already, has said that the costs imposed on the insurance companies and others in the form of higher taxes will be passed through to their customers, to the beneficiaries, in the form of higher premiums. It is inevitable that when you have these taxes imposed among competing companies, in order for them to stay in business, they are going to have to pass some of these taxes on, and they are going to pass some of the increased fees on, and they are going to pass on the premium increases that will be required for them to satisfy the various government mandates.

Another question is, exactly what are the government mandates here? What are people going to be required to do that they don't have to do today? Most people have insurance today. It works for them and they don't want it interfered with. Under this legislation, every single American will be required under law to buy a product, an insurance product—not just any product, but the product defined by the Federal Government. If the government has the authority to make you buy something and has the authority to tell you what has to be in it, it also has the authority to tell the people who create that what they can and cannot put in their product. Sure enough, that is what they have done with the insurance companies. They have said to them that you all have to offer the exact value—four different kinds of policies; you have to offer at least the middle two, and you may offer the other two, but you cannot offer any less or any more, and they all have to have the same value, and we will mandate what they have to cover. Since we are going to have a “one policy includes everybody” product, the same insurance policy will have to provide the benefits I need, the benefits you need, the benefits the occupant of the chair needs, and the benefits the American people watching this need. Some of us are old, some are young, some are male, some are female, some have illness, and some don't. You have all kinds of conditions. If we can buy our own insurance, usually we can find a policy tailored to fit our needs, and it doesn't cost as much money because it doesn't cover as many things. When you have to have one policy that covers everything for everybody for any conceivable issue, you will have a huge policy with all kinds of things covered and with the concomitant costs—namely, costs that cover all of those things—meaning a premium. That is one of the reasons premiums will be increased.

I think another thing we are going to have to find out about this legislation is, does it do what the other bills do, which is cut Medicare? This is important, because we have made a promise to America's seniors, and a lot of us have a lot of seniors in our States. I certainly do in Arizona. We have made a promise to seniors that we will provide basic care in the form of Medicare. They will have to pay a certain amount and the government will pay a certain amount, and it will provide certain benefits. Well, the seniors have said: But we think maybe our benefits are going to be cut. The President, Senator BAUCUS, and others have said: No, no, don't worry, your benefits will not be cut. The people who tell you that are trying to scare you.

Let me quote a couple of things. Last week, a USA Today-Gallup poll showed that Americans overwhelmingly oppose cutting Medicare to pay for health care reform. Sixty-one percent of Americans oppose it—almost 2 to 1 in opposition to cutting Medicare in order to pay for health care reform.

How do we know it will cut benefits and that, therefore, seniors do have a right and a reason to be concerned? Let's go again to the nonpartisan CBO. What does it say about the legislation that has been debated so far? It estimates that the cost of the most moderate bill—and there are five bills all told, and now we have a new one coming out of the leader's office we have not read yet. But of the five bills, the most moderate is the so-called Baucus bill. According to the CBO, it would cut Medicare by nearly $½ trillion—about $450 billion. What do these cuts go to?

Here are the specifics: $162.4 billion in permanent reductions for most Medicare-covered services, such as services supplied by hospitals, nursing homes, and hospice. Those are real benefits; $117.4 billion in cuts to private Medicare plans, known as Medicare Advantage. Well over 30 percent of the people on Medicare in Arizona have this Medicare Advantage-type plan. And $32.5 billion in cuts to home health care. This is something a lot of people count on, and that is a significant cut. There will be $22.3 billion in savings from a new Medicare commission that will propose automatic cuts. A lot of people laugh and say these commissions always propose cuts and Congress never ends up adopting them. That may well happen here. I know that one of two things will happen: Either we are not going to reduce expenses and we won't have enough money to pay for the new entitlement programs created by the legislation, because Congress won't follow the recommendations and adopt them, or it will and there will be real cuts in Medicare benefits. One of those things is true, and neither is a good result.

Here is what CBO said about Medicare benefits. Remember, $117.4 billion is being cut from Medicare Advantage. CBO spoke to that. It confirms in writing, and also to the members of the Finance Committee when Dr. Elmendorf appeared before us, that the value of the extra benefits offered by Medicare Advantage will drop from $135 per month to $42 per month by 2019. It gradually goes down from $135 to $42 per month. What are these benefits? They include dental care, vision care, preventive screenings, chronic care management—a whole host of things that are important for America's seniors.

What is the annual value of the reduction in benefits per enrollee? It is only $1,116. We are not cutting benefits for seniors? Only to the tune of $1,116. We are cutting benefits, and seniors have a right to be concerned.

Those who argue that Republicans should not be pointing this out to seniors—those who want to muzzle or gag us from telling seniors this will happen I suggest should consult CBO and realize that what they are asking seniors to do is beyond what they should be required to do, which is to take these kinds of cuts for a new entitlement.

Let me share some comments from some of my constituents who have actually written to me about the kinds of cuts they will suffer under this legislation. I have gotten a lot of letters. I asked my staff to compile a few so that I could share with my colleagues where they are concerned about losing drug coverage, preventive care, and a decline in the overall quality of their care. This is what they talk about. They realize you cannot cut nearly $½ trillion dollars and not cut care. That is what it is all about.

One patient wrote that the Medicare Advantage plan helps him afford the seven medications he takes every day. He said:

I have been on Medicare now for four years and . . . my Medicare Advantage plan is the best deal around for seniors. The benefits for my prescriptions are a lifesaver. I could not afford my prescriptions without my Medicare Advantage plan. Having numerous medical problems and taking over 7 prescriptions per day—that can add up.

Another senior wrote this, again, talking about the savings and preventive care that would be lost under the plans for Medicare Advantage:

Please do not cut Medicare Advantage. It provides me with so many savings on doctor visits and prescriptions, including preventive care and the Silver Sneakers fitness program.

Let me digress for a moment. We hear a lot of talk about trying to get people healthier, to take care of their own bodies, as it were, and to provide incentives for people to eat better, have a better diet, to lose weight, not to smoke, and to go to the gym and work out a little bit. When we have a program that incents seniors to do these kinds of things, we should be happy to support that program and cut it only after great consideration, if at all. I suggest that we don't cut it. This constituent talks about that kind of preventive care. He says:

I will be 77 in a few weeks. I have not had any major surgery or hospitalization (thank God) and go to the fitness center three or four times weekly—something I could not do if Medicare Advantage is cut. I urge you not to cut this very important aid to senior citizens.

Another Medicare Advantage patient wrote to explain how the extra benefits she gets help her. She said:

I have never written to anybody in Congress because I didn't feel it necessary. Now I do because of the threat to cut my Medicare Advantage Plan.

When I turned 65 three years ago, I opted for a Medicare Advantage plan. I have been well taken care of and truly like my Health Net Ruby 3 plan and want to continue on it. For a small amount of $38 extra a month, I not only get dental coverage, but also vision and benefits for a fitness program. These extra benefits have been a great savings for me, and I do not want to have them taken away. Please do not vote for a cut to my Medicare Advantage plan. I want to keep my benefits.

One more letter. This one, I thought, was especially touching. It is from a gentleman whose wife has pulmonary fibrosis and relies on Medicare Advantage for her treatments. They worry that the quality of her treatments will decline if Medicare Advantage is cut, as proposed by this legislation.

Here is what he said:

If we lose Medicare Advantage, we are in trouble. United Healthcare Secure Horizons has provided us with great doctors that understand the disease. . . . It would be disastrous if she got a lung infection and had to go on a bureaucratic waiting list rather than being able to call our primary doctor as we do now. Please do not let them cut this great program.

The reason I quoted that letter is because another one of the things that is touted as a way to bend the cost curve and provide better care in the process is to coordinate the care from the primary physician right on through to any specialists and, Heaven forbid, if an individual has to go into a hospital, have surgery, or even have posthospital care in some kind of a facility. One can see how that kind of continued or coordinated care could be a real advantage to people and also end up saving money in the long term for the individual, for the insurance company that may take care of them, or the U.S.

Government if we are paying for it as we do under Medicare Advantage, for example.

So here is a woman who talks about the fact that this kind of plan has been made available to her and why would we want to take it away. It has always been puzzling to me that because Medicare Advantage is actually administered by insurance companies, there seems to be something evil about it that a lot of our friends on the other side of the aisle would like to get rid of. They talk about having a government choice or a government option in their health care bill, but when it comes to options or choices for Medicare patients, they are not for that. They just want government only. They don't want the Medicare Advantage plan because it is actually administered by insurance companies.

What these companies do is provide a health maintenance organization-type of coverage where we have the continuum of care from the primary physician all the way through to whatever care may be required. This individual is talking about his wife being benefited by that kind of care. Why would we want to do away with that simply to save money so we can create a new entitlement? At the very time Americans are asking for better care, to ensure their care is not taken away from them, that is precisely what is being proposed by the other side.

Maybe I will be very surprised. Maybe we will finally have a chance to read the Reid bill or however the distinguished majority leader wishes to characterize it, and we will find they decided not to cut Medicare after all. If there are no Medicare cuts in the legislation, then I will be the first to come to the floor and say: Thank you. Thank you for not cutting seniors' Medicare. But if, in fact, as with the other bills that have been considered, this legislation ends up cutting Medicare anywhere from $450 billion to $500 billion, then I think the concerns that have been expressed to me by my constituents need to be taken into account, and Republicans will insist on protection for our constituents. People should not have to go through the difficulties that are projected by these real people if this legislation ends up cutting their benefits.

We just talked about a few of the things. We have additional things we are going to talk about later on this week, about the tax increases and how the tax increases are going to be passed on to all Americans, even though they may, first of all, be levied against a device manufacturer.

For example, if you have heart surgery and there is a stint that is used in your treatment, that is a very sophisticated device. There is going to be a tax on that device. You are going to get taxed on that device. It may be placed on the device itself. It will be in your bill. When you look at your hospital bill, I guarantee you they are going to be passing it on to you.

There are other taxes. By the way, if you don't buy the insurance they require you to have, you are going to get a tax on that, too, administered by the friendly IRS, which raises a whole host of other problems. To have the Internal Revenue Service endorse a provision of this law is going to require a lot more folks down at the IRS to have the authority to look into your records and talk to your doctor and figure out whether you have bought insurance. If so, is it the right kind of insurance? Is it the kind of insurance the government says you have to have? If so, they will be happy to slap a tax on you, and you will have to pay for it. That is another tax you will be required to pay. There are others. As I said, we will talk about that later this week.

Then there are the premium increases. There was a real dispute about this issue. Folks said: We are not going to increase premiums after all. The whole exercise is to reduce the cost of health care, to cut premiums.

We said: That is a wonderful goal. We said: Let's see if you can come up with a goal that actually reduces health care premiums for people.

After all this time, it turns out they cannot do it. The Congressional Budget Office—again, the nonpartisan group of accountants we in the Congress have hired to analyze the cost of all these things and the effect of them—concluded that under this legislation that has been considered in the committees, the cost of the legislation, the cost of insurance is going to go up for the average family, not go down, compared to what it is costing them today.

There have been numerous studies on this issue. One of the studies broke it down by States and by region. They said the overall national increase, by the way, would be about $3,300 per year increase cost in premium. Think about that. We are sporting a bill, the idea of which is to make health care less costly, but our insurance premiums are going to go up $3,300 and our taxes are going to go up. Do you know the reason? You cannot spend $1 trillion and add a whole lot more people to the rolls and not have it cost more money, and it will cost more money. Should it?

I think we can achieve these objectives, as I have said many times from this podium, with targeted solutions to the specific problems that exist without increasing taxes or premiums. We have demonstrated how we can do that. The study I spoke of, though, said in certain States, such as the State of Arizona from which I come, the cost is going to be far greater than $3,300. In fact, it is going to be, I believe it was some $7,400 per family per year increase. That is astounding. That is as much money as some people pay for their insurance to begin with.

This study demonstrated that the increases could be as much as 95 percent. I guess that makes sense. If it costs $8,000 for a policy today, and it is going to be increased by $7,400, that is almost a 100-percent increase. It is incredible we would think about doing that on the American people. Yet that is the result of this absolutely nonpartisan study that was done by an entity that looked into all the different factors. They didn't cherry-pick the information. I know there was another group that was criticized because the insurance industry had hired them. That is not the study of which I speak. I am talking about the Oliver Wyman study.

There are so many things about this legislation we are going to need to know and that the American people are going to need to know. We are going to have to have plenty of opportunity to both read the bill and know how much it costs. Then we need to know how much it puts us in debt.

If the answer is it is not going to put us in any more debt or create a big deficit, we will just keep raising taxes until we have enough money to take care of it, that is not the answer either. It is not the way to get out of a recession, it is not the way to help hard-working families, and it is not the way to treat people we are trying to help by reducing their health care costs.

I hope as the next several days unfold, we will be able to read this product, this bill that was written in the majority leader's office. Maybe we will be surprised that it does not raise taxes, that it does not raise premiums, that it does not reduce care or ration care, that it does not cut Medicare. But I am not going to hold my breath. My guess is it will do all of those things, and when the American people confirm that is the result of this so-called health care reform, I am not going to blame them for saying: Absolutely not. We want no part of reform if that is what you are talking about.

I am reminded of a line. I haven't tracked down where it is, so I will not attribute it. I thought it came from Charles Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities."

There was a character, Madame Defarge, who may have said this. Again, the question of the French Revolution was on their minds. This person said: "Reform? Sir, don't talk of reform. Things are bad enough already."

That is apropos to this health care debate. We have costs going up right now. We don't need them to go up any more.

As another wag put it: You think health care is expensive now, wait until it is free. We all know there is no such thing as a free lunch. The money has to come from somewhere. As it turns out, in these bills, it is going to come from seniors, people who have private insurance and subsidize those on government insurance, and it is going to come from all taxpayers, including those who make less than $200,000 a year, who the President said would not be taxed. A large percentage of the money, I think 87 percent in one case, will come from people making less than $100,000 per year. Some of the tax provisions specifically impact primarily people who make less than $50,000 a year. Health care reform should be about making it better for the American people, not making it worse.

It is going to be very interesting when we finally have an opportunity to review the legislation that was created behind closed doors to see whether it is going to pass these tests. We want to read it. We want to know how much it costs. We want to know that it is not going to add to the deficit or the debt. We are going to want to know that it will not result in the delay and denial of our care. In effect, we are going to want to know that the protections that are important for our constituents are in place.

I think there are some better ways to do this. Again, we will talk about those another day. We have already talked about them.

In the event you are saying, what kind of ideas are the Republicans talking about, I will mention one and stand down here.

We have been talking a lot about health care premiums and health care costs because doctors have to practice defensive medicine because if they are not careful, if they do not order a lot of tests, send their patients to a lot of different specialists, they are liable to get sued for malpractice. With this jackpot justice system we have, it costs a lot of money. The defensive medicine some have said can amount to $100 billion or well over $100 billion a year. There are two studies that put it over $200 billion a year. Another study said just the cost of malpractice insurance premiums for doctors represents 10 cents on every health care dollar spent.

If we could reform medical malpractice laws, we could not only make the delivery of health care less expensive, we could make it less difficult for physicians to do what they consider to be the right thing without fear of getting sued, and we could dramatically reduce the cost of health care premiums. This is a way to solve three problems that need to be solved, not cost a dime and, in fact, generate a huge amount of savings.

Why wouldn't we want to do this? As former Governor Dean of Vermont, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said on August 17 of this year at a townhall meeting in Virginia: The reason we haven't tackled medical liability reform is that we don't want to take on the trial lawyers.

I understand that. He is right. The Democratic majority did not want to take on the trial lawyers. But that is exactly what is wrong with Washington today.

We know what the problems are, we know what a lot of the fixes are, but we wouldn't want to take on the special interests such as the trial lawyers because that would not be good for us politically.

Republicans are saying: Yes, we do. It is time to take on those special interests. It is time to focus solutions on specific problems rather than trying to reform the entire health care system, including with a big government-run insurance company, in order to solve a problem that can be solved in a less intrusive way, less government intervention, less government expenditure, more private freedom, more money left in our pockets, and a greater assurance at the end of the day that we are going to continue to receive high-quality health care and not have it denied to us because of someone sitting in Washington, DC.

I urge my colleagues, as the days go forward, not only to review this legislation for themselves but to share those results with our constituents. They are the people for whom we work. They are the people we represent. They need to know what is in it. They need to know how much it will cost. They need to know it will not add to the deficit. They need to know it will not affect their health care. They need to know they will be protected and their benefits will not be cut, and they will be protected. It is up to us to provide that protection for them.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HATE CRIMES

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I have sought recognition, briefly, to talk about the legislation on hate crimes, which was passed last Thursday as part of the Defense authorization bill, and to note the very different attitude which is present today than was present in 1997, when Senator Kennedy first took the lead in introducing hate crimes legislation, which I co-sponsored with him at that time as well as Senators John Chafee, James Jeffords and Alfonse D'Amato, the only Republicans who appeared on the bill at that time.

There was some substantial opposition, very little appreciation of the effort to expand hate crimes to include sexual orientation and also disability. Even the Washington Post had an editorial on November 17 raising questions about the wisdom of the legislation which we had introduced.

One of the concerns raised by the Post was that:

A victim of a biased-motivated stabbing is no more dead than someone stabbed during a mugging.

It seems to me, that missed the point. But even the Washington Post, at that time, challenged the rationale for expanding hate crimes. The Post also raised a comment about the disturbing aspect of the legislation is the lower threshold for Federal involvement, in any case.

Having had some experience as a district attorney, and knowing the practices of district attorneys having jurisdiction over a county—for example, my job was both the city and county of Philadelphia—that DAs do not have, in some areas, a very broad perspective.

Where the climate for a district attorney, an elected position, is not conducive to pursuing someone who has undertaken something which has a racial bias, a racial motivation or a motivation for a difference in sexual orientation, the cases are not brought.

That is precisely the kind of an area which warrants hate crimes legislation on the Federal level. But it has been a long battle, and the issue went through quite a few conferences. Thanks to the leadership of our distinguished majority leader, Senator HARRY REID, we have persisted. Senator REID has kept this issue front and center in the Senate, and Senator LEAHY, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and I in the past, in 2005–2006 in the 109th Congress, were pushing ahead on hate crimes legislation.

Senator LEVIN, as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, is to be commended for fighting it through and finally getting it through the conference. So it is quite a landmark move that the Congress has finally acted on it as we did last Thursday. There is a recognition that the Post was off base when it said:

A victim of bias-motivated stabbing is no more dead than someone stabbed during a mugging.

That suggests a misunderstanding of hate crimes, as Senator Kennedy and I wrote in an op-ed that:

Random street crimes don't provoke riots; hate crimes can and sometimes do.

A hate crime is broader than simply an attack against a victim, against the African American who was dragged through the streets in a small town in Texas which gave rise to the impetus for hate crimes legislation or the brutal attack on Matthew Shepherd in Wyoming. So this legislation is highly significant.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Washington Post editorial of November 17, 1997, and the reply op-ed piece by Senator Kennedy and myself, dated December 1, 1997, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE "HATE CRIME" PROBLEM

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 17, 1997]

Bill Clinton, at a White House conference last week, declared his support for a proposal by Sens. Edward Kennedy and Arlen Specter to broaden federal jurisdiction over that category of violence dubbed "hate crime." Federal law already permits judges to lengthen the sentences of defendants convicted of such crimes, defined as those in which a victim is targeted because of a particular identity. The Hate Crimes Prevention Act would go a step further than merely toughening sentences; it would significantly widen the Justice Department's latitude to prosecute local violent crimes that were motivated by bigotry. The bill is a can of worms.

The proposal is crafted as an amendment to a civil rights statute that makes it a crime to interfere violently with anyone's exercise of certain federally protected activities because of that person's race, religion or ethnicity. This law sometimes has enabled the federal government to prosecute violent civil rights abuses when state authorities were unable or unwilling to do so. The new proposal would add a section explicitly including sexual preference, gender and disability status within the law and allowing the government to prosecute bias-motivated attacks even when the victims are not engaged in a federally protected activity. It would open the door, proponents concede, for certain rapes and domestic violence cases to be prosecuted federally as hate crimes.

Folding sexual preference into the protection of the existing statute is clearly a good idea. The civil rights of gays and lesbians, after all, are sometimes targeted violently, and the federal government's anachronistic lack of authority to punish perpetrators of these assaults should be corrected. The disturbing aspect of the legislation is the lower threshold for federal involvement in any case. The government has an abiding interest in preventing attacks on the civil rights of its citizens. On the other hand, rape, murder and assault—no matter what prejudice motivates the perpetrator—are presumptively local matters in which the federal government should intervene only when it has a pressing interest. The fact that hatred lurks behind a violent incident is not, in our view, an adequate federal interest. The other conditions for federal involvement outlined in the proposal could prove too malleable to the Justice Department's desire to involve itself in a given case. We don't suggest that the proposal would lead to widespread federal involvement in routine criminal matters, but it is too permissive—and for the wrong reason.

The president's White House Conference on Hate Crimes, as it turned out, was less a discussion of these offenses than a kind of pep rally against the dreaded emotion itself.

That's fine as a bully-pulpit exercise, but the federal focus on what are called hate crimes must not wander too far from criminality. While the government has a simple obligation to protect us from crime, its relationship with hatred is necessarily more complicated. Government officials can denounce hatred and pass anti-discrimination laws, but when push comes to shove, most expressions of ugly intolerance are protected by the First Amendment. Proponents of the new measure argue that a swastika painted on a synagogue has a deeper impact on a community than does a routine act of vandalism, and that's true as far as it goes. But the victim of a bias-motivated stabbing is no more dead than someone stabbed during a mugging. Ultimately, we prosecute crimes, not feelings. Guiding how people feel about one another is only marginally a law enforcement concern.

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 1, 1997]

WHEN COMBATING HATE SHOULD BE A FEDERAL FIGHT

(By Edward M. Kennedy and Arlen Specter)

The Post's Nov. 17 editorial criticizing the measure we have introduced on hate crimes reflects a misunderstanding of our proposal to close the gaps in federal law and a failure to recognize the profound impact of hate crimes.

Hate crimes are uniquely destructive and divisive because they injure not only the immediate victim, but the community and sometimes the nation. The Post's contention that a victim of a bias-motivated stabbing is no more dead than someone stabbed during a mugging suggests a distressing misunderstanding of hate crimes. Random street crimes don't provoke riots; hate crimes can and sometimes do.

The federal government has a role in dealing with these offenses. Although states and local governments have the principal responsibility for prosecuting hate crimes, there are exceptional circumstances in which it is appropriate for the federal government to prosecute such cases.

Hate crimes often are committed by individuals with ties to groups that operate across state lines. The Confederate Hammerskins are a skinhead group that began terrorizing minorities and Jews in Tennessee, Texas and Oklahoma a decade ago.

Federal law enforcement authorities are well situated to investigate and prosecute criminal activities by such groups, and the federal government has taken the lead in successfully prosecuting these skinheads.

Hate crimes disproportionately involve multiple offenders and multiple incidents and in such cases, overriding procedural considerations—including gaps in state laws—may justify federal prosecution.

In Lubbock, Tex., three white supremacists attempted to start a local race war in 1994 by shooting three African American victims, one fatally, in three separate incidents in 20 minutes. Under Texas law, each defendant would have been entitled to a separate trial in a state court, and each defendant also might have been entitled to a separate trial for each shooting. The result could have been at least three, and perhaps as many as nine trials, in the state courts, and the defendants, if convicted, would have been eligible for parole in 20 years. They faced a mandatory life sentence in federal court.

Federal and local prosecutors, working together, decided to deal with these crimes under federal laws. The defendants were tried together in federal court, convicted and are serving mandatory life sentences. The victims and their families were not forced to relive their nightmare in multiple trials.

Federal involvement in the prosecutions of hate crimes dates back to the Reconstruction Era following the Civil War. These laws were updated a generation ago in 1968, but they are no longer adequate to meet the current challenge. As a result, the federal government is waging the battle against hate crimes with one hand tied behind its back.

Current federal law covers crimes motivated by racial, religious or ethnic prejudice. Our proposal adds violence motivated by prejudice against the sexual orientation, gender or disability of the victim. Our proposal also makes it easier for federal authorities to prosecute racial violence, in the same way that the Church Arson Prevention Act of 1996 helped federal prosecutors deal with the rash of racially motivated church arsons.

The suggestion in the editorial that our bill tramples First Amendment rights is ludicrous. Our proposal applies only to violent acts, not hostile words or threats. Nobody can seriously suggest that the neo-Nazis who murdered Fred Mangione in a Houston nightclub last year because they "wanted to get a fag" were engaged in a constitutionally protected freedom of speech.

In addition, hate-crimes prosecution under our bill must be approved by the attorney general or another high-ranking Justice Department official, not just by local federal prosecutors. This ensures federal restraint and that states will continue to take the lead in prosecuting hate crimes.

From 1990 through 1996, there were 37 federal hate crimes prosecutions nationwide under the law we are amending—fewer than six a year out of more than 10,000 hate crimes nationwide. Our bill should result in a modest increase in the number of federal prosecutions of hate crimes.

When Congress passed the Hate Crimes Statistics Act in 1990, we recognized the need to document the scope of hate crimes. We now know enough about the problem, and it is time to take the next step.

As the Lubbock prosecution shows, combating hate crimes is not exclusively a state or local challenge or a federal challenge. It is a challenge best addressed by federal, state and local authorities working together. Our proposal gives all prosecutors another tool in their anti-crime arsenal. The issue is tolerance, and the only losers under our proposal will be the bigots who seek to divide the country through violence.

Mr. SPECTER. An additional comment or two. We have seen times change with respect to don't ask, don't tell. When this was put into operation, it seemed to me at the time—and I have said repeatedly in the intervening decade-plus that don't ask, don't tell has been in effect—that it has outlived its usefulness, its utility. I do not know that it ever had utility, but, if so, it certainly ought to be changed now.

There are men and women, regardless of sexual orientation, who serve with bravery and distinction in the military. Don't ask, don't tell ought to be repealed. There are limits as to what the President may be able to do through an executive order. So where congressional action is warranted, let it be enacted.

On a somewhat similar tone, times have changed with the Defense of Marriage Act since it was enacted back in 1996. Now we have seen the States of Connecticut, Iowa, and Massachusetts have legalized same-sex marriage. It is an issue where attitudes have changed very considerably. I think, just as we were finally able to get hate crimes legislation through, just as it is time to move ahead and move beyond don't ask don't tell, it is time to repeal the Defense of Marriage Act.

In the absence of any other Senator right now seeking recognition, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SMALL BUSINESS INSURANCE PREMIUM INCREASES

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, yesterday I got a call from my friend and my colleague from Pennsylvania, Senator SPECTER. He said: Have you read the New York Times yet?

I said: Well, no, as a matter of fact I have not.

He said: Well, there was a front page story in the New York Times on Sunday about what was happening with small businesses, in terms of their insurance rates going up unduly, huge increases.

I said: Well, no, I have not read about it. I will get the paper and read it.

It struck a chord with me because somehow, over the last several weeks, I have gotten an influx of inquiries to me personally and also into my office from small businesses in Iowa, some elsewhere but mostly from my State, wondering what was happening to the huge increases in their premiums this year.

They have always been used to increases in premiums, but these seemed unduly large. Plus, a lot of copays and deductibles were going up. So I went out and got the newspaper and read the story in the New York Times that Senator SPECTER pointed out to me. It was alarming.

As I said, I thought about all the inquiries that had come into any office. I said: Something is going on out there. Something is going on out there. So we have this health care bill now, reform, that will be going down to CBO, I guess today, for scoring.

I wish to commend Senator REID for his leadership. I was actually in Pittsburgh today giving a lecture on disability policy at the University of Pittsburgh law school, with former Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, who had endowed the law school with an endowment. They have a very strong legal scholarship program dealing with disability law at the University of Pittsburgh law school.

So I rushed back from there so I could be on the floor with Senator SPECTER to talk about this a little bit because there is something very funny going on.

When I was in the airport, I saw Senator REID had said he was sending the bill down to CBO for scoring. I commend Senator REID for his leadership and for putting in a strong public option. I am told it is basically the public option the Senator from North Carolina worked so hard on in the committee to develop. I guess he married that up with the provisions from the Finance Committee bill that would allow States to opt out by 2014. I commend Senator REID for putting that strong public option in the bill. The vast majority of the American people want that. They see it as necessary for trying to keep some control on cost and leaving more choice and more competition for policyholders.

As a matter of fact, this would be a great help to small businesses, because small businesses could go on the exchange, and they would have that public option also available to them. I have said many times: The two biggest winners I can see in the health reform bill are small businesses and the self-employed. Small businesses are at the end of the line. They have been whipsawed all over the place. They have no bargaining power. The same with the self-employed. This bill will turn the tables by providing the exchanges and providing more help for small businesses. They will be much better able to negotiate and to pick and choose among different policies rather than what they have now.

Now in many cases they get one or two, and that is about it in a lot of States, one or two different insurance companies. In the New York Times article, some suggest the insurance companies are raising their rates to generate as much revenue as possible before health reform obliges them to change the way they do business.

Isn't that interesting. They are anticipating health reform passing so they want to jack up their premiums as much as possible before that happens. Others assert the industry is responding to Wall Street's demands for ever higher profits in the health insurance industry, that Wall Street is putting pressure on them to increase profit margins.

Again, I always have to ask: Why are we doing health reform? Are we doing health reform to help the health insurance industry or are we doing health reform to help the American people? That had to be our first response, that we are here to help the American people, not to help the health insurance industry.

I have had many small businesses tell me how tough it has been. I have a small newspaper in Iowa with 12 employees. The owner Art Cullen recently turned 50. Their insurance premiums for his small business jumped by 58 percent in 1 year and more than 100 percent in 2 years. They have a $5,000 deductible.

I asked Art: Why don't you get another company? He said: I can't. I only have one in this area that will offer insurance. So that is why we need the exchanges, why we need health reform, so that Art Cullen and his small business can join with other small businesses on these exchanges to get a better deal.

Mike Landeur owns a muffler shop. He has 10 employees. He offers insurance to them, but his premiums have jumped 66 percent in the last 3 years. His deductibles have gone from $4,000 to $16,000. Mike is expensive. He was born with a congenital heart disease, so he dropped himself from his company's policy. He is the owner, taking himself out of the pool. But he can't get any kind of individual insurance because of his preexisting condition. Now he is worried he will have to sell the small business, all because of excessive health insurance costs.

This is unconscionable. As we speak, the majority leader is sending his bill down to CBO. And make no mistake, the bill we are bringing to the floor will offer real solutions for small businesses. It will enable them to purchase insurance through an exchange so they can choose among multiple plans at lower costs than are now available in the small group market. Small businesses and the self-employed can go on the exchanges and, if they want, they also are eligible for the public option.

It will sharply reduce administrative overhead that drives up the cost of insurance through such practices and medical underwriting and preexisting condition exclusion clauses. We provide a new small business tax credit to make insurance more affordable for the most vulnerable small businesses. We make new investments in wellness and disease prevention for all businesses, including small businesses.

In addition, we will put a stop to the outrageous and unacceptable insurance industry practices that harm the ability of small employers to cover their workers. We will require that insurance companies document how much of each premium dollar is going for medical expenses. We will require that insurance companies document how much of each premium dollar goes for medical expenses, and we are going to require rebates for excessive overhead charges. We will end the broken status quo where insurance executives make tens of millions of dollars in salaries and bonuses while their small business customers go out of business because they can't afford health insurance. We will end the exceptional and unwarranted antitrust exemptions the industry has enjoyed without public benefit for far too long. We will end the ability of insurers to jack up premiums by as much as 160 percent, which is what they did for one small business, because they thought the group was "getting too old." Therefore, they jacked up their premiums by 160 percent.

I thank Senator SPECTER for having a keen eye and for giving me a heads up on this yesterday. There is something happening out there right now all over this country. Small businesses are being inundated with higher costs and huge increases in their insurance premiums. To America's small business community, we have a simple message: Help is on the way. We will get this health reform bill done, and we are going to help small businesses and the self-employed.

I hope they can hang on long enough so we can get this bill through, hopefully before the end of the year, so that next year when their policies are up for renewal, we won't see these kinds of huge increases and gouging of small businesses.

We need reform. We always think about it in terms of individuals and how this affects individuals. But we also think about how it affects the majority of workers who work for small businesses who don't have the kind of large group power that maybe big businesses and bigger industries have. That is why this health reform bill is so important for everyone, but none more so than the small businesses and the self-employed.

I am hopeful, along with Senator SPECTER, that we can bring some more of this to light. I encourage anyone who has any evidence, stories, anything we can document of what the increases are to small businesses, please get them in to us. I have heard about enough of these to know it is not just a few here and there. It must be more widespread. We need those. Hopefully, we can shed more light on this as we move forward to bring the bill to the floor.

I thank my colleague for his leadership and for bringing this out. I look forward to working with him to try to help small businesses in Pennsylvania, Iowa, and everywhere else.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Before commenting further on the article in the New York Times, some of the things the distinguished chairman of the HELP Committee has said, it would be my hope that we would proceed, as Senator HARKIN related. I got hold of him yesterday morning after noting the Sunday Times, and then we proceeded to talk about a hearing which I hope we can do promptly. One of the witnesses whom I would like to see called, subject to the approval of the chairman, is Walter Rowen of the Susquehanna Glass Company in Columbia, PA who sought to renew his company's coverage for 2,000 employees and found out that the premiums had gone up by 160 percent. I talked to Mr. Rowen this afternoon and got more of the details of his situation.

As Senator HARKIN has commented, this is typical of a great many. Right in the middle of where we are now on this debate on the public option, I believe the case for the public option, a robust public option, would be strengthened materially to document what the New York Times has said. Right now it is a newspaper article. It is a little different when there is a Senate hearing on the subject and you bring in people such as Walter Rowen who have demand for a 160-percent increase, and you question the insurance companies on what they are doing. If the New York Times is accurate, that small businesses will be asked to pay about a 15-percent increase for the next year—and this is substantially higher, and in a moment or two I will go through some of the specific quotations—and that they are responding to Wall Street because Wall Street is demanding more profits from their investors—that is specified in the article, and I will take it up in detail—and the comment is that the insurance companies are more frightened about Wall Street than they are about Congress. I suppose that was surprising to me that in the context of the times, the way Congress is moving ahead on comprehensive health care reform, insurance reform, that they at this point should be more concerned about Wall Street than Congress. I think Wall Street ought to be more concerned about Congress than insurance companies. I think Congress is finally going to act on quite a number of the abuses in so many lives. But if we are seeing here action by Wall Street pressuring the insurance companies to raise their profits before Congress acts, then we ought to find out. If there is any justification for insurance companies to raise their premiums, let's have them tell us. Let's bring in the insurance companies.

There are a lot of these famous pictures of a half a dozen corporate executives standing in front of a congressional hearing room, raising their right hands and swearing to tell the truth. And then we have some questions for them. I have questions for them. Why the increase? Is there an increase because health care costs have gone up?

One of the experts quoted in the New York Times article says 23 percent. Mr. Rowen faces 160 percent. Is there any justification except profiteering and acting ahead of congressional action?

I hope Senator HARKIN will have the hearing promptly. It will bolster the case for the public option. It will bolster the case to have alternatives to the private sector. What is often misunderstood is that the public option does not eliminate the private sector. The public option is what it says. It is an option, another course, another thing one can choose. It is precisely this kind of response to Wall Street—and I will not prejudge it until we hear the witnesses and have them sworn in and take their testimony—if it is true, that reemphasizes the need to have some competition, to have competition which will not knuckle to Wall Street. A public option will not knuckle to Wall Street. We have talked informally. It is not easy to get a hearing organized fast, but Senator HARKIN and I, as is well known, passed the gavel on the chairmanship of the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. We can proceed. I submit that now is the time to do so.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I thank the Senator again for bringing this to light and urging us. I think we do need information. We do need to bring them in and check on what is happening with small business. We need to bring in some small businesses, some representatives of small businesses. I think we need to bring in some of those insurance people, find out what is going on here. How come premiums are going up so much this year? I think we were in a recession, were we not?

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I have seen Senator HARKIN cross-examine, and it is a sight to see.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I am not in the former prosecutor's league in that regard, I can say that. But we are working on that. As the Senator knows, sometimes it is tough to get these hearings put together. But hopefully we will have something we can pull together by next week.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I thank the chairman for that statement. Next week would be about right because it would come right as we are considering this legislation. I think it would shed a lot of light on the legislation and be a big boost for the public option.

I thank my colleague.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I refer to some of the specifics in the New York Times article. Again, I cite this as a newspaper article. It is hearsay in an article, but we will have the hearings to find out the facts. But this is what some of the details in the article say: that small businesses "are seeing premiums go up an average of about 15 percent for the coming year—double the rate of last year's increase"; big employers "have more negotiating clout." "[S]ome experts say they think the insurance industry" is "under pressure from Wall Street" to raise its "premiums to get ahead of any legislative changes that might reduce their profits."

Well, if that is so, we ought to find out about it. And if they have a justification for the price increases, let them tell us what it is. Let them produce their books and records if they have a justifiable basis for their increase.

The New York Times article goes on to point out that "Edward Kaplan, a consultant with the Segal Company, said his clients were seeing renewals for coverage at prices 15 to 23 percent higher this year," where "they typically faced increases" in the past "of 7 to 12 percent."

Joshua Miley, a consultant with HighRoads, which analyzes benefit information for employers, said the "undercurrent of health reform is driving part of the renewal increases."

The article goes on to point out:

There is no question that insurers are under pressure from Wall Street . . . they have heard from angry investors disappointed by the companies' earnings.

The article further states:

While the industry is particularly vulnerable now in Washington, she said—

"She," meaning Sheryl Skolnick, an analyst for Pali Capital, referring to the insurance companies—

"it seems like they're more afraid of Wall Street."

The article goes on to point out that:

In August, when Walter Rowen, who owns Susquehanna Glass [Company] in Columbia, Pa., sought to renew his company's coverage for two dozen employees, he said his insurer demanded a 160 percent rate increase.

I called Mr. Rowen today and found out that he has had a family business since 1910, and they have had health insurance for about 20 years, and they cover 50 percent of the premiums for their employees. As prices have risen, they have sought deductibles to lower the rate, and then they paid the deductibles for their employees. It is cheaper to have deductibles, have the company pay them, than to pay the increase in costs. That is another factor which we ought to analyze. That ought not to be so.

His policy expired in October—this month—and he corroborated the New York Times story that he was told there would be 160 percent more. He has found other insurance, but he is paying $22,000 annually. He hires invariably in the 28 to 32 category for small business, and between 20 and 24 of them are covered. Now he has been forced to go to the point where the employees are going to have to pay the deductible. If they do not have an illness, then there is no problem. If they do, then the deductible is obviously very, very expensive.

I join my colleague, the senior Senator from Iowa, in congratulating the—now he is the junior Senator from Iowa, pardon me, but close—he has been here since the election of 1984, a long time. I join Senator HARKIN in congratulating the majority leader for moving ahead with a public option in the legislation which he has melded together. I again thank Senator HARKIN for his initiative and willingness to move ahead and have a hearing.

Madam President, I have an excellent floor statement which I will not take the time to read, prepared by my expert in the field, John Myers, which I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the statement be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I ask that the full explanation which I am giving now be included. Sometimes the written statement just follows the oral extemporaneous statement and people reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD wonder why the Senator has repeated himself. Well, let it be understood what I have said is an extemporaneous statement, and this is the text prepared by my able staff assistant, and would ask that these comments be the preface to be included in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, yesterday the New York Times ran a front page article describing the difficulties faced by small businesses in the face of rising health costs [Small Business Faces Sharp Rise in Costs of Health Care; October 25, 2009]. Small business is the backbone of our economy and in today's economy we must ensure that small business has every opportunity to succeed.

The article highlights the plight of Walter Rowen, a constituent of mine. Mr. Rowen is the owner of Susquehanna Glass in Columbia, Pennsylvania. In August, when he sought to renew his company's coverage for his two dozen employees, his insurer demanded a 160 percent rate increase. He was told his work force was "getting too old and very expensive". He also found that any other health plan was likely to charge 30 to 50 percent more than he paid last year. Left with few options, Walter chose a less generous plan from a different carrier for 44 percent more.

Unfortunately, Mr. Rowen's story is not unique. Steep rises in insurance premiums are affecting small businesses across the nation. Small businesses are seeing renewal prices 15-23 percent higher compared to last year, according to Edward Kaplan, a benefits consultant with the Segal Company. As increases from 2008 to 2009 were considerably lower at 7-12 percent, it is hard to believe that a doubling of the rate of renewal costs in 1 year could be linked to medical costs alone. In the article Joshua Miley, a consultant who analyzes benefit information for employers, states that the undercurrent of health reform is driving part of the renewal increases. The idea that health insurance companies would increase rates to beneficiaries based on pending health care reform is disturbing. Michael A. Turpin, a former senior executive for United Health, and now a top official at USI holdings, an insurance brokerage firm, echoes Mr. Wiley's hypothesis: Insurance companies are "under so much pressure to post earnings, they're going to make hay while the sun is shining."

Clearly the primary concern of health insurers is not whether their customers receive the best possible health care for their money; it is how much money can be generated for the insurers' investors. This objectionable action illustrates why there is a need for a public option as part of health care reform. Currently, there is a lack of competition in the health insurance market. Instead of individuals or businesses having the freedom to shop for coverage that works for them, they have to take what insurance companies offer. This translates to higher prices, preexisting condition exclusions and denials when insurance is most needed. A public option can help by introducing competition across the country. This plan could constrain costs and make the insurers think twice about passing down double-digit rate increases to customers.

The American people deserve a choice in health insurance to keep the private insurers honest. Without competition from a public plan, health insurance costs have skyrocketed. As health reform moves forward, I encourage Majority Leader REID to include a public option to bring affordability and competition back to the market.

A recent survey conducted by Intuit Inc. revealed that 44 percent of small business owners intended to hire new employees in the next year, an encouraging indicator in our economic recovery. This survey also noted that nearly 90 percent of those small business owners surveyed said that health insurance benefits are integral to attracting good workers. However, 58 percent of those small employers do not offer health insurance, with nearly 50 percent stating that they can't afford it. This is a sobering statistic and one we should do everything in our power to address.

I commend the efforts of Chairmen HARKIN and BAUCUS to combat this issue. Proposed health reform legislation will include a tax credit for small businesses that provide health insurance to their employees. The HELP Committee bill provides a tax credit for small businesses of up to $2,000 for a family or $1,000 for an individual. The legislation will allow small businesses to join health insurance exchanges so that they can group together and gain the same market power as larger companies currently enjoy. Currently, perhaps most importantly, small businesses pay up to 18 percent more than large employers. These exchanges will help relieve the problem of small risk pools, which due to their size can see their costs grow significantly if one employee suffers an illness such as cancer. By increasing the size of these risk pools, costs will become more predictable and more affordable for small businesses. Proposed legislation will also tighten insurance ratings to prevent costs from being disproportionately placed on older workers. This is of particular importance for small businesses that might employ older individuals, an important part of our Nation's workforce.

There is an undeniable need to address the health care problems we suffer from today. The inequities of the current system must be fixed, especially for the 70 million people that are employed by or operate a small business. The decisions of health insurers to drastically increase health insurance prices before health reform is enacted demonstrates the need to promptly move forward with legislation that includes a public option.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I thank the Chair.

TRIBUTE TO ROZITA VILLANUEVA LEE

Mr. REID. Madam President, I rise today to honor Rozita Villanueva Lee for her many years of advocacy on behalf of the Nevada Asian American/Pacific Islander community. Asians and Pacific Islanders refer to her as the mother of their communities in southern Nevada. Lee started as a former special assistant to former Governors George Arioshi of Hawaii and Robert Miller of Nevada. She then began advocating for Nevada's Asian and Pacific Islanders. Her Hawaii Polynesian connection led to her being the producer of "Drums of the Island," the longest running Polynesian show on the Las Vegas strip.

As cofounder of the Asian Pacific's Forum in 1993 in response to the growing Asian Pacific Islander population and their need for a voice and representation, she championed many causes to address the challenges faced by her community including social justice advocacy and political representation. She was often the first person called regarding issues of the APIA community in Las Vegas. Lee helped facilitate the reorganization of a dormant Pacific Asian Chamber to what is now the Las Vegas Asian Chamber of Commerce serving as its founding chairperson. She also served as chairperson for the Philippine American Youth Organization, PAYO, helping the younger generation of Filipino ancestry establish a voice and an avenue to learn more about their culture and heritage. She fulfilled all these roles while serving as the conduit for many organizations including the Hawaiian Civic Club, Japanese American Citizens League, Organization of Chinese Americans and National Federation of Filipino American Association. In addition, she empowered cultural organization and their leaders within the Korean, Thai, Vietnamese, Indian, Pakistani and other APIA ethnic communities.

Rozita has been politically active also. She was the president of the Women's Democratic Club of Clark County and was leading her fellow Democrats to help bring about change. As a result, President Obama turned Nevada blue by winning Clark County with 380,765 votes. Mrs. Lee championed the Asian American Studies Bill in the Nevada State Legislature which was instituted by the Clark County Commission and became law. She has been actively serving as the chairperson for the Asian Pacific American Labor Alliance—APALA—in southern Nevada and has been the prime mover of political activism with the APIA for more than a decade. She initiated the first outreach to establish an APIA voting block through education and voter registration and was the liaison between the Philippine Ambassador and the Senate on behalf of the Filipino World War II Veterans. It is clear that Rozita is a dedicated community activist.

Rozita Villanueva Lee was named one of the most influential women in Las Vegas by the Women of Diversity, and one of 100 most influential Filipina women in the U.S. by Filipina Women's Network. The OCA Asian Pacific American organization awarded Rozita the Lifetime Achievement Award in 2007. I congratulate Rozita Lee on her success as a businesswoman, a Democratic activist, and as an advocate for Asian and Pacific Islanders.

CONSUMER CREDIT

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Madam President, I rise today to discuss an issue of importance to all American consumers who rely on credit cards, especially during our economic downturn. More specifically, I would like to address two pieces of critically important legislation that would help consumers.

First, last week I introduced legislation to move up the effective date of credit card reforms outlined in the Credit CARD Act, which was signed into law by President Obama in May. The act gave credit card issuers nine months from the date of enactment to phase out their most egregious practices, including arbitrarily raising interest rates, raising interest rates on existing balances, and charging interest on debt paid on time—the latter a particularly underhanded tactic known as double-cycle billing.

Rather than phasing out these practices before the new requirements take effect, credit card issuers have increased them, squeezing as much as they can out of American consumers prior to the date the reforms are scheduled to go into effect. A Pew Charitable Trusts study to be released later this week will reveal that through the first 6 months of this year, the 12 largest credit card issuers raised interest rates an average of 20 percent, with many cardholders seeing rate increases in excess of 20 percent. This is happening despite the fact that these credit card companies, many of which received taxpayer bailout funds, are reaping the benefit—some might say government subsidy—of Federal interest rates at or near zero percent.

The bill I introduced last week, the Expedited CARD Reform for Consumers Act of 2009, will move the effective date of enactment for all reforms required under the Credit CARD Act to December 1, 2009. The majority of reforms are currently due to go into effect on February 22, 2010, with a few other reforms due to go into effect on August 22, 2010.

We all know how important short-term credit is to families and small businesses, especially during hard economic times. And we have all heard stories of people who have been victimized by the kind of unfair practices that the Credit CARD Act will end. But the truth is I have heard more stories from my constituents about these unfair and deceptive practices since the President signed the Credit CARD Act into law, than I did in the months leading up to the bill's passage. And that's saying something.

Through no fault of their own, many Coloradans have been victimized by their credit card issuer. For example, a constituent named Jean from Commerce City wrote to me:

Recently, CitiBank raised my [credit card] APR to 29.99 percent. I called and found out that they did not raise my rate because I'm late, or have a bad FICO score, but because they sent me a letter with the option to opt OUT of a higher interest rate. I've had this card for over 15 years and never been late. I don't understand how taxpayers gave banks taxpayer money, banks report record profits, and banks still feel they can [take unfair advantage of] the common Joe. Basically our credit card companies took away our available credit and then raised our credit card rates even though we made payments on time. Please help the citizens of this country instead of helping the few executives at these banks. We really need your help, and in the long run this will help our country.

Likewise, northern Colorado small business owner Ginny Teel, whose company 10 til 2 helps pair businesses with professionals looking for part-time work, recently took to the airwaves to tell a similar story. In a Denver television news story, Ginny reported how her credit card company is doubling her interest rate, from 11 percent to 22 percent, for no reason. Like many small businesses, Ginny relied on her credit card to get her business up and running. In the letter to inform her of the rate increase, Wells Fargo states: "These changes are not a reflection of how you managed your account with us or your credit score." In other words, her credit card issuer is saying it is doubling her interest rate because it still can.

I have heard from hundreds of Coloradans with similar stories since the Credit CARD Act was passed.

For many American families and small businesses, credit cards are more than a convenience, they are a necessity. Short-term credit is sometimes the only way that families can pay for necessities or that small businesses can function. And a well-functioning credit card industry that treats its customers with fairness is absolutely essential to rebuilding our economy.

I first introduced legislation to end unfair and abusive credit card practices in 2005 as a Member of the House of Representatives, and I was honored to be a part of finally passing real reform earlier this year. But I am equally disappointed that credit card issuers would now bleed American consumers for as much as they can prior to the reforms taking effect.

My legislation is supported by consumer advocate organizations, including the member organizations of Americans for Fairness in Lending, as well as the National Small Business Association, whose members, like Ginny Teel, increasingly rely on credit cards for their small business needs.

During debate on the Credit CARD Act earlier this year, credit card companies told Congress they needed more time to implement the bill's reforms, and Congress accommodated them. Rather than phase out these practices, however, credit card companies have used this extra time to declare open season on their customers. If credit card companies can increase abuse on a moment's notice, then surely they can end consumer abuse in short order.

Credit card issuers have shown they cannot be trusted to act in the interest of the American consumer. It is time to force credit card companies to finally deal honestly with American taxpayers and comply with the reforms passed earlier this year.

I thank Senators SCHUMER, HARKIN, LEVIN, BINGAMAN, TESTER, and MERKLEY for cosponsoring the Expedited CARD Reform for Consumers Act. In addition, along with Senate Banking Committee Chairman DODD, today I cosponsored a bill that would immediately freeze interest rates on existing credit card balances. This is an important bill that will allow consumers to pay off their credit card debt at the interest rate they consented to when they took on that debt. It is a matter of fairness. I look forward to working with Chairman DODD and colleagues from both parties to pass these important bills as quickly as possible.

FIREARM DEATHS

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, according to the latest data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, CDC, 3,184 children and teens died from a firearm in the United States in 2006, a 6 percent increase from 2005. This breaks down to the life of an American child being taken every 2 hours and 45 minutes by someone wielding a gun. More than five times as many, or nearly 17,500 children and teens suffered a nonfatal gun injury that year, a 7 percent increase from the previous year.

The 2009 Children's Defense Fund's report "Protect Children, Not Guns" illustrates the problem even more pointedly. The report, which provides key findings on children's gun deaths, states that more preschoolers were killed by firearms in 2006 than were law enforcement officers in the line of duty.

This type of violence is preventable. It only requires action. The Children's Defense Fund's report makes a number of recommendations about how to protect children from gun violence. Among other things, they recommend schools provide nonviolent conflict resolution courses for all students and communities create positive activities for children and teenagers to reduce the influence of gangs and drugs. They also recommend passage of such common sense gun safety legislation as closing the gun show loophole, strengthening the Brady background check system and reauthorizing the assault weapons ban.

We cannot afford to sit and watch as so many young lives are irrevocably destroyed by gun violence. Passage of commonsense legislation would help end these types of tragedies.

REMEMBERING SPECIALIST JACOB WILLIAM SEXTON

Mr. BAYH. Madam President, I rise today to honor the life of Army SPC Jacob William Sexton. A member of Company A, 2nd Battalion 151st Infantry of the Indiana National Guard, Jacob was only 21 years old when his life came to a tragic end on October 12, 2009, while on leave from active deployment in Afghanistan.

Today, I join Jacob's family and friends in mourning his untimely death. Jacob will be remembered as a loving brother, son and friend to many. He is survived by his parents, Jeffery and Barbara; his three brothers, Joshua, Jeremiah and Jared; his paternal grandparents; maternal grandmother; and a community of friends and family members. Like two of his brothers, Jacob followed in the footsteps of his father, an Army veteran. His brother described Jacob as his father's best friend.

A native of Farmland, IN, Jacob enlisted in the National Guard after graduating from Monroe Central High School in 2006. He served his first tour in Iraq with the Winchester guard unit as a humvee driver. Upon returning home, he continued to serve his country by training other military humvee drivers and keeping charge of weapons and ammunition at Camp Atterbury. More recently, he was deployed near Kabul, Afghanistan, where he was described by his superiors as a model soldier with good morale and an excellent sense of humor.

While we struggle to express our sorrow over the loss of Jacob, we can take pride in the example he set as a soldier, a son, a grandson, and a brother. Today and always, he will be remembered by family, friends, and fellow Hoosiers as a true American hero, and we cherish the legacy of his service and his life.

It is my sad duty to enter the name of Jacob William Sexton in the record of the Senate for his service to this country and for his profound commitment to freedom, democracy and peace.

I pray that the Sexton family can find comfort in the words of the prophet Isaiah who said, "He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces."

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

RECOGNIZING THE I HAVE WINGS BREAST CANCER FOUNDATION

• Mr. BUNNING. Madam President, today I would like to recognize the I Have Wings breast cancer foundation in Erlanger, KY. October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month and I Have Wings has dedicated its efforts to the ongoing battle against breast cancer.

According to the American Cancer Society, this year over 190,000 new cases of invasive breast cancer will be diagnosed in our Nation and an estimated 40,000 Americans will lose their fight with breast cancer. At the same time, today there are millions of women in our country who have been treated for breast cancer.

Throughout my tenure as a U.S. Senator, I have supported legislation to increase awareness, prevention, and funding for breast cancer. Too often we hear about a case of breast cancer that is caught at a late stage, leaving the patient and families with little hope. These stories remind us why we must continue to support and expand National Breast Cancer Awareness Month efforts.

The I Have Wings foundation is a leader in the fight against breast cancer. It strives to educate individuals, provides encouragement for those in need, and generously supports research efforts in Kentucky. And while efforts by I Have Wings and other breast cancer foundations often go unnoticed in the ongoing battle against this deadly disease, we must remember that they play an important role as an activist and educator in our communities.

Again, I commend the efforts of the I Have Wings foundation as our Nation continues to spread breast cancer awareness.●

REMEMBERING DANIEL MELNICK

● Mr. DODD. Madam President, I wish to speak in honor of a good friend and a friend to American cinema, Daniel Melnick, who passed away recently at the age of 77.

Those who know Hollywood will remember Daniel as a successful producer of film and television, and as a studio executive who believed in audacity and creativity—a filmmaker's studio executive, if you will.

He was a prodigy, becoming the youngest producer at CBS Television at the age of 19, where he worked on such series as the legendary "Get Smart," and producing his first feature film at MGM, the thrilling "Straw Dogs," before he turned 40. Over the next decade, he played a role in the development of films ranging from "Network" to "Kramer vs. Kramer" to "The China Syndrome," while serving as head of production at both MGM and Columbia.

As a film producer, Daniels's credits include "All That Jazz," "Altered States," "Footloose," "Roxanne," and "L.A. Story." Fittingly, his work as a producer was bold and vibrant—just the sort of films he encouraged as a studio executive.

In all, Daniel's films were nominated for more than 80 Academy Awards, and won more than two dozen Oscars.

I will remember Daniel as a warm, funny, breathtakingly creative friend whose beautiful house in Utah was the site of many wonderful get-togethers.

We are poorer for the loss, but richer for all he gave to our country and the arts.●

TRIBUTE TO LIEUTENANT COLONEL MICHEL G. JONES

● Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, today, I recognize the service LTC Michel "Shel" G. Jones, on the occasion of his retirement from active duty in the U.S. Army. Lieutenant Colonel Jones is an exceptional officer who has served our great Nation for more than 28 years, including 22 years on active duty and 6 years in the Iowa Army National Guard.

I have personally come to know and respect Lieutenant Colonel Jones over the 2½ years he served as an Army congressional liaison for the Army's weapons and tracked combat vehicles programs, to include the Army's Future Combat System. His expertise and commitment were instrumental in educating Members and staff in the Senate and House on Army combat systems, modernization programs and initiatives. His tireless efforts working with Members and staff of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees were instrumental in the successful authorization and appropriation of the Abrams tank, Bradley fighting vehicle, small arms and crew-served weapons, Stryker, elements of the Future Combat System and the Paladin Integrated Management programs.

Lieutenant Colonel Jones' congressional liaison assignment was only the capstone to what is an outstanding career of service to the Army and our Nation. He served as an armor officer in numerous command and staff positions. His operational assignments began in the Mojave Desert at Fort Irwin, CA, serving as a platoon leader at the National Training Center where he trained thousands of soldiers in desert warfare. He served as commander for Alpha Company, 4th Battalion 37th Armor, Heavy, followed by command of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd of the 70th Armor Battalion with the 1st Armored Division at Fort Riley, KS. After transitioning in to the acquisition career field, Lieutenant Colonel Jones was assigned to Fort Knox, KY, as a combat development officer and as a project manager for the Army's Future Combat System, FCS, in Detroit, MI.

The strength of our soldiers comes from their families. Lieutenant Colonel Jones' strength came from his wife Dynette, and his two sons Colton and Conner. This Nation is grateful for their commitment and personal sacrifices made throughout Shel's military service. We also thank his mother Joyce, who recently passed, and his father William "Gerry" Jones for raising such a fine son and patriot. Shel is from a military family. His father is a retired soldier and his brother, Dr.

Keith Jones, serves as a major in the National Guard. This Nation remains indebted to your service.

On behalf of the Senate and the United States of America, I commend Lieutenant Colonel Jones for his tireless efforts in the support of our Army, our military, and our Nation. As Shel and his family prepare to start a new life in the great State of Oklahoma, I congratulate him on completing an extremely successful military career and wish all of them the best in all their future endeavors.●

TRIBUTE TO KAREN M. ECKERT

● Ms. LANDRIEU. Madam President, today I celebrate the retirement of Karen M. Eckert after 37 years of excellent service to the federal government. Karen, a remarkable public servant under both the legacy Immigration and Naturalization Service and U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, and devoted resident of Buffalo, NY, retired on May 29, 2009.

Karen began her career as an immigration inspector at Niagara Falls, NY, in 1972 and quickly became knowledgeable in all areas of immigration. Her work has touched the lives of thousands—giving hope to countless immigrants and new citizens in pursuit of their dreams, as well as uniting adoptive parents with children in need of a loving home, while striving to protect children and underprivileged birth parents from exploitation.

Karen became a leading expert in intercountry adoption and child citizenship. In this role, she was invaluable in establishing the Child Citizenship Program in Buffalo, NY, drafting orphan regulations, and leading USCIS to take the steps necessary to implement the Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in Respect of Intercountry Adoption.

Her outstanding and distinguished service has been recognized through numerous awards, including an Angel in Adoption Award from the Congressional Coalition on Adoption Institute in 2003, the Department of Homeland Security Secretary's Meritorious Service Award in 2006 and the USCIS Director's Award in 2008 for her direction and participation in the Hague Implementation Working Group.

It is impossible to count the number of individuals who have personally benefited from Karen's professionalism, insights and dedication and she will be sincerely missed by her colleagues worldwide.

We congratulate Karen M. Eckert on her outstanding and distinguished career and for the inspiration she is leaving behind.●

RECOGNIZING WORLD WAR II VETERANS

● Mr. LUGAR. Madam President, today I wish to pay tribute to the American men and women who served their country valiantly during World War II, and to a nonprofit organization known as HonorFlight which flies surviving veterans, at no expense to themselves, to Washington, DC, to visit the World War II Memorial. I wish to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Scott C. Stump, a veteran of the U.S. Marine Corps, describing the efforts of HonorFlight which will enable two Hoosier veterans, Harvey H. Hammerlund and Joseph B. Smrt, to visit the World War II Memorial this fall.

The letter follows:

DEAR SENATOR LUGAR: During World War II, 16 million American men and women selflessly, and unflinchingly served our country and defended our way of life for future generations. Now, more than 64 years since the end of that Great War, only three million of our World War II Veterans walk among us. Even more alarming, we are losing these veterans at the rate of 1,000 per day, which is causing their ranks to dwindle at an alarming rate. Now more than ever, we need to take pause and recognize these veterans and their contributions to making our great country what she is today. Part of that recognition, the National World War II Monument in Washington, DC, was completed and opened to World War II Veterans and the public on 29 April 2004.

Since its opening, the monument has been like a shining star, beckoning to our World War II Veterans. In fact, many of those veterans have had a dream of visiting this monument erected to the remembrance of "The Greatest Generation." Unfortunately, due to health, monetary, and other constraints, many World War II Veterans have been unable to visit "their" Memorial.

In 2005 that all began to change when a non-profit organization known as "HonorFlight" was born. Several dedicated individuals had a vision to fly any and all of our World War II Veterans to Washington, to see "their" Memorial, at absolutely no cost to the veterans. This wonderful, all volunteer force, began flying in 2005 and flew a total of 137 Veterans to see the Memorial that first year. Now, a brief four years later, there will be a total of over 42,000 veterans who have been able to fulfill their dreams and wishes of being able to visit Washington, DC and, most importantly, the World War II Memorial.

I would like to publicly thank HonorFlight and their network of dedicated volunteers for all of their efforts in making dreams come true. I am truly humbled to be a small part of such a great organization.

On this date, I would also like to recognize two very special World War II Veterans who are about to embark on a very special journey to Washington, DC. These two Hoosiers, both from the fertile farmlands of Starke County, answered their call to serve their country long ago, and in so doing served with honor, dignity, and courage.

Harvey H. Hammerlund was born on 21 December 1924 in rural Knox, Indiana. Harvey was a farm boy who enlisted in The United States Navy on 4 January 1944. Harvey served on The U.S.S. Urban 631 as an electrician. Harvey spent the remainder of the war traversing the hostile enemy-laden South Pacific. Mr. Hammerlund was discharged on 23 March 1946 at the rank of 3rd Class Petty Officer. Harvey returned home and was a farmer for the remainder of his working years. Harvey was and is a leader in Starke County serving on various boards and committees, as well as being active with V.F.W. Post 748 in Knox. Harvey resides on his farm outside of Knox with Dee, his wife of 59 years.

Joseph B. Smrt was born on 14 February 1916 in North Judson, Indiana. Joe enlisted in The United States Army on 11 December 1942. Joe served in Patton's Third Army in the 94th Division Company B 19th Engineers. Joe proudly served all over Central Europe, including the epic "Battle of the Bulge" in Belgium. Mr. Smrt was discharged on 27 December 1945 but continued serving in The U.S. Army Reserves for the next 33 years, retiring as a Sergeant First Class. Joe worked and continues to work as a Surveyor as his profession and continues to be a pillar of the Starke County Community. Joe still lives in Knox with Ursula, his wife of 58 years.

Thank you, Senator LUGAR, for recognizing a great organization and two outstanding individuals. These two men have truly played a part in shaping the America that we know and love today.

Sincerely,

SCOTT C. STUMP.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mrs. Neiman, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO THE 2009 H1N1 INFLUENZA PANDEMIC IN THE UNITED STATES—PM 36

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to section 201 of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1621), I hereby report that I have exercised my authority to declare a national emergency in order to be prepared in the event of a rapid increase in illness across the Nation that may overburden health care resources. This declaration will allow the Secretary of Health and Human Services, if necessary, to temporarily waive certain standard Federal requirements in order to enable U.S. health care facilities to implement emergency operations plans to deal with the 2009 H1N1 influenza pandemic in the United States. A copy of my proclamation is attached.

Further, I have authorized the Secretary of Health and Human Services to exercise the authority under section 1135 of the Social Security Act to temporarily waive or modify certain requirements of the Medicare, Medicaid, and State Children's Health Insurance programs and of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act Privacy Rule as necessary to respond to the pandemic throughout the duration of the public health emergency declared in response to the 2009 H1N1 influenza pandemic.

BARACK OBAMA.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 23, 2009.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE DURING ADJOURNMENT

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 6, 2009, the Secretary of the Senate, on October 23, 2009, during the adjournment of the Senate, received a message from the House of Representatives announcing that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bill:

S. 1793. A bill to amend title XXVI of the Public Health Service Act to revise and extend the program for providing life-saving care for those with HIV/AIDS.

The enrolled bill was subsequently signed during the session of the Senate by the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DODD (for himself, Mr. REED, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. MENENDEZ, Mr. BROWN, Mr. TESTER, Mr. MERKLEY, and Mr. UDALL, of Colorado):

S. 1927. A bill to establish a moratorium on credit card interest rate increases, and for other purposes; read the first time.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to offer legislation that would freeze interest rates on existing credit card balances until the full protections of the Credit Card Accountability, Responsibility, and Disclosure Act go into effect in February.

It is clear that credit card companies see gouging consumers as a viable means of padding their profits. When they realized that we were serious about ending these abusive practices, they unfortunately decided to make one last grab for the pocketbooks of American consumers before the law goes into effect.

Even before the Credit CARD Act passed, I heard from Connecticut residents who had seen their interest rates double or even triple with little warning and no explanation. As the law's implementation approaches, credit card companies have continued to jack up their customers' interest rates to get ahead of provisions in the Credit CARD Act that will permanently prohibit them from arbitrarily raising rates on existing balances.

To those of us who have worked to rein in credit card abuses, this greedy behavior is disturbing, although not surprising. But to the families in my home state of Connecticut and around the country who are struggling to make ends meet these days it is something worse.

Debt can crush families, driving them into bankruptcy and shattering the financial foundation they have worked so hard to build. It is impossible to get ahead when you're falling further and further behind each month. The anytime, any-reason rate hikes that credit card companies have used to enrich themselves have destroyed too many American families.

That is why we took action to stop unjustified rate hikes, and why it is an outrage that credit card companies are trying to jam consumers one last time before our law stops them.

I am not about to let this stand. In April, Senator SCHUMER and I wrote to the Federal Reserve, the Office of Thrift Supervision, and the National Credit Union Administration, calling on them to use their existing authority to implement an emergency freeze on interest rates.

The regulators, unfortunately, did not act. Therefore, on behalf of our constituents, we must. This legislation will immediately freeze interest rates to ensure that Americans are protected until the full Credit CARD Act goes into effect.

When it does, a provision I included in the legislation will hold credit card companies accountable for their recent behavior. Every 6 months, card companies will be required to review each account that they hit with a rate hike since January 1, 2009, and reduce the rate if the customer has become less of a credit risk or the circumstances that warranted the increase are no longer present.

I have directed Federal regulators to notify all credit card companies that they will be required to comply with this provision and to draft regulations that provide clear, strict rules to govern the reviews. Customers that did not deserve to have their rates raised in the first place should not have to be stuck with the higher rate after the Credit CARD Act takes effect.

Consumers have a responsibility to spend within their means and to pay what they owe. But credit card companies have a responsibility to deal with their customers honorably. And they most certainly do not have the right to rip off American families, especially when this Congress has already gone on the record opposing those actions.

Struggling middle class families won a huge victory when we passed the Credit CARD Act. Let us help them win another by ensuring that the credit card companies' reign of greed does not continue for even the short time before the law is implemented. I urge my colleagues to join me in this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1927

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Credit Card Rate Freeze Act of 2009".

SEC. 2. MORATORIUM ON RATE INCREASES.

During the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending 9 months after the date of enactment of the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009, in the case of any credit card account under an open end consumer credit plan—

(1) no creditor may increase any annual percentage rate, fee, or finance charge applicable to any outstanding balance, except as permitted under subsection 171(b) of the Truth in Lending Act (as added by Public Law 111-24); and

(2) no creditor may change the terms governing the repayment of any outstanding balance, except as set forth in section 171(c) of the Truth in Lending Act (as added by Public Law 111-24).

SEC. 3. DEFINED TERMS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "annual percentage rate" means an annual percentage rate, as determined under section 107 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1606);

(2) the term "finance charge" means a finance charge, as determined under section 106 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1605);

(3) the term "outstanding balance" has the same meaning as in section 171(d) of the Truth in Lending Act (as added by Public Law 111-24); and

(4) the terms used in this Act that are defined in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602) and are not otherwise defined in this Act shall have the same meanings as in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act.

SEC. 4. REGULATORY AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may issue such rules as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

(b) DATE OF ENACTMENT.—The provisions of this Act shall take effect upon the date of enactment of this Act, regardless of whether rules are issued under subsection (a).

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 321—COMMEMORATING THE LIVES AND WORK OF JESUIT FATHERS IGNACIO ELLACURIA, IGNACIO MARTIN-BARÓ, SEGUNDO MONTES, AMANDO LÓPEZ, JUAN RAMON MORENO, JOAQUÍN LÓPEZ Y LÓPEZ, AND HOUSEKEEPER JULIA ELBA RAMOS AND HER DAUGHTER CELINA MARISSET RAMOS ON THE OCCASION OF THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THEIR DEATHS ON NOVEMBER 16, 1989, AT THE UNIVERSIDAD CENTROAMERICANA JOSÉ SIMEÓN CAÑAS LOCATED IN SAN SALVADOR, EL SALVADOR

Mr. FEINGOLD (for himself, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. CASEY, and Mr. MENENDEZ) submitted the following resolution which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 321

Whereas in the early morning hours of November 16, 1989, 6 Jesuit priests and faculty members of the Universidad Centroamericana José Simeón Cañas ("UCA") located in San Salvador, El Salvador—Fathers Ignacio Ellacuría, Ignacio Martín-Baró, Segundo Montes, Amando López, Juan Ramon Moreno, and Joaquín López y López—and housekeeper Julia Elba Ramos and her daughter, Celina Mariset Ramos, were executed by members of the Salvadoran Army;

Whereas Father Ignacio Ellacuría, aged 59, was since 1979 rector of the UCA and was an internationally-respected intellectual and advocate for human rights and for a negotiated solution to the Salvadoran civil conflict;

Whereas Father Ignacio Martín-Baró, aged 44, was the vice rector of the UCA, a leading analyst of national and regional affairs, the founder and director of the respected polling organization, the Public Opinion Institute, former dean of students, dean of the psychology department, an internationally-renowned pioneer in the field of social psychology, and pastor of the rural community of Jayaque;

Whereas Father Segundo Montes, aged 56, was dean of the department of social sciences, a sociology professor at the UCA, and the founder and director of the Human Rights Institute at the UCA, who did extensive work on Salvadoran refugees in the United States during the period of the Salvadoran conflict, including providing documentation and advice to Members of Congress on refugee issues;

Whereas Father Amando López, aged 53, was a philosophy and theology professor at the UCA, was the former director of the Jesuit seminary in San Salvador, and served as pastor of the Tierra Virgen community in Soyapango, a poor neighborhood in the periphery of San Salvador;

Whereas Father Juan Ramon Moreno, aged 56, was a professor of theology at the UCA, a former novice-master for the Jesuits, and a tireless pastoral worker and spiritual guide;

Whereas Father Joaquín López y López, aged 71, was one of the creators of the UCA and the founder, organizer, and director of Fe y Alegria (Faith and Joy), an organization to address the lack of education in El Salvador, which opened 30 educational centers in marginalized communities throughout El Salvador where 48,000 people received vocational training and education;

Whereas Julia Elba Ramos, aged 42, was the cook and housekeeper for the Jesuit seminarians at the UCA and the wife of Obdulio Lozano, the UCA gardener and groundskeeper;

Whereas Celina Mariset Ramos, aged 16, had finished her first year of high school at the José Damian Villacorta Institute in Santa Tecla, El Salvador and was staying with her mother the night of November 15, 1989;

Whereas the 6 Jesuit priests dedicated their lives to advancing education in El Salvador, protecting and promoting human rights and the end of conflict, and identifying and addressing the economic and social problems that affected the majority of the Salvadoran population;

Whereas the 6 Jesuit priests, as faculty and administrators at the UCA, educated many students throughout the 1970s and 1980s, students who subsequently became Salvadoran government, political, and civil society leaders, and thus helped facilitate communication, dialogue, and negotiations, even during the turbulent years of the armed conflict;

Whereas these 6 priests and 2 women joined the more than 75,000 noncombatants who perished during the Salvadoran civil war;

Whereas on December 6, 1989, Speaker of the House of Representatives Thomas Foley appointed the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador consisting of 19 Members of the House of Representatives and chaired by Representative John Joseph Moakley of Boston, Massachusetts, to monitor the Salvadoran government's investigation into the murders of the Jesuit priests and 2 women and to look into related issues involving respect for human rights and judicial reform in El Salvador;

Whereas the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador found that members of the high command of the Salvadoran military were responsible for ordering the murder of the Jesuits and 2 women and for obstructing the subsequent investigation into the crimes;

Whereas the United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador (the "Truth Commission") was established under terms of the January 1992 Peace Accords that ended El Salvador's 12 years of war and was charged to investigate and report to the Salvadoran people on human rights crimes committed by all sides during the course of the war;

Whereas on March 15, 1993, the Truth Commission confirmed the findings of the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador;

Whereas on September 28, 1991, a Salvadoran jury found 2 Salvadoran military officers guilty of the murders, including Salvadoran Army Colonel Guillermo Alfredo Benavides Moreno, the first time in Salvadoran history in which high-ranking military officers were convicted in a Salvadoran court of law of human rights crimes;

Whereas the UCA remains dedicated to advancing and expanding educational opportunity and providing the highest quality of academic excellence in its studies and courses and maintains a commitment to human rights and social justice;

Whereas the 28 Jesuit colleges and universities in the United States, which represent many of the highest quality academic communities in the Nation, have maintained a sense of solidarity with the UCA and the people of El Salvador and have annually observed the November 16th anniversary of the martyred Jesuits and women;

Whereas in the United States, in El Salvador, and around the world, university programs, academic and scholarly institutes, libraries, research centers, pastoral programs, spiritual centers, and programs dedicated to educational achievement, social justice, human rights, and alleviating poverty have been dedicated in the names of the Jesuit martyrs;

Whereas the international and Salvadoran outcry in response to the deaths of the 6 Jesuits and 2 women and the subsequent investigations into this crime served as a catalyst for negotiations and contributed to the signing of the 1992 Peace Accords, which have allowed the people and the Government of El Salvador to achieve significant progress in creating and strengthening democratic political, economic, and social institutions; and

Whereas November 16, 2009, marks the 20th anniversary of the deaths of the 8 spiritual, courageous, and generous priests, educators, and laywomen: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) commemorates the lives and work of Father Ignacio Ellacuría, Father Ignacio Martín-Baró, Father Segundo Montes, Father Amando López, Father Juan Ramon Moreno, Father Joaquín López y López, Julia Elba Ramos, and Celina Mariset Ramos;

(2) extends sympathy to the families, friends, colleagues, and religious communities of the 6 Jesuit priests and 2 laywomen;

(3) recognizes the continuing academic, spiritual, and social contributions of the Universidad Centroamericana José Simeón Cañas ("UCA") in San Salvador, El Salvador;

(4) commends the 28 Jesuit colleges and universities in the United States for their solidarity with the UCA and annual remembrances of the Jesuit martyrs;

(5) continues to find inspiration in the lives and work of the Jesuit martyrs;

(6) remembers the seminal reports by Representative John Joseph Moakley and the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador in investigating the murders of the 6 priests and 2 laywomen;

(7) acknowledges the role played by the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador, Representative John Joseph Moakley, the Jesuit leadership of the UCA, and the Salvadoran judicial investigation and convictions in advancing negotiations to end the war, such that the deaths of the Jesuit martyrs and laywomen contributed directly to achieving the peace to which they had dedicated their lives;

(8) calls upon the people of the United States, academic institutions, and religious congregations to participate in local, national, and international events commemorating the 20th anniversary of the martyrdom of the 6 Jesuit priests and 2 laywomen;

(9) recognizes that, while significant progress has been made during the post-war period, social and economic hardships persist among many sectors of Salvadoran society; and

(10) calls upon the President, the Secretary of State, the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, and other Federal departments and agencies to support and collaborate with the Government of El Salvador and other public, private, nongovernmental, and religious organizations in efforts to reduce poverty and hunger and to promote educational opportunity, human rights, the rule of law, and social equity for the people of El Salvador.

SENATE RESOLUTION 322—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE ON RELIGIOUS MINORITIES IN IRAQ

Mr. LEVIN (for himself, Mr. BROWNBACK, and Mr. DURBIN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 322

Whereas threats against the smallest religious minorities in Iraq jeopardize the future of Iraq as a diverse, pluralistic, and free society;

Whereas according to the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom, there are grave threats to religious freedom in Iraq, particularly for the smallest, most vulnerable religious minorities in Iraq, including Chaldeans, Syrians, Assyrians, and other Christians, Sabean Mandeans, and Yazidis;

Whereas the February 2009 Country Report on Human Rights issued by the Department of State identifies on-going "misappropriation of official authority by sectarian, criminal, and extremist groups" as among the significant and continuing human rights problems in Iraq;

Whereas in recent years, there have been alarming numbers of religiously-motivated killings, abductions, beatings, rapes, threats, intimidation, forced conversions, marriages, and displacement from homes and businesses, and attacks on religious leaders, pilgrims, and holy sites, in Iraq, with the smallest religious minorities in Iraq having been among the most vulnerable, although Iraqis from many religious communities, Muslim and non-Muslim alike, have suffered in this violence;

Whereas the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom continues to recommend that the President designate Iraq as a "country of particular concern", or CPC, under the International Religious Freedom Act of 1998, because of the ongoing, severe abuses of religious freedom in Iraq;

Whereas the Assyrian International News Agency reports that 59 churches have been bombed in Iraq between June 2004 and July 2009;

Whereas persecution and violence in Iraq have extended to church leaders as well, such as the March 2008 kidnap for ransom and killing of 65-year old Chaldean Catholic Archbishop Paulos Faraj Rahho;

Whereas members of small religious minority communities in Iraq do not have militia or tribal structures to defend them, do not receive adequate official protection, and are legally, politically, and economically marginalized;

Whereas control of ethnically and religiously mixed areas, including the Nineveh and Kirkuk governorates, is disputed between the Kurdistan regional government and the Government of Iraq, and Chaldeans, Syrians, Assyrians, and other Christians, Sabean Mandeans, Yazidis, Shabak, and Turkomen are caught in the middle of this struggle for control and have been targeted for abuses and discrimination as a result;

Whereas governments in the region report that approximately 2,400,000 refugees and asylum seekers have fled Iraq since 2003;

Whereas many religious minorities in Iraq, who made up about 3 percent of the population of Iraq in 2003, have fled to other areas in Iraq or to other countries, where they reflect a disproportionately high percentage of registered Iraqi refugees;

Whereas the flight of such refugees has substantially diminished their numbers in Iraq, and few show signs of returning to Iraq;

Whereas approximately 1,400,000 Christians were estimated to have lived in Iraq as of 2003, including Chaldean Catholics, Assyrian Orthodox, Assyrian Church of the East, Syriac Catholics, Syriac Orthodox, Armenians (Catholic and Orthodox), Protestants, and Evangelicals;

Whereas it is widely reported that only 500,000 to 700,000 indigenous Christians remain in Iraq as of 2009;

Whereas the Sabean Mandaean community in Iraq reports that almost 90 percent of the members of that community either fled Iraq or have been killed, leaving only about 3,500 to 5,000 Mandeans in Iraq as of 2009;

Whereas the Yazidi community in Iraq reportedly now numbers about 500,000, a decrease from about 700,000 in 2005;

Whereas the Baha'i faith, estimated to have only 2,000 adherents in Iraq, remains prohibited in Iraq under a 1970 law;

Whereas the ancient and once-large Jewish community in Iraq now numbers fewer than 10, and they essentially live in hiding;

Whereas in 2008, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) reported that approximately 221,000 Iraqis returned to their areas of origin in Iraq, the vast majority of whom settled into neighborhoods or governorates controlled by members of their own religious community;

Whereas many of these returnees reported returning because of difficult economic conditions in their countries of asylum, principally Syria, Jordan, Egypt, and Lebanon; and

Whereas Chaldeans, Syrians, Assyrians, and other Christians, Sabean Mandeans, and Yazidis are not believed to be among these returnees: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the United States remains deeply concerned about the plight of vulnerable religious and ethnic minorities of Iraq and is particularly concerned for the Chaldeans, Syriacs, Assyrians, and other Christians, Sabeans, Mandaeans, Yazidis, Baha'is, Jews, and Muslim ethnic minorities, the Shabak and Turkomen, and other religious and ethnic minorities of Iraq;

(2) the United States Government and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq should urge the Government of Iraq to enhance security at places of worship in Iraq, particularly where religious minorities are known to be at risk;

(3) the United States Government should continue to work with the Government of Iraq to—

(A) urgently train and deploy into the Iraqi police and security forces members of vulnerable minority communities in Iraq, including in Nineveh and other areas in which religious minorities are located, who are as representative as possible of those communities; and

(B) ensure that members of such communities—

(i) suffer no discrimination in recruitment, employment, or advancement in the Iraqi police and security forces; and

(ii) while employed in the Iraqi police and security forces, be assigned to their locations of origin, rather than being transferred to other areas;

(4) the Government of Iraq should, with the assistance of the United States Government—

(A) ensure that the upcoming national elections in Iraq are safe, fair, and free of intimidation and violence so that all Iraqis, including religious minorities, can participate in the elections; and

(B) permit and facilitate election monitoring by experts from local and international nongovernmental organizations, the international community, and the United Nations, particularly in minority areas;

(5) the Government of Iraq and the Kurdistan regional government should work towards a peaceful and timely resolution of disputes over territories;

(6) the United States Government and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq should urge the Government of Iraq to work with minority communities and their representatives to develop measures to implement Article 125 of the Iraq Constitution, which guarantees “the administrative, political, cultural, and educational rights of the various nationalities, such as Turkomen, Chaldeans, Assyrians, and all the other constituents” in Nineveh and other areas where these groups are present;

(7) the Government of Iraq should take affirmative measures to reverse the legal, political, and economic marginalization of religious minorities in Iraq;

(8) the United States Government should direct assistance to projects that develop the ability of ethnic and religious minorities in Iraq to organize themselves civically and politically to effectively convey their concerns to government;

(9) the United States Government should continue to fund capacity-building programs for the Iraqi Ministry of Human Rights, the independent national Human Rights Commission, and a new independent minorities committee whose membership is selected by minority communities of Iraq;

(10) the Government of Iraq should direct the Iraqi Ministry of Human Rights to investigate and issue a public report on abuses against and the marginalization of minority communities in Iraq and make recommendations to address such abuses;

(11) the Government of Iraq should, with the assistance of the United States Government and international organizations, help ensure that displaced Iraqis considering return to Iraq have the proper information needed to make informed decisions regarding such return; and

(12) the United States Government and international organizations should continue to work with the Government of Iraq to develop the legal framework necessary to address property disputes resulting when displaced Iraqis attempt to return to their homes in Iraq.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today I submit, with Senators BROWNBACK and DURBIN, a resolution expressing the concerns of the Senate over the plight of religious minorities in Iraq and calling on our government, the government of Iraq and the United Nations Mission in Iraq to take a series of steps designed to alleviate the dangers that members of these minority groups are confronting. Regardless of our position on the wisdom of the Iraq war, we can all acknowledge a tragic consequence of that war: the widespread persecution of religious minorities.

The statistics are chilling: of approximately 1.4 million Christians of various denominations living in Iraq in 2003, only 500,000 to 700,000 remain. Another minority group, the Sabeans, has seen its population decline by more than 90 percent. Iraq's Jewish community, once one of the largest in the Arab world, has almost ceased to exist.

What has happened to these hundreds of thousands? Many have fled Iraq; my own hometown of Detroit, long home to a large community of Christian immigrants from Iraq, knows firsthand the challenges for families abandoning their generations-long home for a strange new country.

Others have not had that opportunity. The United States Commission on International Religious Freedom reports that members of religious minorities “have experienced targeted intimidation and violence, including killings, beatings, abductions, and rapes, forced conversions, forced marriages, forced displacement from their homes and businesses, and violent attacks on their houses of worship and religious leaders.” Leaders and members of these minority groups have been kidnapped, assassinated or forcibly removed from their homes. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees reported that in 2008, there were an estimated 2.8 million internally displaced persons living in Iraq. Of that 2.8 million, nearly two out of three reported fleeing their home because of a direct threat to their lives, and, of that number, almost nine out of ten said they were targeted because of their ethnic or religious identity.

While violence has declined in Iraq overall, religious minorities continue to be the targets of violence and intimidation. Members of many minority groups who have fled other parts of the country have settled in the north, only to find themselves living in some of the most unstable and violent regions of Iraq.

Our resolution addresses this tragedy in several ways. It states the sense of the Senate that the fate of Iraqi religious minorities is a matter of grave concern. It calls on the U.S. government and the U.N. to urge Iraq's government to increase security at places of worship, particularly where members of religious minorities are known to face risks. It calls for the integration of regional and religious minorities into the Iraqi security forces, and for those minority members to be stationed within their own communities. It calls on the Iraqi government to ensure that minority citizens can participate in upcoming elections, and to enforce its constitution, which guarantees “the administrative, political, cultural, and educational rights” of minorities. And it urges a series of steps to ensure that development aid and other forms of support flow to minority communities.

I encourage the administration and the United Nations to address these steps without delay. I hope our fellow senators will join with Senator BROWNBACK, Senator DURBIN and me to voice the sense of the Senate on this important matter.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED AND PROPOSED

SA 2700. Mr. SANDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 3548, to amend the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2008 to provide for the temporary availability of certain additional emergency unemployment compensation, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

SA 2701. Ms. LANDRIEU submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by her to the bill H.R. 3548, supra; which was ordered to lie on the table.

SA 2702. Mr. SANDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 3548, supra; which was ordered to lie on the table.

TEXT OF AMENDMENTS

SA 2700. Mr. SANDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 3548, to amend the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2008 to provide for the temporary availability of certain additional emergency unemployment compensation, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

Insert after section 5 the following:

SEC. 6. SENSE OF THE SENATE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds as follows:

(1) There has been concern expressed by some across our Nation, including on the Nation's airwaves, regarding whether Congress has the constitutional authority to legislate national health care reform.

(2) Certain citizens, commentators, and public officials have questioned whether the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States precludes the Federal Government from providing related health care benefits to its people.

(3) Numerous State legislative bodies have passed resolutions raising questions regarding the scope of the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and the constitutionality of certain Federal programs.

(4) The Federal Government has a long and successful history of providing health care benefits to its citizens through Federal programs.

(5) Among other Federal initiatives, in 1930, Congress established the Veterans Administration, an entity that provided Federal benefits, including Federal health care benefits, to veterans of the Armed Forces, and the Veterans Administration was later merged into the Department of Veterans Affairs.

(6) In 1954, Congress established the Indian Health Service to provide medical and public health services to members of federally-recognized Indian tribes and Alaska Natives.

(7) In 1956 and 1966, respectively, Congress passed the Dependents' Medical Care Act (70 Stat. 250) and the Military Medical Benefits Amendments of 1966 (Public Law 89-614; 80 Stat. 862) in order to expand coverage to military personnel and dependents, and these programs were later merged into the TRICARE program, which provides health benefits for military personnel, military retirees, and their dependents.

(8) In 1965, the United States established the Medicare program to provide Federal health care benefits to United States citizens over the age of 65.

(9) In 1965, the United States established the Medicaid program to provide Federal health care benefits to individuals at, near, or below the Federal poverty line.

(10) In 1997, the United States established the State Children's Health Insurance Program to provide health insurance to certain children in families above the Federal poverty line.

(11) In 2009, the United States expanded the State Children's Health Insurance Program to cover an additional 4,000,000 children.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the following Federal benefit programs are in direct violation of the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and should be terminated as soon as practicable: the Veterans Health Administration benefit programs, the Indian Health Service, TRICARE, Medicare, Medicaid, and the Children's Health Insurance Program.

SA 2701. Ms. LANDRIEU submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by her to the bill H.R. 3548, to amend the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2008 to provide for the temporary availability of certain additional emergency unemployment compensation, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the end, add the following:

SEC. ____ . 2-YEAR EXTENSION OF LOW-INCOME HOUSING CREDIT RULES FOR CERTAIN DISASTER AREAS.

Section 1400N(c)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking "January 1, 2011" and inserting "January 1, 2013".

SA 2702. Mr. SANDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 3548, to amend the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2008 to provide for the temporary availability of certain additional emergency unemployment compensation, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

Insert after section 5 the following:

SEC. 6. LIMITATIONS ON THE USE OF FUNDS APPROPRIATED.

No funds appropriated under title IV of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2008 (Public Law 110-252), as amended by this Act, shall be allocated to the following Federal benefit programs:

- (1) The Veterans Health Administration benefit programs.
- (2) The Indian Health Service.
- (3) TRICARE.
- (4) Medicare.
- (5) Medicaid.
- (6) The Children's Health Insurance Program.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, on behalf of our distinguished majority leader, I have been asked to do what is called wrap-up.

As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, October 27, the vote on confirmation of Executive Calendar No. 470 occur at 2:20 p.m., and that the 5 minutes immediately prior to the vote be available to Senator BYRD; further, that the other provisions of the previous order remain in effect; that upon confirmation and the Senate resuming legislative session, the Senate then proceed to a period of morning business until 5:30 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes, and that the time be equally divided and controlled between the leaders or their designees; that at 5:30 p.m. there be 30 minutes of debate prior to a vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to H.R. 3548, with the time equally divided and controlled between the leaders or their designees; that at 6 p.m. the Senate proceed to vote on the motion to invoke cloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF SMALL BUSINESS PROGRAMS

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. 1929, introduced earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1929) to provide for an additional temporary extension of programs under the Small Business Act and the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read three times and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate, and any statements related to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1929) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1929

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ADDITIONAL TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS UNDER THE SMALL BUSINESS ACT AND THE SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT ACT OF 1958.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1 of the Act entitled "An Act to extend temporarily certain authorities of the Small Business Administration", approved October 10, 2006 (Public Law 109-316; 120 Stat. 1742), as most recently amended by section 1 of Public Law 111-66, is amended by striking "October 31, 2009" each place it appears and inserting "April 30, 2010".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 30, 2009.

COMMEMORATING THE LIVES AND WORK OF EL SALVADORAN JE-SUITS AND OTHERS

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. Res. 321, which was submitted earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 321) commemorating the lives and work of Jesuit Fathers Ignacio Ellacuría, Ignacio Martín-Baró, Segundo Montes, Amando López, Juan Ramon Moreno, Joaquín López y López, and housekeeper Julia Elba Ramos and her daughter Celina Mariset Ramos on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of their deaths on November 16, 1989, at the Universidad Centroamericana José Simeón Cañas located in San Salvador, El Salvador.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate, and any statements related to this matter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 321) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 321

Whereas in the early morning hours of November 16, 1989, 6 Jesuit priests and faculty members of the Universidad Centroamericana José Simeón Cañas ("UCA") located in San Salvador, El Salvador—Fathers Ignacio Ellacuría, Ignacio Martín-Baró, Segundo Montes, Amando López, Juan Ramon Moreno, and Joaquín López y López—and housekeeper Julia Elba Ramos and her daughter, Celina Mariset Ramos, were executed by members of the Salvadoran Army;

Whereas Father Ignacio Ellacuría, aged 59, was since 1979 rector of the UCA and was an internationally-respected intellectual and advocate for human rights and for a negotiated solution to the Salvadoran civil conflict;

Whereas Father Ignacio Martín-Baró, aged 44, was the vice rector of the UCA, a leading analyst of national and regional affairs, the founder and director of the respected polling organization, the Public Opinion Institute, former dean of students, dean of the psychology department, an internationally-renowned pioneer in the field of social psychology, and pastor of the rural community of Jayaque;

Whereas Father Segundo Montes, aged 56, was dean of the department of social sciences, a sociology professor at the UCA, and the founder and director of the Human Rights Institute at the UCA, who did extensive work on Salvadoran refugees in the United States during the period of the Salvadoran conflict, including providing documentation and advice to Members of Congress on refugee issues;

Whereas Father Amando López, aged 53, was a philosophy and theology professor at the UCA, was the former director of the Jesuit seminary in San Salvador, and served as pastor of the Tierra Virgen community in Soyapango, a poor neighborhood in the periphery of San Salvador;

Whereas Father Juan Ramon Moreno, aged 56, was a professor of theology at the UCA, a former novice-master for the Jesuits, and a tireless pastoral worker and spiritual guide;

Whereas Father Joaquín López y López, aged 71, was one of the creators of the UCA and the founder, organizer, and director of Fe y Alegría (Faith and Joy), an organization to address the lack of education in El Salvador, which opened 30 educational centers in marginalized communities throughout El Salvador where 48,000 people received vocational training and education;

Whereas Julia Elba Ramos, aged 42, was the cook and housekeeper for the Jesuit seminarians at the UCA and the wife of Obdulio Lozano, the UCA gardener and groundskeeper;

Whereas Celina Mariset Ramos, aged 16, had finished her first year of high school at the José Damian Villacorta Institute in Santa Tecla, El Salvador and was staying with her mother the night of November 15, 1989;

Whereas the 6 Jesuit priests dedicated their lives to advancing education in El Salvador, protecting and promoting human rights and the end of conflict, and identifying and addressing the economic and social problems that affected the majority of the Salvadoran population;

Whereas the 6 Jesuit priests, as faculty and administrators at the UCA, educated many students throughout the 1970s and 1980s, students who subsequently became Salvadoran government, political, and civil society leaders, and thus helped facilitate communication, dialogue, and negotiations, even during the turbulent years of the armed conflict;

Whereas these 6 priests and 2 women joined the more than 75,000 noncombatants who perished during the Salvadoran civil war;

Whereas on December 6, 1989, Speaker of the House of Representatives Thomas Foley appointed the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador consisting of 19 Members of the House of Representatives and chaired by Representative John Joseph Moakley of Boston, Massachusetts, to monitor the Salvadoran government's investigation into the murders of the Jesuit priests and 2 women and to look into related issues involving respect for human rights and judicial reform in El Salvador;

Whereas the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador found that members of the high command of the Salvadoran military were responsible for ordering the murder of the Jesuits and 2 women and for obstructing the subsequent investigation into the crimes;

Whereas the United Nations Commission on the Truth for El Salvador (the "Truth Commission") was established under terms of the January 1992 Peace Accords that ended El Salvador's 12 years of war and was charged to investigate and report to the Salvadoran people on human rights crimes committed by all sides during the course of the war;

Whereas on March 15, 1993, the Truth Commission confirmed the findings of the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador;

Whereas on September 28, 1991, a Salvadoran jury found 2 Salvadoran military officers guilty of the murders, including Salvadoran Army Colonel Guillermo Alfredo Benavides Moreno, the first time in Salvadoran history in which high-ranking military officers were convicted in a Salvadoran court of law of human rights crimes;

Whereas the UCA remains dedicated to advancing and expanding educational opportunity and providing the highest quality of academic excellence in its studies and courses and maintains a commitment to human rights and social justice;

Whereas the 28 Jesuit colleges and universities in the United States, which represent many of the highest quality academic communities in the Nation, have maintained a sense of solidarity with the UCA and the people of El Salvador and have annually observed the November 16th anniversary of the martyred Jesuits and women;

Whereas in the United States, in El Salvador, and around the world, university programs, academic and scholarly institutes, libraries, research centers, pastoral programs, spiritual centers, and programs dedicated to educational achievement, social justice, human rights, and alleviating poverty have been dedicated in the names of the Jesuit martyrs;

Whereas the international and Salvadoran outcry in response to the deaths of the 6 Jesuits and 2 women and the subsequent investigations into this crime served as a catalyst for negotiations and contributed to the signing of the 1992 Peace Accords, which have allowed the people and the Government of El Salvador to achieve significant progress in creating and strengthening democratic political, economic, and social institutions; and

Whereas November 16, 2009, marks the 20th anniversary of the deaths of the 8 spiritual, courageous, and generous priests, educators, and laywomen: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) commemorates the lives and work of Father Ignacio Ellacuría, Father Ignacio Martín-Baró, Father Segundo Montes, Father Amando López, Father Juan Ramon Moreno, Father Joaquín López y López, Julia Elba Ramos, and Celina Mariset Ramos;

(2) extends sympathy to the families, friends, colleagues, and religious communities of the 6 Jesuit priests and 2 laywomen;

(3) recognizes the continuing academic, spiritual, and social contributions of the Universidad Centroamericana José Simeón Cañas ("UCA") in San Salvador, El Salvador;

(4) commends the 28 Jesuit colleges and universities in the United States for their solidarity with the UCA and annual remembrances of the Jesuit martyrs;

(5) continues to find inspiration in the lives and work of the Jesuit martyrs;

(6) remembers the seminal reports by Representative John Joseph Moakley and the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador in investigating the murders of the 6 priests and 2 laywomen;

(7) acknowledges the role played by the Speaker's Task Force on El Salvador, Representative John Joseph Moakley, the Jesuit leadership of the UCA, and the Salvadoran judicial investigation and convictions in advancing negotiations to end the war, such that the deaths of the Jesuit martyrs and laywomen contributed directly to achieving the peace to which they had dedicated their lives;

(8) calls upon the people of the United States, academic institutions, and religious congregations to participate in local, national, and international events commemorating the 20th anniversary of the martyrdom of the 6 Jesuit priests and 2 laywomen;

(9) recognizes that, while significant progress has been made during the post-war period, social and economic hardships persist among many sectors of Salvadoran society; and

(10) calls upon the President, the Secretary of State, the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, and other Federal departments and agencies to support and collaborate with the Government of El Salvador and other public, private, nongovernmental, and religious organizations in efforts to reduce poverty and hunger and to promote educational opportunity, human rights, the rule of law, and social equity for the people of El Salvador.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 1927

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I understand that S. 1927, introduced earlier today by Senator DODD, is at the desk, and I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title for the first time.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1927) to establish a moratorium on credit card interest rate increases, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPECTER. I now ask for its second reading and object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will receive its second reading on the next legislative day.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, for anybody watching C-SPAN2—if anybody is watching—a word of explanation might be somewhat helpful. This is a procedure to set this particular resolution, S. Res. 1927, in procedural posture so that when I, as the leader, ask for its second reading, and then say "I object to my own request," it is procedural, not a reversal of position.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2009

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until 10 a.m. tomorrow, Tuesday, October 27; that following the prayer and the pledge, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed to have expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day and there be a period of morning business for 1 hour, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each, with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees, with the Republicans controlling the first half and the majority controlling the second half; that following morning business, the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the nomination of Irene Berger of West Virginia to be U.S. district court judge for the Southern District of West Virginia, as provided under the previous order.

Finally, I ask that the Senate recess from 12:30 until 2:15 p.m. to allow for the weekly caucus luncheons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, under a previous order, tomorrow, at 2:20 p.m., the Senate will proceed to vote on the confirmation of the Berger nomination. Following the vote, the Senate will turn to a period of morning business until 5:30 p.m. The Senate will then resume the motion to proceed to H.R. 3548, and at 6 p.m. proceed to a cloture vote on the motion to proceed to H.R. 3548, the Unemployment Compensation Extension Act.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that it adjourn under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 5:58 p.m., adjourned until Tuesday, October 27, 2009, at 10 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate:

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION

P. DAVID LOPEZ, OF ARIZONA, TO BE GENERAL COUNSEL OF THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION FOR A TERM OF FOUR YEARS, VICE RONALD S. COOPER, RESIGNED.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

PHILIP S. GOLDBERG, OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE (INTELLIGENCE AND RESEARCH), VICE RANDALL M. FORT, RESIGNED.

DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

CARYN A. WAGNER, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE UNDER SECRETARY FOR INTELLIGENCE AND ANALYSIS, DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY. (NEW POSITION)

IN THE AIR FORCE

THE FOLLOWING NAMED OFFICER FOR APPOINTMENT IN THE UNITED STATES AIR FORCE TO THE GRADE INDICATED WHILE ASSIGNED TO A POSITION OF IMPORTANCE AND RESPONSIBILITY UNDER TITLE 10, U.S.C., SECTION 601:

To be lieutenant general

MAJ. GEN. KURT A. CICHOWSKI

IN THE ARMY

THE FOLLOWING NAMED OFFICER FOR APPOINTMENT IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY TO THE GRADE INDICATED UNDER TITLE 10, U.S.C., SECTION 624:

To be brigadier general

COL. DAVID A. TEEPLES

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, October 26, 2009

The House met at 12:30 p.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
October 26, 2009.

I hereby appoint the Honorable NICK J. RAHALL II to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MORNING-HOUR DEBATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 6, 2009, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning-hour debate.

The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to 30 minutes and each Member, other than the majority and minority leaders and the minority whip, limited to 5 minutes.

H.R. 3202, THE WATER PROTECTION AND REINVESTMENT ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The United States is facing a challenge today in terms of fraying infrastructure from coast to coast. The need to rebuild and renew America has never been more critical; not only to strengthen our economy, to protect our health, to reduce global warming, it's important for our national and international competitiveness.

Mr. Speaker, nowhere is this more important than dealing with long-neglected water infrastructure, because as bad as things are on the surface with problems with our electrical grid, crumbling roads and bridges in poor repair, what is under the surface is an even worse condition. We have 72,000 miles of sewer pipe and water main that are over 80 years of age. Every year there are almost a quarter million water main breaks which cause everything from traffic jams to supply disruptions. Who can forget a few months ago when a main broke on River Road here in metropolitan Washington and they had to send in a helicopter to rescue a stranded motorist?

Water infrastructure problems result in 1.3 million cases of waterborne disease each year, while sewer overflows during rainstorms send raw sewage into our oceans, our bays and our rivers, resulting in an estimated 1.8 to 3.5 million illnesses. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that there is a $534 billion gap between our current water investment and the projected needs over the next 20 years, just for water and wastewater.

To deal with that, Mr. Speaker, I have introduced the Water Protection and Reinvestment Act, H.R. 3202. At a time of economic problems for our country, this bill will create between 200,000 and 267,000 new jobs in engineering, construction and related industries. The bill is deficit neutral, attaching small fees to those activities and industries that benefit from clean water or who complicate our need to purify water. It will raise $10 billion in a deficit neutral way.

Because of the need and because of the focused solution of this legislation, H.R. 3202 is supported by a broad cross-section of stakeholders. There are already 19 bipartisan Members of Congress who have signed on, but we have the Associated General Contractors, the American Society of Civil Engineers, the International Union of Operating Engineers, the National Utility Contractors Association as just some in the private sector. We have water utilities and government officials, from the National Association of Clean Water Agencies, the American Public Works Association, the Association of Floodplain Managers. And we have public interest groups, like American Rivers, the Rural Community Assistance Partnership, the Clean Water Network and the Alliance for Water Efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, by providing this funding through existing State revolving funds, money will be equitably distributed to all States. We have special provisions to ensure that small rural communities and large urban areas get funding specific to their needs. We can't afford to leave anyone or any community out.

I strongly urge my colleagues to reflect on what we have here in our community in Washington, D.C., and back home in our own districts. Too many of these systems rely on brick and water sewers that date back decades; in some cases centuries. The economy cannot stand it, the health of our communities cannot put up with this neglect, and frankly the pressure on local taxpayers and ratepayers is such that they need and deserve our help.

I strongly urge that my colleagues who haven't yet examined this legislation do so, and that they join the bipartisan support for H.R. 3202, the Water Protection and Reinvestment Act.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12(a) of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 2 p.m. today.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 37 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until 2 p.m.

□ 1400

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LARSEN of Washington) at 2 p.m.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, send forth Your light and Your truth. Let these be our guide. Lead this Congress and this Nation to the heights of Your holy mountain and to all the places You choose to dwell. We will come before You filled with joy and offer thanksgiving to You, our Redeemer.

So why do we seem downcast at times? Hope in God. Hope in God as our Savior. There is always a reason to praise the Lord. Again and again He will prove Himself our mighty God, both now and forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentlewoman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Ms. BORDALLO led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

HEALTH CARE REFORM OR SMALL BUSINESS DISASTER?

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, it's going to be a rough time to be a small business owner if the Democrat health care reform plan becomes law. Their government takeover of health care hits taxpayers with more than $820 billion in tax hikes. This plan also includes a new $540 billion tax on the so-called "rich" to bankroll this health care scheme.

The problem? According to IRS data, more than half of those who will be hit with this new tax are small business owners. Small businesses are our economy's engine for job growth. In fact, in the past, they have created 72 percent of all new jobs. If you're like me, you would like to see more job growth right now, not less. But small businesses will be hit hard by the new taxes in this plan, severely hampering their ability to create jobs and help us emerge from this economic downturn.

This doesn't sound like health care reform. It sounds like a disaster.

RAISING THE STATUTORY LIMIT ON THE NATIONAL DEBT IS BAD POLICY

(Mr. BOOZMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern for raising the national debt limit.

Last week, the U.S. Department of the Treasury reported that 2009 was the worst fiscal year in our country's history. This shouldn't be a surprise considering the amount of hard-earned taxpayer dollars that Washington has been spending at a record-setting pace. The massive stimulus bill that I opposed in February increased the national debt by $925 billion to $12.1 trillion.

I am extremely troubled by the recent media reports that show leaders of the majority party saying that the national debt limit has to be raised again, and soon. Mr. Speaker, we cannot spend and borrow our way to prosperity.

I have heard the anger of the American people and my constituents, and they aren't supportive of any more debt increases. I voted against this earlier this year, and I remain opposed to increasing the debt limit. If anything, Washington needs to decrease the debt limit and practice fiscal responsibility now.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 29, 2009.

Hon. NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker, The Capitol, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MADAM SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 2(h) of rule II of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Clerk received the following message from the Secretary of the Senate on October 23, 2009, at 1:21 p.m.:

That the Senate passed without amendment H.R. 1209.

That the Senate agreed to without amendment H.J. Res. 26.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely,

LORRAINE C. MILLER,
Clerk of the House.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote incurs objection under clause 6 of rule XX.

Record votes on postponed questions will be taken after 6:30 p.m. today.

NATIONAL LAND REMOTE SENSING OUTREACH ACT

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2489) to authorize a comprehensive national cooperative geospatial imagery mapping program through the United States Geological Survey, to promote use of the program for education, workforce training and development, and applied research, and to support Federal, State, tribal, and local government programs, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 2489

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Land Remote Sensing Outreach Act".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) PROGRAM.—The term "Program" means the National Land Remote Sensing Outreach Program established in section 3.

(2) EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION.—The term "educational institution" means any public or private elementary or secondary school, or any institution of vocational, professional, or higher education (including a junior college or teachers' college).

(3) GEOSPATIAL IMAGERY.—The term "geospatial imagery"—

(A) means satellite land remote sensing image data registered to map or other spatial coordinates derived from features on the ground; and

(B) includes a wide range of graphical products that convey information about natural phenomena and human activities occurring on Earth's surface.

(4) IMAGE DATA.—The term "image data" means the raw, unprocessed form of data captured from a sensing instrument.

(5) LAND REMOTE SENSING.—The term "land remote sensing" means image data of land, coastal areas, or islands and reefs acquired from above the surface of the Earth by instruments on satellite platforms.

(6) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(7) STATE.—The term "State" means—

(A) each of the several States of the United States;

(B) the District of Columbia;

(C) the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico;

(D) Guam;

(E) American Samoa;

(F) the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands; and

(G) the United States Virgin Islands.

(8) INDIAN TRIBE.—The term "Indian tribe" has the same meaning given that term in section 4(e) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(e)).

SEC. 3. NATIONAL LAND REMOTE SENSING OUTREACH PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish and maintain a national land remote sensing outreach program within the U.S. Geological Survey to advance the availability, timely distribution, and widespread use of geospatial imagery for education, research, assessment, and monitoring purposes in each State and the lands of an Indian tribe.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of the program are—

(1) to increase accessibility to, and expand the use of, remote sensing data in a standard, easy-to-use format by Federal, State, local, and tribal governments, communities, educational institutions, and the commercial sector; and

(2) to assist each participating State and Indian tribe in establishing the cooperative infrastructure necessary to increase access to geospatial imagery for research and educational purposes.

(c) ACTIVITIES.—

(1) NATIONAL LAND REMOTE SENSING OUTREACH PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall—

(A) support geospatial imagery sharing, applied research, and educational programs of each participating State and Indian tribe;

(B) identify new geospatial imagery needs and infrastructure;

(C) share and cooperate in the development of geospatial imagery applications, education, and training infrastructure in each participating State and the lands of an Indian tribe;

(D) cooperate with participating States and Indian tribes to encourage the expansion of geospatial imagery mapping courses taught at appropriate educational institutions;

(E) encourage expansion of geospatial imagery research at appropriate educational institutions;

(F) encourage expansion of the knowledge and use of geospatial imagery products in the workforce through outreach programs, workshops, and other training opportunities;

(G) encourage participating States and Indian tribes to build partnerships with local governments to identify unique research and development needs and geospatial imagery application pilot programs;

(H) promote cooperation and sharing of expertise regarding geospatial imagery applications among participating States and Indian tribes; and

(I) provide a mechanism to enable the States and Indian tribes to transfer geospatial imagery and applications to the U.S. Geological Survey as appropriate.

(2) GRANTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to provide grants to qualified educational institutions, or to State, local, and tribal governments, or to consortia of these entities, on a competitive basis to—

(i) advance the interest of the Federal Government in promoting the use of imagery by educational institutions, States, localities, and Indian tribes; and

(ii) achieve the purposes of the Program described in section 3(b).

(B) MATCHING FUNDS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The Federal share of the cost of each program for which a grant is made under this Act may not exceed 75 percent of the total cost of the program.

(ii) NON-FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION.—In providing the non-Federal contribution required under this paragraph, a grantee—

(I) shall provide for such share through a payment in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including facilities, equipment, technology, or services; and

(II) may provide for such share through State sources or local sources, including private funds or donated services.

(iii) WAIVER.—The Secretary may waive the requirements of subparagraph (B), in whole or in part, with respect to any program if the Secretary determines that the grantee has made a good faith effort to obtain the non-Federal contribution at the local level but is unable to do so.

(3) FEDERAL PARTNER ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish and maintain a committee to advise the Director of the U.S. Geological Survey regarding the Program.

(B) MEMBERSHIP AND APPOINTMENT.—The advisory committee under subparagraph (A) shall be chaired by the U.S. Geological Survey and composed of such representatives of Federal and State agencies, tribal governments, and educational institutions as the Secretary may designate.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $10,000,000 to carry out this Act for each of fiscal years 2010 through 2019.

SEC. 5. SUNSET DATE.

This Act is repealed on the date that is 10 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Guam.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Guam?

There was no objection.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2489 would authorize a nationwide program sponsored by the U.S. Geological Survey to help States, communities, and universities use satellite imagery for research and education.

I would like to commend the sponsor of this legislation, Representative

STEPHANIE HERSETH SANDLIN, for championing valuable uses of satellite imagery and for her work with the minority to improve the pending measure.

So I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2489, which will facilitate remote sensing outreach partnerships in all 50 States and territories.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume on H.R. 2489.

The National Land Remote Sensing Outreach Act builds on a series of earmarks directed to the United States Geological Survey for nearly a decade. This program originally started out as “Ohio View” and has since expanded to more than 35 States, with hundreds of active member groups. This effort has been successful in increasing access to and uses of our Nation’s Earth observation satellite assets for education, research, hazardous monitoring, and natural resource management.

This legislation will finally move this program from one funded through earmarks without any oversight from Congress to an authorized Federal program with increased accountability, oversight, and taxpayer protections.

The final version of this legislation the House will consider today includes a number of improvements over the original introduced text. Specifically, this bill places a cap on the annual authorization for this program. This bill also now has a sunset date and requires a cost share from the partners who will work with the U.S. Geological Survey.

These are responsible, necessary changes. Congress should at all times seek to ensure taxpayer protections and oversight of government spending.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATOURETTE).

Mr. LATOURETTE. I thank my friend from Alaska for yielding.

I want to commend our good friend and colleague, Ms. HERSETH SANDLIN, from South Dakota, for her hard work in bringing this bill to the floor today. I understand she has been delayed by travel difficulties, but I am honored to be the lead Republican on this particular bill.

I am also pleased to indicate that the lead sponsor in the 110th Congress was Ralph Regula, Representative Ralph Regula. It was his vision that really started this program as “Ohio View” in 1998. It began as a pilot program through a partnership between the United States Geological Survey and several universities in the State of Ohio.

Originally called “Ohio View,” the program expanded nationwide beginning in 2000 and is currently active in 35 States across the country. The AmericaView program helps States and territories access the Federal Government’s nonclassified satellite and airborne imagery. It provides remote sensing data to communities in order to manage resources, plan for natural disasters, and respond to security threats.

The National Land Remote Sensing Outreach Act will maintain a nationwide AmericaView program and advance the availability of distribution and use of remote sensing data in each State. This bill will also expand remote sensing education as well as award grants to educational institutions and State and local governments to develop these programs.

There is a growing need for geospatial technology professionals, and this funding will bring remote sensing into K-12 classrooms across the country, strengthening students’ science skills.

The AmericaView program has been valuable to communities across the Nation. I believe it is an effective use of taxpayer money.

Again, I want to thank Congresswoman HERSETH SANDLIN for introducing the bill again this Congress, and I appreciate very much the work of the Natural Resources Committee in improving the legislation.

I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Ms. HERSETH SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge support of H.R. 2489, the National Land Remote Sensing Outreach Act, bipartisan legislation that I introduced with my colleague STEVE LATOURETTE, that would authorize a program at the U.S. Geological Survey enhancing the use of satellite remote sensing data for research and education.

For almost a decade, the USGS has partnered with a nonprofit organization called AmericaView to help citizens, researchers, and public agencies solve real world problems using satellite imagery. Over these years, the USGS has provided satellite data and grants to AmericaView. AmericaView, in turn, has supported a network of university partners now in a total of 36 states: Alabama, Alaska, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

Thanks to this outreach program, a great trove of satellite data and information, which is archived at the USGS Earth Resources Observation Data Center in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, is put to work throughout our country. Each state program tailors its efforts to each state’s needs, applying the data for use in a range of useful activities, including science education projects, the calculation of drought effects, designing irrigation protocols, or planning flood response. In short, USGS is enabling an amazing and varied array of remote sensing data applications through these ongoing outreach efforts and partnerships.

Despite receiving appropriations in past fiscal years, the USGS geospatial imagery outreach program has never formally been authorized. Passing this legislation today will officially authorize the USGS' existing outreach activities, helping to boost the program's recognition, expand the program to additional states and territories, and provide for Congressional direction and oversight.

The legislation before us today was amended in Committee to reflect input from the Department of the Interior and colleagues on both sides of the aisle, and I'd like to thank the Administration and my colleagues for their willingness to work together on this bill. I'd also like to recognize the contributions of our former colleague, Representative Ralph Regula of Ohio, who introduced this legislation in the previous Congress.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2489, the National Land Remote Sensing Outreach Act.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I again urge Members to support the bill, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2489, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the yeas have it.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

JIMMY CARTER NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE BOUNDARY EXPANSION

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1471) to expand the boundary of the Jimmy Carter National Historic Site in the State of Georgia, to redesignate the unit as a National Historical Park, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 1471

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. BOUNDARY EXPANSION.

Section 1 of Public Law 100-206 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking paragraph (3) and inserting:

(2) in subsection (b)(1), by striking “map entitled ‘Jimmy Carter National Historic Site and Preservation District Boundary Map’, numbered NHS-JC-80000, and dated April 1987” and inserting “map titled ‘Jimmy Carter National Historical Park and Preservation District, Proposed Boundary Map’, numbered 330/80,019, and dated September 2009”;

(3) in subsection (b)(2)—

(A) by striking “and described more particularly as follows—” and inserting “or is needed to enhance the visitor experience, and includes—”;

(B) in subparagraph (C), by striking “15” and inserting “18”;

(C) in subparagraph (E), by striking “and” at the end;

(D) in subparagraph (F), by striking “Carter,” and inserting “Carter, and properties in the vicinity of the residence along West Church Street that are needed for administrative and visitor uses and to protect scenic values, not to exceed 10 acres;”;

(E) by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

“(G) the Billy Carter Service Station at 104 West Church Street, consisting of less than one acre;

“(H) the property at 147 Old Plains Highway, known locally as the ‘Haunted House’, where Jimmy and Rosalynn Carter resided from 1956 to 1961, consisting of approximately one acre;

“(I) the Georgia Welcome Center on State Route 280/27, consisting of approximately 18 acres; and

“(J) two corridors of land no wider than 50 feet each between the Georgia Welcome Center and the President Carter boyhood home for the purpose of establishing walking and biking trails while using, to the greatest extent practicable, the right-of-way for the Shoreline Excursion Train.”;

(4) in subsection (c)(1)—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by striking “and” at the end;

(B) in subparagraph (B), by striking the period at the end and inserting “; and”; and

(C) after subparagraph (B), insert the following:

“(C) by donation only, other lands and interests in lands in the environs of Plains containing natural, cultural, or historic resources consistent with the purposes of the national historical park which, upon acquisition, shall be included in and administered as part of the national historical park.”;

(5) in subsection (c)(2), by inserting “, the Georgia Welcome Center (referred to in subsection (b)(2)(I)),” after “subsection (b)(2)(A))”.

SEC. 2. REDESIGNATION AS NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK.

(a) REDESIGNATION.—Public Law 100-206 is amended—

(1) by striking “National Historic Site” each place it appears and inserting “National Historical Park”;

(2) by striking “historic site” each place it appears and inserting “national historical park”;

(3) in the section heading of section 1, by striking “NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE” and inserting “NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK”;

(4) in the subsection heading of section 1(b), by striking “NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE” and inserting “NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK”;

(5) in the section heading of section 3, by striking “HISTORIC SITE” and inserting “NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK”.

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the “Jimmy Carter National Historic Site” shall be deemed a reference to the “Jimmy Carter National Historical Park”.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Public Law 100-206 is further amended by striking section 7.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Guam.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Guam?

There was no objection.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, the Jimmy Carter National Historic Site in Plains, Georgia, was established in 1987 to preserve the boyhood home and current residence of our 39th President. The former President and his wife have a lifetime tenancy in their home and are actively involved in the work of the park.

The pending measure would expand the current boyhood homesite from 15 acres to 18 acres and allow the National Park Service to acquire several additional properties. The bill would also redesignate the park from a national historic site to a national historical park.

Mr. Speaker, the sponsor of this legislation, Representative SANFORD BISHOP, is to be commended for his commitment to preserving this important piece of Presidential history. This is an excellent piece of legislation, and I urge Members to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that President Carter is heavily involved in the land acquisition and park expansion authorized in this legislation. We have been made aware that one of the properties included in the expansion is a haunted house. This is no Halloween trick. The currently dilapidated structure will be rehabilitated by the National Park Service and eventually be made available to show the public where President Carter lived before his current estate was constructed.

I am also aware that President Carter is an avid hunter. He likes to stalk deer, dove, quail, turkey, and even the occasional squirrel. Fortunately, with the passage of an important Republican gun rights amendment to the Credit Card Reform Act last spring, President Carter will be able to legally transport his firearms to and from his home and clean and load his firearms on his compound within the national park without fear of violating Federal law when this provision goes into effect in February 2010.

Right now, other Americans and the other 391 National Park units would be subject to criminal penalties for these actions.

President Carter has an excellent relationship with the National Park Service, which should be preserved. After all, the agency has the duty to preserve the legacy of his 4 years as President through the conservation of his high school, boyhood home and even his current residence within the park. The National Park Service dutifully handles many important tasks, including the day-to-day maintenance of his property and even of mowing his lawn.

Finally, it has been said that these new acquisitions will complete the story of Mr. Carters life. This is a noble goal. I can only assume that is why the legislation also includes the Federal takeover of Billy Carter's gas station.

Mr. BISHOP of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1471, which will expand and revitalize the Jimmy Carter National Historic Site, which is located in Plains, Georgia.

My Congressional District in Southwest Georgia includes Plains. Therefore I am pleased to sponsor this bipartisan legislation in the U.S. House of Representatives which, if passed, will bolster the local economy, enhance tourism, and provide people from around the world with a new insight into the life and career of the 39th President of the United States.

H.R. 1471 will

p and the national historic site's authorized boundaries from 15 acres to 18 acres and would allow the National Park Service to acquire several additional properties for the park, including a house that the Carter family lived in from 1956–1961. Additionally, the legislation will redesignate the park from a national historic site to a national historical park. It also would direct that the park service preserves, and interprets, a southern agricultural-based rural community during the early to middle years of the 20th century.

Last August, I took my whole staff on a visit to the Jimmy Carter National Historic Site, including his boyhood home and school, so they could get a better feel and understanding of the values that shaped this great Georgian. We listened to the messages recorded by the former President that tell visitors of his experiences as a child and young man and how they influenced his views and values. After touring the Depression-era farm, home and school where he grew into manhood, every one of my staff members, including a number from Georgia and several who are not, told me they were inspired by what they learned about the life of Jimmy Carter, just as I have been.

The eventual passage of this bill will ensure that the Jimmy Carter National Historic Site has the resources it needs to continue to inspire generation after generation of visitors. Additionally, the investments made in this property will positively impact the economic development of Plains and the surrounding Sumter County by providing increased opportunities for tourism.

The Jimmy Carter National Historic Site already does a remarkable job of helping people to understand the values that shaped this great Georgian. This bill will ensure that the site will continue to inspire generations of visitors, as well as grow and positively impact the economies of Plains. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1471.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I again urge Members to support the bill, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1471, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STEPHEN MATHER WILDERNESS AND NORTH CASCADES NATIONAL PARK BOUNDARY ADJUSTMENT

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2806) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the boundary of the Stephen Mather Wilderness and the North Cascades National Park in order to allow the rebuilding of a road outside of the floodplain while ensuring that there is no net loss of acreage to the Park or the Wilderness, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 2806

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

Congress finds as follows:

(1) In 1988, 93 percent of the North Cascades National Park Complex was designated the Stephen Mather Wilderness.

(2) A road corridor was deliberately excluded from the wilderness designation to provide for the continued use and maintenance of the upper Stehekin Valley Road.

(3) The upper Stehekin Valley Road provides access to Stephen Mather Wilderness trailheads and North Cascades National Park from the Lake Chelan National Recreation Area.

(4) Record flooding in 1995 and again in 2003 caused severe damage to the upper Stehekin Valley Road and led to the closure of a 9.9-mile section of the road between Car Wash Falls and Cottonwood Camp.

(5) The National Park Service currently does not have the flexibility to rebuild the upper Stehekin Valley Road away from the Stehekin River due to the current location of the non-wilderness road corridor provided by Congress in 1988.

(6) It is a high priority that the people of the United States, including families, the disabled, and the elderly, have reasonable access to the National Parks system and their public lands.

(7) The 1995 Lake Chelan National Recreation Area General Management Plan calls for retaining vehicle access to Cottonwood Camp.

(8) Tourism associated with the North Cascades National Park Complex is an important part of the economy for rural communities in the area.

(9) Additional management flexibility would allow the National Park Service to consider retention of the upper Stehekin Valley Road in a manner that provides for no net loss of wilderness.

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION FOR BOUNDARY ADJUSTMENTS.

The Washington Park Wilderness Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-668) is amended by inserting after section 206 the following:

"SEC. 207. BOUNDARY ADJUSTMENTS FOR ROAD.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may adjust the boundaries of the North Cascades National Park and the Stephen Mather Wilderness in order to provide a corridor of not more than 100 feet in width along which the Stehekin Valley Road may be rebuilt—

"(1) outside of the floodplain between milepost 12.9 and milepost 22.8;

"(2) within one mile of the route, on the date of the enactment of this section, of the Stehekin Valley Road;

"(3) within the boundaries of the North Cascades National Park; and

"(4) outside of the boundaries of the Stephen Mather Wilderness.

"(b) NO NET LOSS OF LANDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The boundary adjustments made under this section shall be such that equal amounts of federally owned acreage are exchanged between the Stephen Mather Wilderness and the North Cascades National Park, resulting in no net loss of acreage to either the Stephen Mather Wilderness or the North Cascades National Park.

"(2) STEHEKIN VALLEY ROAD LANDS.—The newly designated wilderness shall include the lands along the route of the Stehekin Valley Road that are replaced by the reconstruction.

"(3) EQUALIZATION OF LAND.—If the lands described in paragraph (2) contain fewer acres than the corridor described in subsection (a), the Secretary may designate additional Federal lands in the North Cascades National Park as wilderness, but such designation may not exceed the amount needed to equalize the exchange and these additional lands must be selected from lands that qualify as wilderness under section 2(c) of the Wilderness Act (16 U.S.C. 1131(c)).

"(c) NO SALE OR ACQUISITION AUTHORIZED.—Nothing in this Act authorizes the sale or acquisition of any land or interest in land.

"(d) NO PRIORITY REQUIRED.—Nothing in this Act shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to give this project precedence over the construction or repair of other similarly damaged roads in units of the National Park System."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Guam.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

There was no objection.

Ms. BORDALLO. I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2806, sponsored by Natural Resources Committee Ranking Member DOC HASTINGS, would allow the National Park Service to adjust the boundary of the Stephen Mather Wilderness, inside North Cascades National Park, to provide for a new road corridor.

Flooding has repeatedly washed out significant portions of a road in the park. Today, the road is impassable for vehicles above what used to be the halfway point.

The pending measure would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to redraw the boundaries of the wilderness within prescribed parameters to provide a new corridor so that the road could be partially rerouted out of the floodplain and rebuilt to its original end. The bill would require that any boundary changes made to accommodate the road result in no overall loss of acreage to the wilderness area.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, to ensure that a wilderness designation would not block public access to historic recreation sites, the 1988 law that established the Stephen Mather Wilderness area in the North Cascades National Park provided for a 100-foot-wide, non-wilderness corridor to the upper Stehekin Valley.

Unfortunately, flooding in 1995 and again in 2003 washed away parts of the road, and it remains impassable today.

Representative DOC HASTINGS' bill, H.R. 2806, restores the intent of Congress by allowing the relocation of the road to a less flood-prone site. This bill does not reduce the amount of wilderness in the park.

It is strongly supported by local officials and by former Senator Dan Evans, who sponsored the 1988 law. When the National Park Service solicited public comments on alternatives for the management of the area, over 90 percent of those comments favored keeping the road open.

I urge my colleagues to join ranking Republican DOC HASTINGS and Chairman NICK RAHALL in supporting this legislation.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I now would like to recognize for 1 minute the author of the bill, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. I am not the author of the bill, but I have worked with Mr. HASTINGS. Thank you for that compliment.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak in favor of this bill, and I thank Mr. HASTINGS for his working with us to perfect this bill in a couple of ways.

We have made the bill clear that we have constrained the Park Service's definition of where a potential road could be built. Mr. HASTINGS and I both felt that it was important for Congress to retain some authority over where the wilderness boundaries are so that we would not give unfettered control to the Executive branch. We also make clear in the bill that the passage of this bill is not intended, in any way shape or form, to instruct the Park Service to change their prioritization on what roads to build or not to build in the Park Service.

There are many needs in the Park Service. We know there is a constrained budget situation. We know there are many roads that have been washed out and that there are trails that have been washed out, and we do not intend in this bill to change any priority array as to what could be done to the Park Service.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, again, I urge all Members to support this piece of legislation. I commend the author, Mr. HASTINGS from the State of Washington, for authoring this, and I ask that all Members support this legislation.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2806 is a limited bill that allows for continued public access to the North Cascades National Park from the community of Stehekin, Washington.

Stehekin, located at the western end of Lake Chelan, is the gateway to the North Cascades National Park and is accessible only by boat, floatplane, or a multi-day hike. From the town of Stehekin, the Stehekin Valley Road has long allowed residents and visitors to access some of the most beautiful scenery in the North Cascades in what is now the Park's Stephen Mather Wilderness.

At the July 30, 2009 hearing before the Subcommittee on National Parks, Forests and Public Lands, the Subcommittee heard testimony from local officials on how flood damage to the upper Stehekin Valley Road has limited public recreational access to the North Cascades National Park Complex. This reduced access has been particularly painful for the small, tourist-dependent community of Stehekin which serves as the gateway to the Park.

During legislative consideration of the Park's creation in 1988, Congress determined that Stehekin Road would remain outside of the wilderness boundary to ensure continued public access. Otherwise, no cars, mountain bikes, or other mechanized vehicles would have been allowed to transport area residents or Park visitors into the wilderness areas in the center of the Park north of Stehekin.

As the Stehekin River has shifted and damaged the road, the Park Service has been unable to rebuild the road out of the path of the river because of the narrow road corridor in the original Park designation. H.R. 2806 would simply allow the Secretary limited authority to adjust the road corridor out of the path of the Stehekin River, with no net loss of land to either the Park or the Stephen Mather Wilderness. These changes and road rebuilding would still be subject to review and comment under the National Environmental Policy Act.

This is a limited bill that protects the public access into the Park Complex promised at the Park's creation, and I encourage my colleagues to give their support to H.R. 2806 and the Stehekin community.

Ms. BORDALLO. I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2806, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CASCADIA MARINE TRAIL STUDY ACT

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1641) to amend the National Trails System Act to provide for a study of the Cascadia Marine Trail, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 1641

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION OF TRAIL FOR STUDY.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Cascadia Marine Trail Study Act".

(b) DESIGNATION OF TRAIL FOR STUDY.—Section 5(c) of the National Trails System Act (16 U.S.C. 1244(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"() Cascadia Marine Trail, a series of water trail routes encompassing approximately 2,300 miles of shoreline in the State of Washington, extending from Point Roberts near the Canadian border to the southern reach of Puget Sound near Olympia. In conducting the study, the Secretary shall coordinate with appropriate Federal, State, local, tribal, and private entities, and may evaluate sites of recreational, scenic, or historic significance near the Cascadia Marine Trail for potential inclusion in the Trail. The Secretary shall also consider what activities may be limited by the designation, including existing activities, hunting, boating, or proposed infrastructure improvements."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Guam.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Guam?

There was no objection.

Ms. BORDALLO. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Puget Sound region of Washington State combines tremendous scenic beauty with numerous historic sites. Boaters and kayakers traveling these waters are surrounded by spectacular mountains and abundant wildlife.

Through 15 years of diligent work by local advocates and volunteers, 54 campsites on a 150-mile route along the coast now constitute the Cascadia Marine Trail. The pending measure would authorize a study of this trail for its potential inclusion in the National Trails System. So, by all accounts, this trail is certainly worthy of this consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I commend our colleague, Representative JAY INSLEE, for his hard work and for his dedication to this legislation. I support the passage of H.R. 1641, and urge all Members to do so as well.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1641 has been adequately explained by the majority. As the current trail is being operated successfully at a local level, we are not aware of the need for this legislation.

Apparently, though, some believe there is a compelling need for Federal involvement where Americans paddle kayaks in the Puget Sound. As this bill provides for a study of the federalization of these water trails, possible objections will likely be held until the study is completed and until actual Federal control is to be proposed.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield as much time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, this bill simply provides for a study of feasibility of adding the Cascadia Marine Trail to the National Trails System.

This trail is entirely a water-based trail, extending from the Canadian border through the San Juan Islands, Puget Sound and south to our State capital of Olympia. Significant portions of this trail run through the waters of my district. It includes 2,300 miles of shoreline and 55 safe pullouts right now for camping areas of non-motorized, beachable watercraft.

Thousands of people have the potential of enjoying this trail. It was added as a national recreation trail in '94, and the Canoe Association designated the trail as an ACA-recommended water trail in 2005.

We know it's a beautiful spot. I've been there. I encourage everyone to give it a go. It gives users unique opportunities to see eagles, orca, otters, porpoises, and whales. It's quite a place to be, but we do think it's an appropriate study to consider its inclusion in our National Trails System given the national notoriety and publicity that this will entail, and it will allow people to really know about the trail.

I want to thank Chairman RAHALL and Subcommittee Chairman GRIJALVA for their work to move this forward. I would like to also acknowledge the National Park Service office in Seattle for their technical assistance. I want to thank my constituents who have been working on this now for at least two decades, particularly the Washington Water Trails Association, especially Don Crook, Reed Waite and Julie Anderson for their efforts, and John Kuntz, with the Olympic Outdoor Centers, and the Kitsap Paddle Club for their leadership.

It is supported by the Washington Water Trails Association, the National Parks Conservation Association, the Washington Wildlife and Recreation Coalition, and the Washington State Parks.

I want to thank the Speaker, Mr. LARSEN, for cosponsoring this bill, and I can guarantee anyone who will enjoy this national water trail that it never rains in Puget Sound.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I, again, urge Members to support the bill, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Guam (Ms. BORDALLO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1641, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECOGNIZING 120TH ANNIVERSARY OF WEBER STATE UNIVERSITY

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 854) recognizing Weber State University for the 120th anniversary of its founding as an institution of higher education.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 854

Whereas Weber State University (WSU) was founded in 1889 as Weber State Academy; Whereas WSU celebrates its 120th anniversary this year;

Whereas WSU is a public university that offers associate's, bachelor's, and master's degrees, as well as professional, liberal arts, and technical certificates;

Whereas WSU is located in Ogden, Utah, and has an additional campus in Layton, Utah;

Whereas WSU serves more than 23,000 full-time and part-time students;

Whereas the WSU Wildcats have 14 intercollegiate programs that participate in the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I athletics;

Whereas Weber State University promotes community involvement and community-based learning experiences for its students; and

Whereas Weber State University prides itself in its excellent teaching, commitment to meeting the needs of students, and ongoing service to the community: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) congratulates Weber State University on the 120th anniversary of its founding as an institution of higher education; and

(2) recognizes the contributions of Weber State University to its students and community.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. BISHOP) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Puerto Rico.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I ask for 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material on House Resolution 854 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 854, which celebrates the 120th anniversary of Weber State University.

Founded in 1889, Weber State Academy eventually became what is now known as Weber State University. From its humble beginnings, Weber State has grown into a 400-acre campus in Ogden, Utah and a 105-acre campus in Layton, Utah.

The university takes great pride in serving the needs of its students while preparing them for life-long service to their community. Offering more than 200 undergraduate majors, WSU is home to the largest and most comprehensive undergraduate program in the State of Utah.

□ 1430

U.S. News & World Report cites WSU as one of the top 10 public master's institutions in the West. The campus features more than 100 student clubs and organizations, in addition to 14 athletic programs which compete in the NCAA Division I. While most of its students are drawn from Utah, the campus is enriched by students hailing from the 50 States and 35 foreign countries.

The student body of WSU is an accomplished one, with a variety of campus programs achieving national recognition. For example, Wildcat athletes have qualified for the Olympic trials in track and captured the Big Sky Conference championship. The WSU Wind Ensemble was invited to the Los Angeles International Band and Orchestra Festival, and WSU theater students were selected to perform at the renowned Kennedy Center right here in Washington, D.C.

In addition to its esteemed academic and cultural reputation, Weber State University is known for its commitment to civic engagement and community service. The campus' Community Involvement Center seeks to engage students by providing opportunities of academic learning and community service. The center coordinates with community agencies and runs the AmeriCorps Education Award Program.

I congratulate Weber State University on 120 years of service and leadership and look forward to what the coming years have for this accomplished institution.

I thank the gentleman from Utah (Mr. BISHOP) for bringing forth this resolution to this floor and ask my colleagues to join Mr. BISHOP and me in supporting this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BISHOP of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I also thank the gentleman from Puerto Rico for the kind words he said about one of the premier institutions in the top of Utah, which is Weber State University.

Today I rise in support of House Resolution 854, recognizing Weber State University on the 120th anniversary of the founding of that institution. It started, obviously, as a religious stake academy, the Weber Academy, in 1889. Then it has had several changes, going into, first of all, a 2-year college as Weber College, then a 4-year institution, Weber State College, and then eventually as Weber State University.

The first president or principal of that Weber Academy was Louis Moench, who was a German immigrant, a great educator as well as administrator and truly a Renaissance man, because he is also the author of one of my favorite religious hymns.

The second principal was David O. McKay, who went on to become the president of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and one of the most revered religious figures in the Nation in his time.

The present president, President Milner, is the first female president of a 4-year college or university in the State of Utah, and she does a magnificent job in leading the 23,000 students that comprise the campus in Ogden, as well as 3,500 students in the satellite campus in Davis County, as well as outreach programs that take place in Box Elder, Morgan, Davis and other counties throughout the State of Utah.

This is an institution which has set its goal on education excellence—does this well—as well as competitive excellence. It is a member of the Big Sky Conference, where last year it won the titles in the conference in both football, basketball and, I believe, women's soccer. At the same time, it is still ranked number 14 in its division in football this particular year.

It also has one of the State's largest nursing programs, the State's only dental hygiene program, the State's only police academy. Its proximity to Hill Air Force Base makes it a premier educational institution, not only for those continuing its education, for those who are working at Hill Air Force Base, but also for the servicemen who attend there and participate in part of their program.

Indeed, the theatrical production that the gentleman from Puerto Rico mentioned that was held here at the Kennedy Center was a student production of Macbeth, which I had the opportunity of watching—one of those light-hearted musical comedies coming at the end of a long day—but it was a spectacular production of which those students at Weber State University should be proud.

Like every institution that takes place, it is a community asset. It provides educational excellence for the people in that area, provides economic incentives for the people of that particular area, it is a source of community enlightenment and activities through its academic and art programs. With all of us, there is always some kind of interface that goes along with it.

One time, the president of Weber State University—at that time it was Weber State College—was Joseph Bishop, who I wish I could claim was a relative because he was intelligent, but I can't. During its great growth spurt, right after World War II, Weber State was led by Dr. Miller, an excellent president who I feel very close to because I was able to mow his mother's lawn because she was a neighbor of mine in Kaysville.

At the same time, my father-in-law played football at Weber State. My wife graduated from Weber State. Perhaps one of our greatest acknowledged alumna from Weber State is a Member of the House of Representatives today. Representative LYNN JENKINS from Kansas is a graduate of Weber State, which I didn't know until today. Now I know who to hit up for in the future.

I have a daughter that wants to attend the dental program at Weber

State, a daughter-in-law that wants to go to the nursing program at Weber State. We have very close ties to this particular institution. It's an institution that has received many honors. It is the recipient of the President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll for the third consecutive year, was listed in Forbes magazine, ranked 43rd among public colleges, selected to host the Council on Undergraduate Research in 2010 and the National Conferences on Undergraduate Research in 2012, numerous faculty teaching excellence awards.

In the Big Sky Conference in 2009 it won the Presidents' Cup, which recognizes not only accomplishments on the field of athletic endeavor but also in the field of classroom work. This was the fourth time in 7 years it received that particular honor.

I am very proud of Weber State University, in the top of Utah. I am proud what it does for students that I used to teach, what it does for the community, the standards that it sets as a standard of excellence in education, as well as what it does to add to community life for all of us who actually live in northern Utah.

I am appreciative of having this resolution here. I am appreciative of the recognition that the gentleman from Puerto Rico has given to this particular institution.

Mr. Speaker, if I could inquire if the gentleman from Puerto Rico has any other speakers.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I don't, Mr. Speaker. Mr. BISHOP of Utah. I don't have any other speakers.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I ask that my colleagues support the resolution celebrating the 120th anniversary of Weber State University.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 854.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Ms. Wanda Evans, one of his secretaries.

CONGRATULATING THE IOWA HAWKEYES WRESTLING TEAM

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 368) congratulating the University of Iowa Hawkeyes wrestling team on winning the 2009 NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championships, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 368

Whereas the University of Iowa Hawkeyes wrestling team Head Coach Tom Brands was named the Big Ten Coach of the Year and led the team to its 22nd national title and his 2nd national title, and also led the team to its 33rd Big Ten Conference title and his 2nd conference title;

Whereas the Hawkeyes wrestling team was represented proudly by 9 NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championship qualifiers, including Chad Beatty, Jay Borschel, Daniel Dennis, Dan Erikson, Charlie Falck, Phillip Keddy, Brent Metcalf, Ryan Morningstar, and Alex Tsirtsis;

Whereas the Hawkeyes wrestling team was also represented proudly by NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championship finalist Brent Metcalf, who also won his second straight Big Ten title and earned Outstanding Wrestler honors at the Big Ten Championships;

Whereas the Hawkeyes wrestling team was also represented proudly by Dan Erikson, who won his first Big Ten title at the Big Ten Championships;

Whereas the Hawkeyes wrestling team was honored by having 5 All-Americans with Daniel Dennis, Dan Erikson, Phillip Keddy, Brent Metcalf, and Ryan Morningstar being named;

Whereas the Hawkeyes wrestling team had a final team score of 96.5 to place them 1st in the NCAA Division I standings;

Whereas the hard work and dedication of the Hawkeyes wrestling team's Brodie Ambrose, Mark Ballweg, Matt Ballweg, Chad Beatty, Jay Borschel, Jeret Chiri, Derek Coorough, Colby Covington, Daniel Dennis, Dan Erikson, Michael Fahrer, Charlie Falck, Grant Gambrall, Stew Gillmor, Tyler Halverson, Aaron Janssen, Jordan Johnson, Phillip Keddy, Jake Kerr, Nick Kolegraff, Brooks Kopsa, J.J. Krutsinger, Ryan Kurovski, Dan LeClere, Nick LeClere, T.H. Leet, Rick Loera, Luke Lofthouse, Montell Marion, Weston Marling, Matt McDonough, Brent Metcalf, Joe Moore, Nate Moore, Ryan Morningstar, Blake Rasing, Ethan Sebert, Joe Slaton, Alex Tsirtsis, Head Coach Tom Brands, Assistant Coach Terry Brands, Assistant Coach Doug Schwab, Strength and Conditioning Coach Jared Frayer, Volunteer Assistant Coach Mike Zadick, and Administrative Assistant Luke Eustice all contributed to an outstanding season culminating in the 2009 national title;

Whereas the current Hawkeyes wrestling team has continued the team's winning history, which includes 33 Big Ten Conference Championships and 22 NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championships;

Whereas the Hawkeyes wrestling team set the national collegiate dual meet attendance record of 15,955 when it hosted Iowa State December 6, 2008, at Carver-Hawkeye Arena and led the Nation with an average home dual meet attendance figure of 8,008 for the 2008-09 season;

Whereas the Hawkeyes wrestling team has a rich tradition and history of producing champions and outstanding collegiate athletes and coaches since the program began in 1911;

Whereas former Hawkeyes wrestling Head Coach and Olympic Gold Medalist, Dan Gable, helped establish one of the most successful wrestling programs in the Nation and is commended for his past leadership and guidance; and

Whereas the Hawkeyes wrestling team has brought honor to the team, the University of Iowa, the City of Iowa City, and the State of Iowa: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) commends the University of Iowa Hawkeyes wrestling team for winning the 2009 NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championship; and

(2) congratulates the team on winning its 22nd national title since 1975 and finishing the season with a perfect 24-0 overall record and a perfect 8-0 conference record, ending the season on a 38-match winning streak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. BISHOP) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Puerto Rico.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on House Resolution 368 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the University of Iowa Hawkeyes wrestling team for their victory in the 2009 NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championship tournament.

On March 21, the college wrestling fans were treated to an exceptional wrestling match as the University of Iowa won its 22nd national team title with a final team score of 96.5 points, edging runner-up Ohio State University by only 4.5 points.

That was the closest margin of victory since Iowa won the 1999 team title by 2 points and only the second time in school history that the Hawkeyes won the NCAA title without an individual champion.

The Iowa Hawkeyes put together a remarkable season. The wrestling team was represented proudly at the NCAA national championship match with nine championship qualifiers. Brent Metcalf, a junior, won his second straight Big Ten title and earned Outstanding Wrestler honors. Dan Erikson, a junior, won his first Big Ten title of the Big Ten championships. In total, the 2009 team produced 15 All-Americans and 19 All-Academic Big Ten athletes.

The Hawkeyes wrestling team is a premier program. The extraordinary achievement of this season is a tribute to the skill and dedication of the many wrestlers, coaches, students, alumni, families and fans that have helped to make the University of Iowa a wrestling powerhouse.

I want to extend my congratulations to Coach Tom Brands, who returned to his alma mater and led the team to a perfect 24-0 overall record, an 8-0 record in Big Ten dual matches, and a national championship in just his third season as a head coach. Impressive feats such as these are why Coach Brands was named the 2009 Coach of the Year by the Big Ten conference.

Congratulations are also in order for assistant coaches Terry Brands, Doug Schwab and Mike Zadick; strength and conditioning coach, Jared Frayer; and administrative assistant, Luke Eustice. They all played a vital part in the success of this talented team.

Last season's victory adds to a robust history. The University of Iowa Hawkeyes wrestling program began in 1911 and has produced a rich history of champions with 33 Big Ten conference championships and 22 NCAA Division I national championships.

Winning the national championship, finishing the season with a 24-0 overall record and winning the Big Ten Conference championship for the 33rd time has brought national acclaim to the University of Iowa. I know the fans of the university will revel in this accomplishment as they look forward to the 2010 season.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Congressman LOEBSACK for bringing this resolution forward. Once again, I congratulate the University of Iowa for their success.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BISHOP of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Once again, the gentleman from Puerto Rico, I appreciate you bringing this resolution to the floor and rise today to support House Resolution 368 to congratulate the University of Iowa Hawkeyes on winning the 2009 NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championship. This is, indeed, an honor for all those who are working in that system, for all those who are associated with the University of Iowa, as well as the residents of the State of Iowa.

The University of Iowa was founded in 1847 as Iowa's first public institution of higher learning and, since that time, has gained international recognition for its academic, artistic and scientific accomplishments as a public university. It established the first law school and was the first U.S. public university to admit men and women on an equal basis. The University of Iowa's academic and athletic accomplishments have earned the University of Iowa Hawkeyes an international reputation for excellence.

This last school year, in 2009, the university's reputation was furthered by the accomplishments of this wrestling team. The University of Iowa wrestling team began in 1911 and has recently been named one of the top sports dynasties of the 20th century by Sports Illustrated.

Since its founding, the Hawkeye wrestling team has won 22 national championships, as was mentioned by the gentleman from Puerto Rico. The Hawkeyes competed in the first Big Ten meet clear back in 1926, won their first NCAA title in 1975. They won a streak of nine consecutive NCAA team championships from 1978 to 1986. In the 23 wrestling seasons since that time, the Hawkeyes have claimed 11 national championships. The University of Iowa Hawkeye wrestling team undoubtedly has a long and rich history of excellence.

At the head of the outstanding team sits Head Coach Tom Brands, who was named the Big Ten Coach of the Year and the National Wrestling Coaches Association's Coach of the Year in 2008. Coach Brands is a former gold medalist and made four straight U.S. World or Olympic teams.

He started as head coach with the University of Iowa's wrestling team in 2006 and has been leading the team to excellence since then. The 2009 wrestling season marked the Hawkeye wrestling team's most recent series of achievements. After a successful season, the Hawkeye team was proud to have nine of their athletes qualify for the Division I championships, and with a final score of 96.5, the Hawkeyes were in first place as the national champions.

I am honored to stand in this House today to congratulate and recognize the significant achievements of the players, coaches, and students whose dedication and hard work have led to the success of the University of Iowa Hawkeye wrestling program, as well as the 2009 Division I National Wrestling Championship.

As usual, there is always some kind of personal tie that comes to these types of resolutions. Again, I have people I have known from Utah who have specifically gone to this school, to this program, not just for the quality of the wrestling program it has, but for the quality of the education the institution provides. The State of Iowa should indeed be very proud of this particular institution.

I ask my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I have no other speakers for this particular resolution, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to support the resolution congratulating the University of Iowa Hawkeye's wrestling team for their victory in the 2009 NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championship tournament.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 368, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

CONGRATULATING SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY MEN'S LACROSSE TEAM

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 562) congratulating Syracuse University for winning the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I Men's Lacrosse Tournament.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 562

Whereas, on May 25, 2009, the Syracuse University Orange defeated the Cornell Big Red 10-9 in overtime, in the finals of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Division I Men's Lacrosse Tournament in Foxboro, Massachusetts;

Whereas the Orange now hold 11 men's lacrosse national titles, the most in NCAA History;

Whereas Orange head coach John Desko won his fifth NCAA title;

Whereas the Orange players, coaches, and staff are excellent representatives of Syracuse University;

Whereas the Orange showed tremendous spirit in the championship game, coming back from what appeared to be an insurmountable three-goal deficit with less than four minutes to go, only to win the game in overtime; and

Whereas the residents of Syracuse and fans are to be congratulated for their support, dedication, and pride in the team: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives congratulates Syracuse University for winning the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I Men's Lacrosse Tournament.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) and the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Puerto Rico.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on House Resolution 562 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Syracuse University men's lacrosse team for their victory in the 2009 National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I Men's Lacrosse Tournament.

On May 25, 2009, the Syracuse Orange men's lacrosse team celebrated their NCAA Division I championship title after a close 10-9 victory over the Cornell Big Red. This victory marks the 11th national championship for the Orange in lacrosse, the most in NCAA history. This is the second consecutive year that the Syracuse men's lacrosse team has successfully won this title. In addition, this win capped a season for the Orange that saw the team tie the NCAA record for the best 1-year win-loss improvement.

The game that secured the Orange's victory was especially exciting. Down three goals with four minutes to play and the ball in Cornell's possession, Syracuse staged an unlikely comeback. Scoring the definitive goal in sudden death overtime made for an exhilarating and especially exciting win for the team, showcasing their focus under pressure and excellent teamwork.

I congratulate John Desko on his fourth national title as coach of the Orange. In his 11 years as head coach at Syracuse, he has led the Orange to seven NCAA final appearances and nine Final Fours. Coach Desko serves as a wonderful mentor to his players both on and off the field.

I want to recognize the Syracuse Orange for their incredible season, characterized by tenacity, talent, and leadership. I am certain that this team will carry this momentum into next season.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I congratulate Syracuse University men's lacrosse team on their 2009 Division I NCAA championship title.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 562, congratulating Syracuse University for winning the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I Men's Lacrosse Tournament.

It is estimated that lacrosse may have developed as early as the 12th century. It originated among Native American tribes in North America. In 1637, the game was first named lacrosse. The game underwent many modernizations during the 19th century, and the first intercollegiate lacrosse game was played in 1877. By the early 1900s, students across North America were participating in the sport in high schools, colleges, and universities.

Syracuse University was founded in 1870. Today, the university serves over 19,000 full- and part-time undergraduate and graduate students. Syracuse University offers degrees in over 20 majors from 10 different schools and colleges. Syracuse Orange has 12 women's intercollegiate athletic teams and 8 men's intercollegiate athletic teams.

SU has 27 team national championships, including 11 men's lacrosse NCAA national championships. Syracuse University's men's lacrosse team added an 11th NCAA championship to their record this year. That is the most NCAA national lacrosse championships ever won by a single team.

Syracuse's team was coached by John Desko. In the final championship game, SU won against Cornell University in overtime in a thrilling game that ended 10-9. Junior Cody Jamieson scored the winning point 1 minute 20 seconds into the extra session.

It is truly an honor to stand before the House today to congratulate Syracuse University for winning the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I Men's Lacrosse Tournament. I extend my congratulations to Syracuse University, the players, the coaches, and the students. I wish all involved continued success and ask my colleagues to support this resolution.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I ask my colleagues to support the resolution congratulating the Syracuse University men's lacrosse team for their victory in the 2009 National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I Men's Lacrosse Tournament.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 562.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

CONGRATULATING NORTH- WESTERN UNIVERSITY WOMEN'S LACROSSE TEAM

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 824) congratulating the Northwestern University Wildcats on winning the 2009 NCAA women's lacrosse championship, and to commend Northwestern University for its pursuit of athletic and academic excellence.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 824

Whereas the Northwestern women's lacrosse team serves as important role models to young athletes, demonstrating excellence on the athletic field and in the classroom;

Whereas Northwestern defeated North Carolina 21-7 to win the national championship on May 24, 2009;

Whereas Northwestern finished the season with a 23-0 record to win their fifth straight national championship; and

Whereas senior Hannah Nielsen won the Tewaaraton Trophy, given to the Nation's top player, and played a vital role in helping Northwestern to a 23-0 record in 2009, finishing her distinguished career as the Wildcats' all-time leader in points (398) after becoming the NCAA Division I all-time assist leader with 224: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) congratulates Northwestern University and its athletes, coaches, faculty, students, administration, and alumni on the winning of the 2009 NCAA women's lacrosse championship;

(2) recognizes and commends Northwestern University for its pursuit of athletic as well as academic excellence; and

(3) directs the Clerk of the House of Representatives to make available enrolled copies of this resolution to Northwestern University President Henry S. Bienen, Athletic Director James Phillips, and Head Coach Kelly Amonte Hiller for appropriate display.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) and the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Puerto Rico.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on House Resolution 824 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 824, which recognizes and congratulates the Northwestern University Wildcats for winning the 2009 NCAA Women's Lacrosse Championship and for pursuing athletic and academic excellence.

The Wildcats posted a 23-0 regular season record and broke NCAA records both for total points and total goals in a season. The team applied the lessons learned during their undefeated year and displayed their outstanding athletic skills and cohesive team strategy in post-season play, trailing only once during the entire tournament.

On May 24, 2009, the University of North Carolina Tar Heels cut the Northwestern Wildcat's lead to two goals midway through the first half of the championship game. Northwestern responded with 10 consecutive goals to win its fifth straight NCAA championship in women's Division I lacrosse. The team's 21-7 victory over the Tar Heels set the record for goals scored in the title game.

Special congratulations are due to Coach Kelly Amonte Hiller, who now boasts a 20-1 record in the NCAA tournament. Amonte Hiller took over a program that had club status, and not only brought the team to official collegiate standings, but amassed five national championships and six conference titles in just eight seasons. The seniors on this team had one of the most successful collegiate athletic careers.

Recognition also should be given to senior Hannah Nielsen, who won the Tewaaraton Trophy for the second year in a row. This award is given to the Nation's top lacrosse player by the Tewaaraton Foundation.

Northwestern University succeeds not only on lacrosse fields, but in its classrooms as well. It ranks 12th in the 2010 national university rankings issued by U.S. News & World Report and boasts a 92.5 percent graduation rate, an amazing statistic for any university.

In addition to over 70 established majors, Northwestern University empowers students to choose or design non-traditional concentrations and offers a wide range of field experiences and internships. It is an institute of higher learning from which its graduates, including its athletes, go on to accomplish great things and make important contributions to our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, once again I congratulate the Northwestern University women's lacrosse team on its 2009 Division I NCAA championship title. I wish the program much success in the 2010 season.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 824, congratulating the Northwestern University Wildcats on winning the 2009 NCAA Women's Lacrosse Championship and to commend Northwestern University for its pursuit of athletic and academic excellence. As a graduate of Northwestern University School of Law myself, I am especially proud to join in honoring these talented women and the school they represent.

On May 24, 2009, the Northwestern University women's lacrosse team, the Wildcats, capped a perfect 2009 season by routing third ranked North Carolina 21-7 to capture its fifth straight national championship, finishing the year 23-0.

The Wildcats continued to etch its place as one of the top programs in the history of the sport, becoming just the second team to win five consecutive national titles. They are just two shy of Maryland's seven straight wins from 1995 to 2001, and the victory over the Tar Heels, 16-5, was Head Coach Kelly Amonte Hiller's 20th consecutive tournament victory.

At Northwestern University, these dynamic women demonstrate excellence on the athletic field as well as in the classroom. Founded in 1854, Northwestern University combines innovative teaching and pioneering research in a highly collaborative environment that transcends traditional academic boundaries. It provides students and faculty exceptional opportunities for intellectual, personal, and professional growth.

Northwestern is recognized both nationally and internationally for the quality of its educational programs at all levels. U.S. News & World Report consistently ranks the university's undergraduate and graduate programs among the best in the country. The Northwestern women's lacrosse team serves as an important role model to young athletes.

Congratulations to Northwestern University's president, Morton Schapiro; athletic director, James Phillips; head coach, Kelly Amonte Hiller; senior, Hannah Nielsen, who won the Tewaaraton Trophy given to the Nation's top player; the entire Wildcat team; the faculty, staff, and Northwestern students on this victory.

Today, we recognize and commend Northwestern University for its pursuit of athletic as well as academic excellence. I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 824.

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the Northwestern University Wildcats women's lacrosse team as the 2009 NCAA champion. This season marks the team's fifth straight national championship win and solidifies Northwestern University as a national leader both in academic and athletic excellence.

The Northwestern University women's lacrosse team is looked upon as a role model by young athletes in the Chicagoland area, maintaining the highest standard of excellence both in the classroom and on the field. Most noted, is senior Hannah Nielson. Hannah has been honored as the nation's top lacrosse player with the Tewaaraton Trophy due to her exemplary performance as the Wildcat's all-time leader in points and by helping to lead her team to 23-0 victory in 2009.

Furthermore, I would like to extend my congratulations to the 10 Wildcat seniors Hilary Bowen, Mary Kate Casey, Laura Clemente, Casey Donohoe, Meredith Franks, Caitlin Jackson, Ali Jacobs, Morgan Lathrop, Hannah Nielson and Meghan Plunkett who have finished their amazing collegiate careers with an 85-3 record including four American Lacrosse Conference titles and four NCAA national titles.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Res. 824, a resolution I introduced to congratulate the Northwestern University women's lacrosse team for winning its fifth consecutive national championship.

Mr. Speaker, the Northwestern University lacrosse team completed the 2009 season with a record-setting 21-7 victory over North Carolina in the NCAA championship game on May 24. It capped a perfect 23-0 season for head coach Kelly Amonte Hiller and her team, joining the 2005 team as the second undefeated team in school history.

The Wildcats faced numerous challenges in seeking their fifth consecutive championship, yet they rose to meet that challenge each and every time. For instance, when trailing Penn 12-11 with time running out in the first overtime period of the NCAA semifinals, Katrina Dowd flipped a miracle shot over her shoulder while falling to the turf, which somehow scored with 0.2 seconds remaining, tying the game at 12. The team went on to win the game in the second overtime period.

As a team, the Wildcats set NCAA single-season records for points (570) and goals (407), while also leading the nation in draw controls (16.9 per game). Individually, Hannah Nielsen became the NCAA's single-game (10), single-season (83) and career assist leader (224). Sixteen of Northwestern's 23 wins came against ranked opponents, and they were a perfect 10-0 at home, extending their home winning streak to 54, an NCAA record.

In addition to the team honors, six Wildcats were awarded All-American honors by the Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Coaches Association (IWLCA) and U.S. Lacrosse. Hannah Nielsen and Katrina Dowd were named to the first team, while Hilary Bowen, Meredith Frank and Danielle Spencer all earned second-team honors and goalkeeper Morgan Lathrop was a third-team selection.

In addition to being successes on the athletic field, this team is a success in the classroom as well. Fourteen members of the team were honored this year as being academic all-Big Ten honorees. The lacrosse team had 14 academic all-Big Ten honorees. And Senior Hilary Bowen was named ESPN the Magazine Women's At-Large Academic All-American of the Year.

Lastly, while this team's intelligence, athletic prowess and determination are evident, I would like to share a story that demonstrates the team's heart and commitment to their community. During the 5-year championship run, the Northwestern lacrosse team has made an enduring and lasting friendship with 10-year-old Jaclyn Murphy. The friendship began as the Wildcats did what they could to raise the spirits of a young girl diagnosed with a brain tumor. Today, that friendship between NU and Jaclyn continues to deepen. After seeing the impact the team had on his daughter, Jaclyn's father Denis started the Friends of Jaclyn Foundation, a non-profit organization created to raise public awareness regarding pediatric brain tumors. To date, over three dozen collegiate and high school teams have "adopted" children with brain tumors.

In conclusion Mr. Speaker, this team represents our nation's ideal of what the student athlete should be. Not only are the members of this team fantastic athletes and stellar students, they are also wonderful people. I would like to recognize all the team members: Bea Conley, Danielle Spencer, Shannon Smith, Katrina Dowd, Rachel Fox, Kim Pantages, Erin Fitzgerald, Lizzie Abramson, Taylor Thornton, Alexandra Frank, Lacey Vigmostad, Colleen Magarity, Samantha Suntuoli, Ali Cassera, Amanda Macaluso, Brooke Matthews, Gabrielle Flibotte, Maggie Bremer, Kirstyn Atkinson, Maria Tedeschi, Jessica Russo, Alexa Delyra, Brittany Wilbon, Darby St. Clair-Barrie, Brianne LoManto, and Sara Harrington, as well the coaches Kelly Hiller, Lindsey Munday, Ann Elliot, and Scott Hiller. I feel privileged to represent this team in Congress and I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mrs. BIGGERT. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PIERLUISI. Having no additional speakers, Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues support the resolution, congratulating the Northwestern University Wildcats for winning the 2009 NCAA Women's Lacrosse Championship.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 824.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

SUPPORTING THE GOALS AND IDEALS OF NATIONAL DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 817) supporting the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month and expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that Congress should continue to raise awareness of domestic violence in the United States and its devastating effects on families and communities, and support programs designed to end domestic violence, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 817

Whereas domestic violence affects people of all ages as well as racial, ethnic, gender, economic, and religious backgrounds;

Whereas females are disproportionately victims and one in four women will experience domestic violence at some point in her life;

Whereas on average, more than three women are murdered by their husbands or boyfriends in the United States every day;

Whereas in 2005, 1,181 women were murdered by an intimate partner constituting 78 percent of all intimate partner homicides that year;

Whereas women ages 16 to 24 experience the highest rates, per capita, of intimate partner violence;

Whereas 1 out of 3 Native American women will be raped and 6 out of 10 will be physically assaulted in their lifetimes;

Whereas the cost of intimate partner violence exceeds $5,800,000,000 each year, $4,100,000 of which is for direct medical and mental health care services;

Whereas one-quarter to one-half of domestic violence victims report that they have lost a job due, at least in part, to domestic violence;

Whereas the annual cost of lost productivity due to domestic violence is estimated at $727,800,000 with over 7,900,000 paid work-days lost per year;

Whereas some landlords deny housing to victims of domestic violence who have protection orders or evict victims of domestic violence for seeking help after a domestic violence incident, such as by calling 911, or who have other indications that they are domestic violence victims;

Whereas 92 percent of homeless women experience severe physical or sexual abuse at some point in their lifetimes;

Whereas approximately 40 to 60 percent of men who abuse women also abuse children;

Whereas approximately 15,500,000 children are exposed to domestic violence every year;

Whereas children exposed to domestic violence are more likely to attempt suicide, abuse drugs and alcohol, run away from home, and engage in teenage prostitution;

Whereas one large study found that men exposed to physical abuse, sexual abuse, and adult domestic violence as children were almost four times more likely than other men to have perpetrated domestic violence as adults;

Whereas nearly 1,500,000 high school students nationwide experienced physical abuse from a dating partner in 2003;

Whereas 13 percent of teenage girls who have been in a relationship report being hit or hurt by their partners and one in four teenage girls has been in a relationship in which she was pressured by her partner into performing sexual acts;

Whereas adolescent girls who reported dating violence were 60 percent more likely to report one or more suicide attempts in the past year;

Whereas there is a need for middle schools, secondary schools, and post-secondary schools to educate students about the issues of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence, and stalking;

Whereas 88 percent of men in a national poll reported that they think that our society should do more to respect women and girls;

Whereas a recently released multi-State study shows that the Nation's domestic violence shelters are addressing victims' urgent and long-term needs and are helping victims protect themselves and their children;

Whereas a 2008 National Census Survey reported that 60,799 adults and children were served by domestic violence shelters and programs around the Nation in a single day;

Whereas an additional 8,927 people requested help that day, but due to lack of resources, they were unable to be served;

Whereas there is a need to increase funding for programs aimed at intervening and preventing domestic violence in the United States; and

Whereas individuals and organizations that are dedicated to preventing and ending domestic violence should be recognized: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) supports the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month; and

(2) expresses the sense of the House of Representatives that Congress should continue to raise awareness of domestic violence in the United States and its devastating effects on families and communities, and support programs designed to end domestic violence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) and the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT) each will control 20 minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Puerto Rico.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on House Resolution 817 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 817, supporting the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month and expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that Congress should continue to raise awareness of domestic violence in the United States. I would also like to thank Congressman AL GREEN for bringing this resolution forward. It is an important bill and deserves much attention.

National Domestic Violence Awareness Month is recognized in the month of October. As such, communities and many groups hold events to educate the public about the violence that affects millions of women, men and children every single day. Domestic violence advocacy increases awareness and helps battered people seek the help they desperately need.

Domestic violence is the willful intimidation, assault, battery, sexual assault or other abusive behavior perpetrated by an intimate partner against another. It is an epidemic that affects men, women and children in every community regardless of age, sex, economic status, nationality or educational background.

One in every four women will experience domestic violence in her lifetime, and those who report domestic violence are more likely to commit suicide. In addition, the costs of domestic violence exceed $5.8 billion each year. As evidenced by these staggering statistics, domestic violence has far-reaching effects on society.

When we think of domestic violence, we often think of women being the victims, yet men suffer from domestic violence as well. Male victims are less likely than women to report violence and to seek services due to the stigma associated with being a male victim or concerns about not being believed. Both men and women respond to interpersonal violence with feelings of disbelief, ridicule and shame that only enhance their silence.

Our attention to domestic violence has grown, but we need to do more to raise awareness of this problem because it can serve as a dangerous, never-ending cycle. Whether domestic violence is present in couples or in marriages, children who witness violent behavior are more likely to carry domestic violence into their adult relationships.

Research shows that children witnessing domestic violence and living in an environment where violence occurs may experience some of the same trauma as abused children. They may become fearful, aggressive or withdrawn. Adolescents may exhibit risk-taking behaviors, such as abusing drugs and alcohol, running away, engaging in sexual promiscuity and participating in criminal activity. All of these behaviors have an effect on society as a whole, and we can break the chain of domestic violence through ongoing education and comprehensive universal support.

We must remember that domestic violence victims are our mothers, fathers, sisters and brothers. Congress must continue to lead in making our Nation aware of domestic violence and its impact on our society. We can galvanize public awareness for victims of domestic violence. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 817.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

I rise today in support of House Resolution 817, supporting the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month and expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that Congress should raise awareness of domestic violence in the United States and its devastating effects on families and communities and support programs designed to end domestic violence.

As the gentleman from Puerto Rico just mentioned, one in every four women will experience domestic violence in her lifetime. Boys who witness domestic violence are twice as likely to abuse their partners and children when they become adults. The cost of intimate partner violence exceeds $5.8 billion each year. As evident by these staggering statistics, domestic violence has a far-reaching effect on society.

Let me repeat the definition that the gentleman from Puerto Rico stated: domestic violence is the willful intimidation, assault, battery, sexual assault and/or other abusive behavior perpetrated by an intimate partner against another. It is an epidemic that affects individuals in every community regardless of age, economic status, religion, nationality, educational background or gender.

When we think of domestic violence, we often think of women being victims. However, men are victimized as well, and children are also affected. We think of violence as just violence, not domestic violence. But violence really begins at the home, and it really begins at the back of someone's hand, or whatever, rather than a stranger, and it goes throughout the community. Male victims are less likely to report the violence and seek services due to the stigma associated with being a male victim or not being believed or being denied the status of a victim. But both men and women experience the same dynamics of interpersonal violence, including experiences of disbelief, ridicule and shame that only enhance their silence.

Unfortunately, the youngest victims are the children who witness the abuse. Research has shown that children witnessing domestic violence and living in that environment may experience some of the same trauma as abused children. They may become fearful, aggressive or withdrawn. Adolescents may act out or exhibit risk-taking behaviors. Domestic violence harms the victim, the children, the abuser and the entire health of American families and communities. So we must raise awareness about this issue. The health of our country depends on it.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 817, and I would reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I do have one additional speaker.

I would like to say that the victims of domestic violence in America—women, men, children—are looking up to us to take the lead, to make sure that this epidemic does not continue. They're particularly vulnerable, and they want us to relate to them; they want us to support them, and the best way we can do that is by being aware and by taking the lead and making sure that there are Federal programs as well as State initiatives that make sense and make a difference.

Without adding anything else, I now yield 5 minutes to the sponsor of this resolution, the gentleman from Texas, Congressman AL GREEN.

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored that leadership has brought this resolution, H. Res. 817, to the floor today. I believe that this resolution is important, and this likewise seems to be the case with my colleagues because this resolution has received the support of 57 Democratic and Republican cosponsors. This resolution has been a bipartisan effort. And for fear that I will forget, let me mention now that my colleague, the Honorable TED POE, will not be with us today, but he is here in spirit. He suffered the same fate as I; his plane is late in Houston, Texas. I was on the runway for 2 hours. I barely made it, but thank God that I did. I want the Members to know that he is solidly behind this resolution. This resolution, with reference to domestic violence, transcends party affiliation; it transcends ethnicity; it transcends gender; and it transcends the boundaries of human decency.

Many thank you's are in order. I want to thank the President, President Barack Obama, for declaring October National Domestic Violence Awareness Month. I would like to thank Speaker PELOSI because she has entered a statement recognizing this as Domestic Violence Awareness Month. The Congressional Women's Caucus deserves a sound round of thank you's because they have been involved in helping us to raise awareness year-round. I would like to thank Chairman GEORGE MILLER of the Education and Labor Committee for the outstanding work that he has done in helping us to get this resolution to the floor. His staff has done a stellar job. They have worked with my staff to make sure that the resolution arrived here timely. I would like to thank the ranking member, JOHN KLINE, for his work with the Honorable TED POE in helping us to get this resolution to the floor.

All of my colleagues are honorable, but I am mentioning TED in such a way simply because he is not here, and I know his heart is with us. I would like to thank the ranking member who is here today, Representative JUDY BIGGERT, for her help and for her kind words with reference to this resolution and Representative PIERLUISI from Puerto Rico for his efforts to help us get this resolution to the floor and for managing this resolution today.

At this time I want to call our attention to some history associated with this issue of domestic violence. Domestic Violence Awareness Month was first observed 22 years ago, and since that time, we've had additional legislation that has come into being that has made a difference with reference to helping us to end domestic violence. The Family Violence Prevention and Services Act of 1984 is an important piece of legislation. This piece of legislation helped us to acquire more emergency shelters, crisis prevention programs and community education efforts. It truly has made a difference.

There also has been another piece of important legislation, the Violence Against Women Act of 1994, which created a new culture for the police officers who work these cases and the judges who hear these cases. These cases at one time were thought to be, unfortunately, family business, and there were too many persons who were involved in the business of law enforcement who did not make it their business. I'm honored that the Violence Against Women Act of 1994 has helped change this culture. I would also mention that the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009 was important because it contained $225 million for violence against women programs. These programs are going to be of great benefit to a good many women.

Domestic violence awareness is growing, but it has not reached a point wherein we can rest on our efforts. At one time it was one of the most under-reported crimes in this country. As I indicated, too many police officers, too many judges, too many persons associated with enforcement did not make it their business. And although we have sought to do the business of helping women and men who are victims of domestic violence, there is still much work to be done. One survey indicates that in 1 day, more than 60,000 people received help. However, at the same time, on that same day, 9,000 requests went unanswered. There is still much work to be done. In my State of Texas, the Houston Area Women's Center has indicated that in the year 2008, 136 women were killed by their intimate partners, 11 children were killed, and 96 children lost their parents to domestic violence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PIERLUISI. I yield the gentleman an additional 2 minutes.

□ 1515

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. I thank the gentleman for yielding the additional time.

Ninety-six children were killed by domestic violence.

The national data on this is equally as appalling. More than three women are murdered by their husbands or boyfriends in the United States every day. One of every four women will experience domestic violence at some point in her lifetime. In 2005, 1,181 women were murdered by an intimate partner. Women from ages 16 to 24 experience the highest rates of domestic violence on a per capita basis. Six of 10 Native American women will be physically assaulted in their lifetimes. Ninety-two percent of homeless women will experience physical or sexual abuse at some point in their lifetimes. Forty to sixty percent of men who abuse women also abuse children.

Millions of children witness every year domestic violence. By at least one estimate, 15.5 million children witness domestic violence.

So we now come to a call to action. We should not allow anyone to have to live in fear within his or her home. We believe that this is an offense that can be eliminated. It will take much effort from us. We here in Congress will have to fund the programs that can make a difference. And without question, programs have been developed that can make a difference. Training is necessary to teach people how to live with each other without abusing each other. The police must enforce the laws, the judges must enforce the laws, and in the end we can live in a world where people can live safely in their homes without fear of being harmed by people that they have great affinity and affection for.

The National Network to End Domestic Violence (NNEDV), the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NCADV) along with 9 other national organizations is heralding the arrival of Domestic Violence Awareness Month and urging Congress, members of the media and the public to take a stand against domestic abuse.

The economic downturn is exacerbating domestic violence, and victims of domestic abuse urgently need everyone's help. Although the economy does not cause domestic violence, but in abusive relationships, factors associated with a bad economy can increase the frequency and severity of abuse. Job losses, the lack of affordable health care, the housing crisis and a host of other conditions are increasing abuse and leaving survivors with fewer options to escape. The demand for services is going up, but funding for services is going down.

Governmental entities, corporations and individuals are tightening their budgets and are funding life-saving programs at reduced levels across the nation.

In a national census survey conducted by the National Network to End Domestic Violence, in just one day in 2008 more than 60,000 victims sought services, yet nearly 9,000 requests for services went unmet due to lack of funding.

The most extreme example is California, where the governor completely eliminated state funding for domestic violence services. Other states have seen funding reductions, but California represents the most shocking of these reckless cuts.

This year, Domestic Violence Awareness Month is particularly meaningful. The movement against domestic abuse is celebrating the 15th anniversary of the Violence Against Women Act, originally authored by then-Senator Joe Biden. This year is also the 25th anniversary of the Family Violence Prevention & Services Act. Both are critical federal laws that provide funding for services and the justice system's responses to intimate partner abuse.

These laws have made an amazing difference in our ability to address domestic violence. Across the country, federal, state and local laws are working to serve countless survivors and saving lives, but we need to do more. Still, an average of three women are murdered daily by someone who says love you.' This is unacceptable and preventable. Domestic violence affects us all, and it tears at the fabric of our communities. Every day, men, women and children experience the tragic effects of domestic violence.'

In recognition of Domestic Violence Awareness Month, let us renew efforts to invest in lifesaving shelters and other critical domestic violence services like counseling and emergency hotlines.

Members of Congress and the public can take a stand for survivors of abuse by supporting the Domestic Violence Awareness Month Resolution sponsored by Representative Al Green (D-TX) and Representative Ted Poe (R-TX), which has received bipartisan support of nearly 60 members of the House of Representatives.

Sincerely,

SUE ELSE,
President, National Network to End Domestic Violence.

RITA SMITH,
President, National Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to close.

I really appreciate the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GREEN) being down here and speaking about his bill and about the background of domestic violence because it's been obviously going on for a long time. We have made great strides. As I have witnessed, we reauthorized the Violence Against Women Act, VAWA, several times. But it's been a long time coming and a long time to be recognized. And that's why this awareness month is so important so that we can really take a look and see how can we really end this and how can we do it to help the police, the families. But we have got to have the education, I think, that will help to stave that off. And the more we can do to recognize the causes of it and how to deal with it, the better.

I thank the author and I thank the gentleman from Puerto Rico for managing this bill, and I urge my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is to remind all of us that domestic violence here in the United States is as prevalent now as it has ever been. Millions of men, women and children across the country are affected by domestic violence each year.

In a day last year more than 60,000 victims sought and received help from domestic violence programs, and due to lack of funding and resources, 8,927 requests were left unmet. Some may even die because of the lack of services counties across the country are unable to provide for families affected by family violence. In Harris county Texas alone, filings for domestic violence are 18 percent above last year and 40 percent more than 2007. These numbers are not only staggering but they are unacceptable.

On October 10th, 2005 in Baltimore, Maryland Yvette Cade's estranged husband, Roger Hargrave, carried a soda bottle filled with gasoline to her work and poured it over her body. As she ran outside, she tripped in the parking lot and he set her on fire. Ms. Cade was attacked three weeks after; Prince George's County District Court Judge Richard Palumbo lifted a protective order against Hargrave. Judge Palumbo is being charged with misconduct, claiming he violated judicial standards when he dismissed the protective order against Hargrave despite Cade's protests. Ms. Cade has third-degree burns over 60 percent of her body and has had over 15 surgeries due to this horrific crime.

On January 29th, 2009 in Houston, Texas a man was accused of killing his estranged girlfriend's mother and then shooting himself. He had been charged with domestic violence days earlier, after he beat his 17-month-old daughter. Elaine Walker was shot trying to protect her daughter when Roydrick Jiles burst into the daughter's home. Auriel Walker had refused to see or talk to Jiles, after he beat her and their child several days before. She tried to stop him from breaking into their home and he then shot Elaine Walker, Auriel's mother. He then abducted his estranged girlfriend and their child until he shot himself.

Both of these stories prove that sometimes there are preliminary warning signs of domestic violence which, if not handled correctly, can often times lead to severe abuse and even death. Approximately 1.3 million women and 835,000 men are physically assaulted by an intimate partner annually in the United States. One in every four women will experience domestic violence in her lifetime.

Witnessing violence between one's parents or caretakers is the strongest risk factor of transmitting violent behavior from one generation to the next. Boys who witness domestic violence are twice as likely to abuse their own partners and children when they become adults.

We must continue to raise awareness in this country of how common domestic violence is, and without funding and proper resources local governments cannot combat this problem alone. It takes all of us, and informing people of this nationwide problem is the first step. And that's just the way it is.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 817 to support the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month and to raise awareness of domestic violence in the United States.

When we discuss domestic violence, we are often surprised to discover that domestic violence happens to people of every socioeconomic background in the United States. Everyday, countless individuals become victims of acts perpetuated by intimate partners that seek to establish, maintain, or regain power and control in a relationship. These acts can be as basic as mental and verbal abuse and range to the more obvious physical and sexual abuse. Many times, the victims of these acts are the least likely people one would suspect to suffer from abusive situations, and for this reason domestic violence awareness month is so important.

It is also crucial to note that women are the most frequent victims of domestic violence, and it is estimated that one in every four women will experience domestic violence at some point in their life. Additionally, more than three women are murdered by their husbands or boyfriends in the United States every day, and in 2005 alone, 1,181 women were murdered by an intimate partner. These staggering numbers remind us that we must do all we can to end domestic violence, and particularly domestic violence against women.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting House Resolution 817 so that we can raise awareness about domestic violence and help to end it.

Ms. LINDA T. SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution to declare October 2009 the twenty-second Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

The first Domestic Violence Awareness Month was observed in 1987. Over these last 22 years, we have made major strides in making Americans safer and more secure and ensuring the victims of violence receive the services they need.

With the support of federal and state funds, the number of domestic violence shelters, rape crisis centers and service programs has increased significantly. These shelters offer victims a place to turn for help: for emergency shelter and crisis services, and also for legal assistance, transitional housing, and services for their children.

Not only have we strengthened our laws and justice system, we have also brought together victims advocates, law enforcement, and health care professionals to ensure more effective treatment for victims of domestic violence.

This month is an occasion to recognize dedicated law enforcement officers, special prosecutors, counselors, and shelter programs that understand that ending violence requires the efforts of an entire community. It is also a time to reiterate that domestic violence in any form is a crime. It does not matter whether the abuser is a family member; a current or past spouse, boyfriend, or girlfriend; an acquaintance; or a stranger. It is a crime, and it is wrong.

Today, I also commend those who have found the courage to leave an abusive relationship. When individuals get the resources they need, they become strong, and so do their families.

Despite all the gains we have made in reducing domestic violence, we must recognize that the work is not complete; too many are still victims, and too many live in fear on a daily basis. It will take all of us to fulfill the promise to end domestic violence and assault.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, domestic violence is a widespread problem. Over two million people a year are physically assaulted by an intimate partner, and an additional 1.3 million are the victims of stalking. H. Res. 817 is an important reminder that October is National Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and that we need to raise awareness of the problem and its serious consequences for victims and their families.

We know that the majority of these domestic violence victims are women, and they often need leave from work to address the effects of this violence. While the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA, P.L. 103-3) allows employees to take unpaid leave from work for other situations (e.g. for birth, adoption or to care for a spouse, child under age 18, or parent who has a serious health condition), there is no leave for workers who are recovering from domestic abuse, sexual assault, or stalking, and who need medical attention, legal assistance, counseling, or to participate in other activities that take place during working hours.

H.R. 2515, the Domestic Violence Leave Act, which I have introduced, expands the FMLA to allow workers to take leave to address the consequences of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking. It also provides leave to workers so that they can care for a family member—spouse, parent or child, including an adult child—who is a victim of abuse. In addition, the bill extends all of the protections of the FMLA to “domestic partners,” and “children of a domestic partner.”

Our primary goal must be to stamp out domestic violence altogether. But until then, we need to help those victims who need time off to deal with its effects.

Ms. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 817, which supports the goals and ideals of Domestic Violence Awareness Month and expresses the sense of the House of Representatives that Congress should raise awareness of domestic violence issues and support programs designed to end domestic violence.

Twenty-two years ago, the first Domestic Violence Awareness Month was observed and since 1989 legislation designating October as National Violence Awareness Month has passed every year. Domestic violence affects people of every age, race, ethnicity, religion, and gender. Women are most disproportionately affected and nearly one in four women will experience domestic violence during her lifetime. Every single day in the United States, more than three women are murdered by their significant other. Young women ages 16 to 24 experience the highest rates of intimate partner violence. Every year, over 15 million children are exposed to domestic violence and these children are more likely to abuse alcohol and drugs, attempt suicide, and become involved in teenage prostitution. These statistics are sobering.

In a struggling economy, domestic violence programs are needed more than ever. Earlier this year marked the 15th anniversary of the passage of the Federal Violence Against Women Act; however, more work must be done to protect victims of domestic violence. In my home State of California, cuts in state financing have led to elimination of funding for shelter services. This has translated to cuts in services and fewer victims being served. Ultimately, this sends a message that victims of domestic abuse are not a priority to our State.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting the goals and ideals of Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to vote for the resolution supporting the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 817, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12(a) of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 19 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

□ 1730

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PETERS) at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.

DECLARATION OF A NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO THE 2009 H1N1 INFLUENZA PANDEMIC—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 111-73)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to section 201 of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1621), I hereby report that I have exercised my authority to declare a national emergency in order to be prepared in the event of a rapid increase in illness across the Nation that may overburden health care resources. This declaration will allow the Secretary of Health and Human Services, if necessary, to temporarily waive certain standard Federal requirements in order to enable U.S. health care facilities to implement emergency operations plans to deal with the 2009 H1N1 influenza pandemic in the United States. A copy of my proclamation is attached.

Further, I have authorized the Secretary of Health and Human Services to exercise the authority under section 1135 of the Social Security Act to temporarily waive or modify certain requirements of the Medicare, Medicaid, and State Children's Health Insurance programs and of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act Privacy Rule as necessary to respond to the pandemic throughout the duration of the public health emergency declared in response to the 2009 H1N1 influenza pandemic.

BARACK OBAMA.
THE WHITE HOUSE, October 23, 2009.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 2996, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, ENVIRONMENT, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2010

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1 of rule XXII and by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2996) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior, environment, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2010, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to instruct at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Simpson moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendment to the bill H.R. 2996 be instructed as follows:

(1) Insist on section 425 of the House bill (regarding a prohibition on funds to implement any rule requiring mandatory reporting of greenhouse gas emissions from manure management systems).

(2) That they shall not record their approval of the final conference agreement (as such term is used in clause 12(a)(4) of rule XXII of the Rules of the House of Representatives) unless the text of such agreement has been available to the managers in an electronic, searchable, and downloadable form for at least 72 hours prior to the time described in such clause.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the instruction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A point of order is reserved.

Pursuant to clause 7 of rule XXII, the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. SIMPSON) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, before I get into the substance of this motion to instruct, I want to thank Chairman DICKS and his staff for listening to the views of the minority during our preconference deliberations. While we may not agree on everything in this Interior Appropriations conference agreement, our staff discussions have been very productive.

The motion I am offering today is very straightforward and does two things. First, it would insist on section 425 of the House bill regarding a prohibition on funds to implement any rule requiring mandatory reporting of greenhouse gas emissions from manure management systems. Secondly, it would require that the Interior Appropriations conference report be available 72 hours prior to House consideration for the public and Members to read.

This motion to instruct simply insists upon the House-passed bill's position relating to the Latham amendment. The Latham amendment simply says that the EPA cannot implement a rule that requires mandatory reporting of greenhouse gas emissions from cow, pig, or chicken manure.

The Latham amendment was offered in full committee and was one of the very few amendments passed this year with strong bipartisan support. Every Democrat on the Appropriations Committee with agricultural interests in his district supported it, and no one made an effort to strike the language on the House floor. Now, of course anyone could have done that—excuse me, I was wrong. We didn't consider this bill under an open rule, so they would have had to go to the Rules Committee, but no one did go to the Rules Committee to get an amendment approved so that they could offer it on the floor. It was part of the House-passed Interior Appropriations bill and should be a part of the Interior Appropriations conference agreement.

According to the EPA, livestock manure management systems account for less than 1 percent of all human-induced greenhouse gas emissions in the United States. Over 85 percent—that's 85 percent—of greenhouse gas emissions from agriculture in total come from sources other than manure management systems, and these sources are not subject to the reporting rule. By the EPA's own admission, regulating these sources would be overly expensive and burdensome.

Members of the Agriculture Committee have been warning us for years of the danger of climate change rule-making outside of the legislative process. This EPA rule is clear evidence that the chickens have finally come home to roost, as have the cows and pigs.

If you have livestock or a family farm in your congressional district, you will want to support this motion to instruct. The simple truth is that the livestock industry is being hammered by the downturn in our national economy. If you are raising animals for food, you are either losing your shirt or you are going out of business. That's the truth. It's not an exaggeration. Frozen credit markets have left farmers and ranchers without the credit they need to run their day-to-day operations, and many have been forced to sell their land or declare bankruptcy.

It was only a few weeks ago that we added $350 million to the Ag Appropriations conference report to bail out the dairy industry, which is collapsing under the strain of the credit crisis and low milk prices. And in the Interior conference report, we're not only making it more difficult for farmers to succeed, we are setting them up to fail.

There is another irony here worth noting. The Interior Appropriations conference agreement is likely to include an exemption to a clean air rule affecting ships on the Great Lakes. Chairman OBEY recognized that the excesses of the EPA would place additional hardships upon an economy already devastated by the recession, so the chairman has done what anyone in his position would do to help his constituents—he took action. I happen to agree with him. That's no different from what TOM LATHAM is trying to do to help farmers, ranchers, and livestock producers in Iowa and across the country. The only difference is that Mr. LATHAM's amendment was in the original House bill and Chairman OBEY's rider was airdropped in at the last minute. So we are going to protect the Great Lakes on the one hand while we regulate farmers out of business on the other hand.

If the EPA had existed in Biblical times, there is no question in my mind that it would have regulated gas emissions from Noah's Ark. Poor Noah and his livestock; they could withstand a 40-day flood, but they would never have survived the EPA.

I encourage Members on both sides to take a step back and think about this. Let's use a little common sense here. I urge Members, especially if you support agriculture, farming, and the livestock industry, to support this motion.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reservation is withdrawn.

The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DICKS. I want my colleagues to know that these are two important issues. We are going to work on them, and we are going to do the very best we can.

EPA has come out with a ruling on this issue that wants to make sure that the largest people who have the biggest farms with the most cows, cattle, and pigs have to report, but we are working on this. We're going to do the best we can to come out with a credible position for the House of Representatives.

And we will do the best we can on the 72 hours, but we have to keep the government running. We have a responsibility to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LATHAM).

Mr. LATHAM. I thank the gentleman from Idaho, and I thank the Speaker for the recognition.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate included a one-sentence provision in the 2008 omnibus spending bill requiring the EPA to develop and publish a rule that mandates the reporting of greenhouse gas emissions for all sectors of the U.S. economy. That one sentence reads, "Of the funds provided in the Environmental Programs and Management Account, not less than $3,500,000 shall be provided for activities to develop and publish a draft rule not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this act, and a final rule not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this act, to require mandatory reporting of greenhouse gas emissions above appropriate thresholds in all sectors of the economy of the United States."

Mr. Speaker, this one sentence, incidentally, I will say—and I will say again later—never had a hearing. It was snuck in in this bill. That one sentence resulted in 1,302 pages, 42 volumes of regulations, and I hold here the 1,300 pages. The preamble of this regulation is 500 pages long. This is what this is, another 500 pages. So we've got 1,800 pages, and the Regulatory Impact Analysis of more than 200 pages. Mr. Speaker, here is another 200 pages. So, in total, this one sentence that was snuck in this bill has resulted in over 2,000 pages of new regulations for our country at a time that we're in a recession and people are hurting out there. This is the cost of more government.

The proposed rule generated about 17,000 comments. According to the EPA, this rule will cost employers $115 million for the first year, and estimates about $70 million each year after that just to comply with the new 2,000 pages here. Mr. Speaker, as a former small business owner and farmer, I would suggest these numbers are exceedingly low. And there is no estimate as to how much has already been spent by businesses trying to figure out whether or not they fall under the regulation, and if they do, how they're going to follow these new rules.

Congress tucked this sentence into an appropriations bill, again, without holding a single hearing. Let me reemphasize, not a single hearing goes into these 2,000 pages of regulations that are now being put on top of our economy. Consequently, the language provided no limitation or guidelines for the EPA and gave the agency unlimited authority to draft the new rule.

The EPA did its job; 1,300 pages in regulations are a testament to the Congress using the Appropriations Committee to shortcut the authorizing committee process.

The language we are debating today impacts the livestock industry. Within these 1,300 pages, the regulation requires a reporting of greenhouse gases from animal agriculture, which, on the surface, seems harmless enough. However, I want to stress that this regulation has a cost and, more importantly, it will do nothing to improve the environmental health of rural America. It doesn't make manure lagoons smell any better. It doesn't protect water wells or native species. It doesn't do one thing to improve the standard of living in rural Iowa or any part of this country. It has, however, improved the standard of living of people in metropolitan Washington, D.C., because this one sentence has kept a bunch of bureaucrats at EPA busy for the last year and a half.

Farmers work very hard day to day to try to preserve their environment, from learning how to keep their topsoil from washing away, to improving the quality of our water, to eliminating odor and turning waste products into energy. The health of the environment is critically important to the success of a farming operation.

American farmers have done a great job in finding ways to protect the environment without sacrificing their families' farms' incomes; but at a time when our Nation's farmers are facing some of the most difficult economic times in the last decade, we are introducing a new and costly Federal mandate. This regulation will generate additional input costs for an industry that can ill afford it.

Dairy has lost about $12 billion in milk receipts from 2008–2009, about a 33 percent loss; pork, a loss of about $2 billion, or 10 percent in receipts for hogs, and the industry is expected to lose another $800 million this year; cattle, a loss of about $5 billion, or 10 percent of its receipts; and poultry producers are going bankrupt.

If you're in livestock today, you are losing money. The EPA estimates the cost of reporting will be $900 per facility. However, one instrument used to measure methane can cost about $15,000, and it requires trained personnel to maintain, which adds further costs. So these farmers are going to have to hire an expert to sit there and monitor the machines. To me, that adds up to a little more than $900 per facility.

To add further costs to production is simply foolish and irresponsible on the part of this Congress. This language should never have been added to a spending bill. That's why we have an authorizing committee and why Members representing agriculture are concerned about this climate change legislation.

You think about it. One sentence tucked into an appropriations bill generated 1,300 pages of regulations, 500 pages of preamble and 200 pages of regulatory impact analysis, and it regulates all sectors of the economy, agriculture just being a small slice.

We have cap-and-trade bills that have thousands of pages of legislative language alone that Members of Congress want signed into law. This Congress intends to give the EPA a huge increase in spending this year, and I guess they're going to need it. Why? Because the EPA is going to have to hire a heck of a lot of new people to write those regulations, and regulations with equations like these have real costs to our economy.

Let me just show you what this regulation looks like. This is true. This is why farmers love Washington—when you have a paragraph that puts one of the formulas in these regulations that farmers have to comply with. Let me just read.

It says, "For all manure management system components listed in 98.360(b), except digesters, estimate the annual CH₄ emissions and sum for all the components to obtain total emissions from the manure management system for all animal types using equation JJ-1."

Well, this is equation JJ-1. You figure it out. We're going to have to have a bunch of mathematicians on the farm along with the EPA, apparently.

The regulation, as written, is onerous. The cost and scope is in serious question, and agriculture cannot afford another Federal mandate on this economy. Manure management is a serious issue. I know. I grew up and I live in Iowa, but this rule does nothing—and I emphasize again nothing—to improve the way farmers manage their manure.

Ladies and gentlemen, we stand up here every day, and we talk about the economic problems outside the beltway and about how much we want to work to provide assistance. When will it dawn on us that here in Washington we are part of that problem? Washington mandates costs on a daily basis, whether on farmers who feed us or on our constituents in low-income areas who have to pay more of their hard-earned dollars each month to cover the costs of our well-intentioned handiwork. We need to think about the impacts—$200 here, $1,000 here, $200 million over there. Pretty soon, our employers are struggling to keep up with the government-generated cost-of-living increases.

I ask my colleagues to please support this motion to instruct. It is absolutely critical, not only in agriculture but for our constituents back home.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I just want to give a little background on this. I think the gentleman has a perspective, but I want to make sure that everyone understands what actually happened here.

The EPA administrator signed the proposed rule for the mandatory reporting of greenhouse gases from large emission sources in the United States on March 10, 2009. It was published in the Federal Register on April 10, 2009. The EPA received almost 17,000 written comments on the proposal, and it heard from approximately 60 people at the two public hearings. The final rule reflects changes the EPA made as it carefully considered and responded to significant comments.

Now what has happened here is that thousands of small farmers would be exempted, and only the 90 largest manure management systems in the country would be required to report their emissions, those who annually emit as much in greenhouse gases as 58,000 barrels of oil. It is important for the EPA to receive information from these systems because the EPA needs reliable data on the greenhouse gas emissions from major facilities in all industries if we are going to be able to base our climate policy on a solid and thorough understanding of the problem.

So I think this rule, which is very close to where, I think, the conferees are going to come out, does the right thing. It exempts thousands of small farmers; but for the ones who have enormous operations, where large amounts of greenhouse gases are emitted, they have to report.

I think that's reasonable, and I think the process is reasonable. Congress directed that this be done. It was our committee that required a greenhouse gas registry so that we could make these decisions based on science, not on just political machinations. We did it on science. The EPA did it on science. I think it's a reasonable compromise.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would just remind the chairman that what we have is an authorizing committee that ought to be doing this and not the Appropriations Committee that ought to be doing this. This is the result of language put in an appropriations bill. We have authorizing committees like the Ag Committee which ought to be looking at this and overseeing it, not the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my friends, Chairman NORMAN DICKS and MIKE SIMPSON, for nearing the completion of their work on the Interior appropriations report as we speak. I look forward to discussing their work in greater detail over the next couple of days.

With regard to the motion to instruct, I would like to remind Members how important it is to you if this vote happens to reflect your constituency concerns—those constituents who have farms, ranches, livestock, et cetera in their districts. Without your support, the EPA will place an extraordinary and expensive burden on your constituents by regulating the emissions from cow, pig and chicken manure.

Now, I do know how intently my chairman, over the years, has opposed any kind of minor exemption in a process like this, but the language that we are considering, which was presented by Mr. LATHAM in the committee, was adopted with bipartisan support by the full committee, and it passed the House with overwhelming support. As Mr. SIMPSON pointed out, no one even tried to remove this during the House proceedings.

However, today, as we discuss this commonsense motion to instruct, I can't help but wonder about the greater plan to finish our appropriations work. I remind Members that the clock is ticking. We are now 1 month into the 2010 fiscal year, and we still have a great deal of work to do if we plan to complete our appropriations business this year.

By my account, the House and Senate have now sent to the President 4 of the 12 appropriations conference reports. Presuming it gets there soon, the Interior conference report will be the fifth. That means that there are 7 spending bills left to complete before the end of the year.

For weeks and months now, the House has had very little substantive work to do. Week after week, the legislative calendar is fashioned to appear that the House is busy with the Nation's business, but Members and those portions of the public who watch carefully know better. Members on both sides of the aisle are frustrated with the House leadership for loading up the calendar with suspension bills, which are relatively insignificant, as the rest of our spending bills languish.

For example, the Defense spending bill has now cleared both the House and the Senate, and there aren't any obstacles to prevent this conference report from moving forward.

I care a great deal about our public lands and environment, but moving the Interior bill before the Defense bill makes no sense. In fact, it borders on the irresponsible. Rather than moving the Defense bill, one of the most important spending bills, that bill is lying on the shelf while our men and women are defending our freedom in places like Afghanistan and Iraq. It is unfortunate that Democrat leaders have prevented the Defense bill from moving forward while we have troops deployed overseas.

Even more disconcerting is the fact that Democrat leaders are talking about using the troop funding bill as a mechanism for increasing the debt limit to the tune of over $13 trillion. There is no way, certainly, that that can be a reflection of our desire to honor the commitment of our military that is fighting overseas.

In addition, the Transportation-Housing spending bill cleared the House and Senate months ago, and that conference agreement should also be completed in short order. Instead, many of the best and brightest staffers on the Hill are left sitting on their hands, with nothing to do, while they await direction on how this year's work will be wrapped up.

The way we are proceeding, one would presume we are headed for yet another massive take-it-or-leave-it omnibus package. It is my understanding that the Interior bill will also carry the next continuing resolution, which could last until the week of Christmas or maybe even until the end of the year.

For all of the bluster about passing appropriations bills by the August break, albeit by changing the rules to avoid tough amendment votes, the majority has very little to show for it now. So far, the only bill completed on time is that which contains the budget for the Congress, itself. We certainly wouldn't want to have our being unemployed while the people out there are struggling to pay their bills and their taxes and while the men and women who are fighting for us overseas are left languishing, awaiting this Defense appropriations bill.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMPSON. May I inquire of the Speaker as to how much time we have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 10 minutes and 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. SIMPSON. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT).

Mr. TIAHRT. I want to thank Ranking Member SIMPSON for yielding me time. I have to say that I think that he is much better equipped to be the ranking member of the Interior Committee than I was when I was ranking member.

I also want to commend Chairman DICKS. I think nobody has been better prepared to be chairman of the Interior Committee than he has, and he has done an excellent job.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, we have an honest concern and an honest difference on whether we should have these regulations imposed on the American economy and on American agricultural jobs.

There is an onslaught of regulations going on now, and we forget that, when we hire all of these government workers, they have to do something, so we're reminded when they submit these regulations which do nothing but slow our economy and force more unemployment.

We also forget that it takes five private-sector jobs to pay for each and every one government job, but we very seldom get the opportunity to talk about how we're going to grow our economy in a positive fashion. Instead, we have to play defense on how we're going to save the jobs we have today. Regulations like this do nothing but force more jobs overseas. They do nothing more than raise unemployment.

Is there any belief, when we impose additional regulations as high as this pile is next to me, that it will do nothing less than move agricultural jobs out of America to other countries like Mexico, Brazil and Argentina? Are you convinced that any of those countries will do a better job of regulating this type of production? I don't think they will.

Do you think they will do a better job in Mexico or in Brazil or in Argentina of managing animal diseases? We do a very fine job here. When there is a problem, we respond immediately, but I don't see that in those other countries.

□ 1800

What we are doing by writing these regulations is forcing production of animals overseas where we will be more vulnerable as a world, where we will have less jobs as America. It's not the type of direction that I think our President wants to go. It's not the type of direction that I think Congress wants to go.

We see this not only in agriculture but we also have seen this in manufacturing, where as we grow the regulatory burden, the jobs move overseas. Today, 12 percent of the cost of making anything in America is consumed by just complying with the regulations. As a result we have seen jobs go offshore.

Now it's not because we have high wages; we want highly qualified workers. It's not because CEOs are greedy; they can only control so many costs. They cannot control the costs imposed upon their companies by the regulations that they are facing from the Federal Government today.

And we are doing this for what reason? So we can control greenhouse gases? I would defy anybody to show a measurable increase or decrease in greenhouse gases because of these regulations, and not only this year or next year, but in the next 50 or 100 years. This is not worth it. It doesn't meet the common sense. I would request that we keep the language that was passed in the Appropriations Committee by Mr. LATHAM and vote for this motion to instruct.

Mr. DICKS. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Washington for entertaining this motion to instruct.

I said earlier that we had authorizing committees to do this. Some have suggested maybe they don't do their job and the Appropriations Committee has to do it for them. I don't think that's right.

But I will tell you that in the only comprehensive climate change bill that's passed the House, the Waxman-Markey bill, it exempted all animal agriculture sources from greenhouse gas emissions reporting. We have two bills now that have passed the House, and the House has stated they do not want to have to report animal emissions to the EPA, Waxman-Markey and the Interior appropriations bill that passed.

Now remember this legislation, or this amendment by Mr. LATHAM, was not in the original Interior bill as it came before the Appropriations Committee. It was added as an amendment. We affirmatively said we do not want the EPA to implement this rule on greenhouse gas emissions from animals. We affirmatively said it. It was not an oversight. That's what the committee said. When it came to the full House, no one offered an amendment to remove that language. I think that we ought to insist on the House language that is in this bill.

Now I am puzzled a little bit when the chairman says "we'll do our best" and then stands up and defends the rule. What is "our best"? I don't know where we are headed with this.

Let me tell you how this process works just a little bit. Preconferencing goes on between the House and the Senate, generally between the staffs; they talk with the Members of Congress and so forth, but the preconferencing goes on. Apparently the Senate didn't like the Latham amendment, and we caved. And we said, No, we'll drop the Latham amendment.

I think we need to insist on the Latham amendment. It's been the only expression by either body of the direction we ought to go, that we are opposed to this mandatory reporting by the EPA that's going to cost us, I think the gentleman from Iowa said, $115 million a year. Remember, we just gave the dairy industry $350 million because of the hardships they are currently suffering. And now we are going to impose these kinds of costs on them.

We need to go to conference, and when we say we're going to do the best we can, if, when we go to conference, if the pre-conferenced conference report does not have the Latham language in it, that means we can offer an amendment to put it in the language, in the appropriation bill. But if the Senate doesn't have the votes to pass it there, then it's dropped and it's out.

If it goes to conference with the language in, they have to get an amendment both past the House and the Senate to drop it. It's to our advantage and to the will of this House that it have the language in the pre-conferenced report before we go to conference, and apparently we've dropped it. So when the chairman says we'll do the best we can, I don't know exactly what that means.

Mr. DICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. It means we got 99.9 percent of Latham. That's pretty good.

Mr. SIMPSON. Now I'm really confused. I'm really puzzled. I don't understand what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. DICKS. We all agree that for these small farmers, this makes no sense. The only people that are going to be under this rule are the people who are emitting the equivalent of 58,000 barrels of oil in these emissions. These are the biggest farmers in the country. They can afford to do this.

This is a compromise. The spirit of Latham has been adopted, but we regulate the small number of people, around 90 in the country, who have these very large emissions. I think it makes sense. I think it's a decent compromise.

Mr. SIMPSON. Reclaiming my time, I would yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LATHAM. I thank the gentleman.

I don't know how you can say you have 99 percent when the amendment is eliminated. The fact of the matter is that we are going to be spending millions of dollars whether you are large producers or small producers to figure out who qualifies under this.

That's one of the major problems here is that nobody knows for sure who it is and who it isn't. You are going to have to spend as a large producer, small producer, whatever, a whole bunch of money to figure out whether or not you actually qualify.

The fact of the matter is, any of these costs are going to be passed down to the consumers. Now, I know, maybe another 30, 40 bucks a week out of a grocery bill isn't much for folks around here. But I tell you what, there are folks hurting at home, and that's a lot of money.

The idea that somehow this isn't going to affect the price of food, that it isn't going to affect the cost of agriculture; and to do nothing, just have no improvement as far as the environment, no improvement as far as waste management, as far as air emissions, it will do nothing except add cost to the end consumer. I'm sorry, but my producers out there know what this is going to cost them, each and every one of them, because they're going to have to go through a whole process to figure out what they can do and cannot do; it's going to add cost, and we're going to end up with the families today paying the bill at the grocery store because of onerous regulations exactly like this.

Mr. SIMPSON. Reclaiming my time, I will point out once again, this is the Appropriations Committee. The authorizing committee specifically exempts all animal agricultural source from greenhouse gas emission reporting. We got 100 percent of the legislation under the requirement the EPA can't oversee the emissions from the ships on the Great Lakes. We need to stand up strong, and we need to stand up for what the House voted for, not once but twice, what the committee voted for. We need to stand up in the conference committee with the Senate.

I encourage the chairman to do just that. I encourage my colleagues to vote for this motion to instruct.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, today the House of Representatives is voting on a motion to instruct conferees to insist on language that would prevent any funding in this bill from being used to implement an EPA rule requiring the largest manure management systems to report annual greenhouse emissions.

The EPA rule was finalized in September 2009. It would require entities emitting only more than 25,000 metric tons of greenhouse gases per year—the equivalent of emissions from 58,000 barrels of oil—to report on annual emissions. According to the EPA, the rule will impact approximately 100 manure management systems across the country, five of which operate in the state of Oregon. Small farmers—those emitting less than 25,000 metric tons of greenhouse gases per year—would be completely exempt from the rule.

I applaud the EPA's rule and President Obama's leadership in taking serious action on climate change. After losing eight years under the Bush administration in addressing the most serious environmental challenge of our time, it's time for bold U.S. leadership. Compiling accurate and complete data on greenhouse gas emissions is a critical piece to crafting a smart and effective climate policy.

For these reasons, I intend to oppose the motion to instruct conferees before the House today. Congress should not place funding restraints on the EPA that would prevent the agency from executing its Supreme Court-confirmed authorities to regulate greenhouse gas emissions in the U.S.

Mr. SIMPSON. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DICKS. I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12(a) of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

□ 1830

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mrs. DAHLKEMPER) at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, proceedings will resume on motions to suspend the rules previously postponed.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

House Resolution 368, by the yeas and nays;

House Resolution 562, de novo.

Proceedings on other postponed questions will resume later in the week.

The first electronic vote will be conducted as a 15-minute vote. The remaining electronic vote will be conducted as a 5-minute vote.

CONGRATULATING THE IOWA HAWKEYES WRESTLING TEAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the vote on the motion to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 368, as amended, on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 368, as amended.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 367, nays 1, not voting 64, as follows:

So (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title of the resolution was amended so as to read: "Congratulating the University of Iowa Hawkeyes wrestling team on winning the 2009 NCAA Division I National Wrestling Championship."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONGRATULATING SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY MEN'S LACROSSE TEAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the question on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution, H. Res. 562.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. PIERLUISI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 562.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 359, noes 1, not voting 72, as follows:

So (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. COFFMAN of Colorado. Madam Speaker, on rollcall No. 815 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. LEE of California. Madam Speaker, today I missed rollcall vote No. 814 on H. Res. 368, congratulating the University of Iowa Hawkeyes wrestling team, and rollcall vote No. 815 on H. Res. 562, congratulating the Syracuse University lacrosse team. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on H. Res. 368 as amended, and "aye" on H. Res. 562.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Ms. Curtis, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed a bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House is requested.

S. 1929. An act to provide for an additional temporary extension of programs under the Small Business Act and the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, and for other purposes.

ENERGY-EFFICIENCY RETROFITTING

(Mr. TONKO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, this May at a meeting of the Middle Class Task Force, Vice President BIDEN asked White House staff to develop a proposal that would grow clean-job opportunities and boost energy savings by retrofitting homes for energy efficiency.

In response, CEQ facilitated a broad interagency process to develop recommendations.

I commend those recently released recommendations and the leadership of our White House on energy policy. Through the Recovery Act's unprecedented investments in energy efficiency, we are making it easier for American families to retrofit their homes, helping them save money.

Existing techniques and technologies in energy-efficiency retrofitting can reduce energy use by up to 40 percent per home and lower total associated greenhouse gas emissions by up to 160 million metric tons annually. Retrofitting existing homes also has the potential to cut home energy bills by $21 billion annually.

We must continue to drill and mine energy efficiency as our fuel of choice, like we drill for oil and mine for coal.

TEENS AGAINST DOMESTIC ABUSE

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 817, supporting the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

Domestic abuse is a terrible and often hidden problem that plagues our Nation and affects millions of families every year. In my congressional district of south Florida, extraordinary groups such as Teens Against Domestic Abuse, or TADA, are working to raise awareness about domestic abuse.

TADA is Florida's first teen antidomestic violence advocacy group. Their commendable efforts, including working with the Women's Fund of Miami-Dade County, will be hosting an event called, "Break the Silence; Break the Cycle" on November 5 in Miami. This event will highlight the spreading frequency of domestic violence throughout the U.S. and how all socioeconomic and ethnic groups are impacted by this crisis.

TADA strives to educate children and teens about the prevalence of domestic abuse in all types of relationships. I encourage everyone in south Florida to show their support on Thursday, November 5.

UNITED AMERICAN FAMILIES ACT

(Mr. QUIGLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. QUIGLEY. Madam Speaker, as we begin to consider substantial comprehensive immigration proposals, I strongly urge my colleagues to remember what it means to achieve comprehensive reform.

We cannot forget a very important immigrant group in this country, binational GLBT couples. If we are to consider here on this floor a proposal deemed "comprehensive," we must truly mean everyone. We must mean it when we say that you can be an American no matter the color of your skin, your religion, or who you love.

Congressman HONDA has been courageous enough to tackle the issue of amending the Nation's immigration laws to allow U.S. citizens and permanent residents to sponsor their same-sex partners for family-based immigration through the United American Families Act.

In this debate, we have talked about keeping families together, but we cannot turn a blind eye to the children who have been taken from a family because they have two moms or two dads and one doesn't live in this country.

We talk about doing what is right, what is fair, and what is just, but we neglect to imagine the pain and suffering these families are going through because we as a government think it's our right to tell the people who they can love.

FIVE REASONS THE PRESIDENT'S APPROVAL HAS PLUMMETED

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Madam Speaker, the President's approval by the American people has dropped faster than any other President in over 50 years, according to Gallup. Let me offer five reasons why:

One, the President said he would cut the deficit in half; instead, it has tripled.

Two, the White House claimed the $787 billion stimulus bill would keep unemployment below 8.5 percent; instead, it has jumped to 9.8 percent.

Three, Democratic leaders told us the energy bill would cost families only $153 a year; instead, the Treasury Department admitted it could cost $1,700 a year.

Four, the President said the health care bill would be negotiated in open meetings; instead, the decisions are being made behind closed doors.

Five, the President promised that if you like your health care insurance, you can keep it; instead, the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office found that, in fact, you can lose it.

Madam Speaker, it is no wonder that a majority of the American people now disagree with the President's policies, according to a recent CNN poll.

SAUDI ARABIA: MINORITY'S NEW ALLY

(Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. Madam Speaker, the minority party has a new ally in its effort to obstruct clean energy legislation—the Saudi Arabian Government.

Here in the House I was proud to join my colleagues in passing legislation that would invest in clean energy technology, create new green jobs, and cut global warming pollution. Those same countries on whose foreign oil we are currently dependent are not supportive of legislation that would do these things.

As The New York Times reported on October 14—an article I will enter into the RECORD—Saudi Arabia will go to the international climate negotiations in Copenhagen with the goal of preventing ratification of an effective international treaty to reduce greenhouse gas pollution precisely because such a treaty would reduce American reliance on its oil.

The Senate is considering a bill analogous to what we already passed here in the House to cut global warming pollution and reduce our dependence on foreign oil. I hope Saudi Arabia's opposition to American energy independence will remind all of us how important it is for the Senate to act, and act now.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 14, 2009]

"STRIVING FOR NO" IN CLIMATE TALKS

(By Andrew C. Revkin)

UNFCCC Amid the throngs at climate talks, as shown in Bali here in 2007, officials from individual countries can make a big difference. Saudi Arabia has been pinpointed as an influential player.

In doing my reporting for the story in The New York Times today on Saudi Arabia's latest maneuvers in climate treaty talks (they are reviving longstanding demands for compensation for lost oil revenue), I found an interesting paper on the oil kingdom's involvement in climate talks by Joanna Depledge, a research fellow at Cambridge University focusing on climate negotiations.

The paper, "Striving for No: Saudi Arabia in the Climate Change Regime," was published last November in the journal Global Environmental Politics. It is the most comprehensive analysis I've seen of the role that Saudi Arabia and other oil exporters have played through two decades of global climate diplomacy. Dr. Depledge's conclusion is that this is a classic case of parties—in this case Saudi Arabia and other oil-rich states—getting involved in a process primarily to obstruct it. She concludes by noting hints that the oil powers appear to be shifting these days to a more constructive role.

But many observers and participants in the interim climate talks that concluded in Bangkok last week saw scant signs of a cooperative approach. And the e-mail and statements from Saudi officials that Jad Mouawad and I cited in our article appear to display a willingness by Saudi Arabia to impede a deal in Copenhagen if it does not include concrete commitments of aid and investment to offset anticipated drop in oil flows as countries try to cut emissions.

In an e-mail message to me, Dr. Depledge warned that Saudi Arabia and its lead official on climate, Mohammad al-Sabban, should not be underestimated as they pushed for financial commitments. "I am absolutely sure that getting something on this will be a deal-breaker/maker for them," she wrote. "They are quite blunt about it. It is the strategy they have followed since 1991."

Dr. Depledge said she was hoping "that getting something on investment" in carbon capture and storage would "provide a win-win way of getting them on board."

"Al-Sabban is the most skillful and experienced negotiator in the process," she continued. "Others ignore him at their peril."

Access to the paper requires a subscription, so I will summarize its main points below. Here's part of the abstract:

A key starting point for the conduct of global negotiations under the U.N. system is that delegations are actively seeking an agreement that will meaningfully address the problem at hand. Sometimes, however, negotiations must contend with cases of obstructionism, that is, negotiators who are at the table with the aim of preventing an agreement. Given that they face no imperative of striking a deal, governments for whom "no" is the preferred outcome can have a disproportionately high impact on the negotiations, not only by formally blocking agreements, but on a day-to-day basis by slowing down progress or souring the atmosphere. This article examines Saudi Arabia's involvement in the climate change regime, and argues that the delegation has long played the role of obstructionist.

Dr. Depledge notes that Saudi Arabia and many other oil-exporting states only joined the Kyoto Protocol once it became clear it was going to take effect. "Saudi Arabia acceded in time to ensure that it would become a party—and therefore able to fully influence proceedings," she wrote.

She described a significant contrast between the stances of Saudi Arabia and another developing country exporting fossil fuels—in this case South Africa and its coal:

Although the South African economy is more diversified than that of Saudi Arabia, it is still highly dependent on the coal sector. South Africa is the world's second-largest coal exporter, with developed countries accounting for 80 percent of its coal exports. South Africa is much poorer than Saudi Arabia, and coal is more vulnerable to climate policy than oil, given its higher carbon content and the greater availability of alternatives. South Africa, however, has adopted a more balanced view of the risks posed by climate change and mitigation measures, translating into a far more constructive role in the negotiations. Saudi Arabia has simply sought to prevent or slow down progress, either on the general thrust of the negotiations or on specific agenda items.

Dr. Depledge described signs of a shift in the oil kingdom's stance, including its endorsement of science pointing to big impacts from a building human influence on climate and commitment of money to pursue technologies for capturing carbon dioxide from the burning of fossil fuels and other new energy options.

But her conclusion was still cautionary:

The question is whether, and if so how, these developments will eventually feed through to changes in the Saudi delegation's approach to the negotiations themselves, especially leading up to the landmark Copenhagen meeting in December 2009. For now (up to the June 2008 sessions), any signs of a softening in the Saudi negotiating position remained well hidden.

THE WORST OF FRIENDS: OPEC AND G77 IN THE CLIMATE REGIME

(By Jon Barnett)

In the climate change negotiations the thirteen countries that are members of OPEC obstruct progress towards reducing emissions of greenhouse gases. Although these actions undermine sustainable development in developing countries, the larger Group of 77 (G-77) coalition nevertheless tacitly supports its OPEC members in the climate regime. This article explains the connection between OPEC's interests in oil exports and its inaction on climate change, and the divergence of these interests with those of the G-77. It argues that OPEC's influence within the G-77, and therefore the climate regime, stems from the desire to maintain unity within the G-77. This unity has and is likely to continue to cost the majority of developing countries in the form of delayed assistance for adaptation, the possibility of inadequate reduction in emissions under the second commitment period under the Kyoto Protocol, and continued dependence on increasingly expensive oil imports.

STRIVING FOR NO: SAUDI ARABIA IN THE CLIMATE CHANGE REGIME

(By Joanna Depledge)

The international relations literature often assumes that negotiators in global regimes are actively seeking a collective agreement to the problem on the table. There are cases, however, where a delegation may instead be "striving for no," that is, participating with the aim of obstructing a deal. This article explores the challenges surrounding such cases of "obstructionism," using the example of Saudi Arabia in the climate change regime. It examines the evidence for diagnosing Saudi Arabia as an obstructionist in that regime, the delegation's negotiating tactics, strategies for addressing obstructionism, and finally the repercussions for both the climate change regime, and Saudi Arabia itself. In conclusion, the article considers whether Saudi Arabia may be moving beyond obstruction.

RECOGNIZING 2009 TEKNE AWARD WINNERS

(Mr. PAULSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PAULSEN. Madam Speaker, I rise to congratulate the recent winners from my congressional district of the 2009 Tekne Awards from the Minnesota High Tech Association.

In the 10th year of these awards, the Tekne Awards continue to acknowledge companies and individuals who have demonstrated superior technology advancement and leadership in Minnesota. Of the awards, I can proudly boast that 9 of the 14 winners are from my Third Congressional District.

On that note, I would like to recognize the following winners: Minnesota Thermal Science, SearchAmerica, Nonin Medical, Starkey Laboratories, Digital River, Access Genetics, XATA Corporation, and Laurie Toll from Maple Grove schools.

Madam Speaker, their accomplishments are proof positive that the spirit of American innovation and entrepreneurship is alive and well in Minnesota. I am proud to recognize these Minnesota companies and individuals for their hard work, and I congratulate them on their 2009 Tekne Awards.

DEMOCRATS COMPLAIN BUT DO NOTHING

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. You know, I get a big kick, Madam Speaker, out of my colleague from Virginia when he comes down and starts talking about that we're not for clean energy and we're not for solving the problems of the environment when the Democrat Party will not do anything to allow us to drill in the ANWR, offshore on the Continental Shelf, and use natural gas, which is a clean-burning fuel. They won't allow nuclear energy in this country. They think that the nuclear energy problem is bigger than the environmental problem, when 75 percent of the energy created in France is nuclear energy in a very safe way.

So I get a big kick out of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle complaining about how we're not for clean energy and helping clean up the environment when they won't do a darn thing to move in that direction by using natural gas, drilling for it when we have a 400- to 500-year supply, and actually going ahead with nuclear development in this country. Nuclear energy is the answer. Clean-burning natural gas is the answer, but they won't go along with it, and yet they come down here and complain day after day after day.

TERRORISTS CONTINUE TO THREATEN STABILITY AND FAMILIES IN IRAQ

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Madam Speaker, yesterday, cowardly homicide bombers murdered over 100 people in two car bombs in Baghdad, the deadliest mass slaughter in 2 years. The enemies of freedom in Iraq show they intend to continue to kill innocent civilians to threaten stability in the region and American families.

President Obama correctly praised the courage and resilience of the Iraqi people and their determination to build strong institutions. Secretary of State Clinton made it clear that these terrorists would “not deter Iraqis from administering justice based on the rule of law and carrying out their legitimate responsibilities in governing Baghdad.” And Prime Minister Maliki underlined the need to fight the enemy of Iraq and America, recognizing al Qaeda as perpetrators of this heinous atrocity.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th in the global war on terrorism. We appreciate the Kurdish Regional Government delegation, a dynamic part of Iraq, visiting Washington today.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS KILLED IN AFGHANISTAN

(Mr. CHAFFETZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CHAFFETZ. Madam Speaker, today, we have learned of the passing of two of America's finest soldiers when an improvised explosive device exploded in Afghanistan. Killed was Private First Class Kimble Han or Lehi, Utah, as well as Eric Lembke of Tampa Bay, Florida.

Madam Speaker, I hope we will all pause to give thanks to the men and women who have served in our Armed Forces and that we remember their families and friends.

May God bless these fine soldiers, and may God bless the United States of America.

GOVERNMENT OBESITY

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE of Texas. Madam Speaker, the first stimulus bill was 1,000 pages long and cost $1 trillion. We were, in essence, told, Pass this or America is doomed. It was railroaded through before anyone could even read the bill. Now we know why. It wasn't about creating jobs; it was about more government spending. Since then, 3 million more people have lost their jobs, over 15 million people are unemployed, and the unemployment rate just keeps growing.

And so the government's answer is, if at first you don't succeed, try, try again. So the government this year is going to have a second stimulus bill. The Federal Government has already spent more money this year than all previous years in American history combined.

The American people have had about all the big government spending they can stand. With that kind of government success, it's time to try something else, like cut taxes instead of cutting jobs.

We cannot spend, borrow, and tax our way into more jobs or prosperity; big oppressive government just has proved it. Government needs a health care plan for compulsive, addictive government obesity.

And that's just the way it is.

IT IS TIME TO PASS HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, this very important health care debate couldn't be more timely. H1N1 is raging across America. Many questions are being asked. The Federal Government is working hard to produce the vaccine necessary to protect American families. We find that one in five children are impacted by H1N1.

In Houston, we held a congressional briefing with a number of my colleagues and we saw firsthand the importance of a public-private partnership, i.e., a public option in health care reform. We saw the need for county governments and city governments and clinics working with private pediatricians to help stem the tide of H1N1.

This is a time now to pass health care reform. This is also a time to stay focused on providing the information and, of course, the support in protecting America against the surge, if you will, or the pandemic of H1N1.

Health care is a priority, and we must pass health care reform and focus on working with our local governments and State governments to protect our children in America.

PAY ATTENTION TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

(Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Madam Speaker, recently the nonpartisan Galen Institute commissioned a national survey on the issue of health care; very interesting results.

Seventy-one percent of the American people are opposed to the requirement that all Americans must purchase health insurance or pay a penalty, which is part of the plan that is before this House.

Fifty-eight percent of the American people oppose increasing taxes on the working and middle class in order to help cover the uninsured, most of them strongly opposing that.

And, Madam Speaker, 71 percent of the American people are concerned that their own health insurance will change if Congress passes health reform as proposed in this Congress.

Madam Speaker, isn't it about time we paid attention to the American people instead of ignoring them?

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

A TALE OF TWO COUNTRIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Madam Speaker, Fortune magazine reported on October 20, 2009, a title story, “Big Banks, Take Your Money and Run.”

The New York Times today reported, “As Wall Street has returned to business as usual, industry power has become even more concentrated among relatively few firms.”

A handful of mammoth banks has brought our Nation, our credit system and our economy to its knees. Some call them “too big to fail.” One must ask:

Why should a few big players have so much power that they can force taxpayer bailouts for themselves, can shut off credit and can hold the reins of our economy in their hands?

A handful of firms are gobbling up our money and are killing off smaller banking institutions. Congress and this administration are just letting them do it. My friends, such concentration of financial power is dangerous to our country.

A few Wall Street firms are on the fast track to controlling all banking in this country. Rather than address this by breaking up these banks, some in Washington say they just want to regulate them better. If you believe that, you haven't paid any attention over this last year.

The biggest banks are getting bigger. In fact, a year ago, the biggest ones controlled 30 percent of the deposits in the country, according to Fortune magazine. Now they're up to 37 percent, and they're growing even faster. Here are their names: Bank of America, Wells Fargo, JPMorgan Chase, Citigroup, and PNC. PNC practically has price control power over western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio right now.

These firms have already shown us that regulations mean nothing to them. They invent loopholes before Washington has even thought of them. Why wouldn't they again? Not all of their activities were by the book either. Fraud is rampant. Yet we cannot even get a grip on fraud because there are not enough FBI agents to look into mortgage, corporate and securities fraud. We need 1,000 FBI agents, not a few hundred, to untangle what has really been going on.

Americans have a right to be angry about being cheated out of their money, their homes and their jobs; but how long will Congress and the administration tiptoe around the power grab? Wall Street goes right on, seizing all they can get their hands on, and they are holding onto the money so tightly they're not lending it. They're buying up one another and the smaller banks, rewarding themselves quite handsomely.

There is a clear solution: Break them up. It's overdue. The Governor of the Bank of England says to break them up. Why not? Why are we protecting Wall Street's bad boys?

Another terrible precedent: rewarding more hazard rather than preventing it. We've been there before, and look where it got us now. This brings to mind Charles Dickens' 19th-century English masterpiece, "A Tale of Two Cities," except this is the United States, and it is the 21st century, and it is a tale not of two cities but of two countries.

There is one country where the giant banks are making so much money that they are setting aside enough to pay each worker in their investment banking division a bonus of $353,834. That country is Wall Street. The other country, where I come from—Toledo, Ohio and places like it—is where the median household annual income is not even one-tenth of what they get as bonuses. Our median income is $35,216. That's not even one-tenth as much as JPMorgan Chase is setting aside just for bonuses for its investment banking employees.

In one country, banks make themselves too big to fail. They privatize their profits and they socialize the losses. In the other country, which I represent, families, which are too small to matter, lose their jobs to globalization and their homes to foreclosure.

In the other country, where I live, the unemployment rate exceeds 13 percent. Housing values have fallen more than 10 percent in a single year, and foreclosures are up 94 percent. The mortgage workouts Congress promised with all of those bills that were rushed through here are just an illusion. They're not happening.

There is something really wrong with this picture. There is something really wrong with our economy.

Even one of the Wall Street analysts picked up on it. He was quoted by the AP as saying, "Wall Street is picking up quite smartly while Main Street continues to suffer." Do you mean someone up there has finally noticed?

Madam Speaker, there is a solution here: Break them up. It's long overdue.

TRYING TO REIN IN "TOO BIG TO FAIL" INSTITUTIONS

(By Stephen LaBaton)

WASHINGTON.—Congress and the Obama administration are about to take up one of the most fundamental issues stemming from the near collapse of the financial system last year—how to deal with institutions that are so big that the government has no choice but to rescue them when they get in trouble.

A senior administration official said on Sunday that after extensive consultations with Treasury Department officials, Representative Barney Frank, the chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, would introduce legislation as early as this week. The measure would make it easier for the government to seize control of troubled financial institutions, throw out management, wipe out the shareholders and change the terms of existing loans held by the institution.

The official said the Treasury secretary, Timothy F. Geithner, was planning to endorse the changes in testimony before the House Financial Services Committee on Thursday.

The White House plan as outlined so far would already make it much more costly to be a large financial company whose failure would put the financial system and the economy at risk. It would force such institutions to hold more money in reserve and make it harder for them to borrow too heavily against their assets.

Setting up the equivalent of living wills for corporations, that plan would require that they come up with their own procedure to be disentangled in the event of a crisis, a plan that administration officials say ought to be made public in advance.

"These changes will impose market discipline on the largest and most interconnected companies," said Michael S. Barr, assistant Treasury secretary for financial institutions. One of the biggest changes the plan would make, he said, is that instead of being controlled by creditors, the process is controlled by the government.

Some regulators and economists in recent weeks have suggested that the administration's plan does not go far enough. They say that the government should consider breaking up the biggest banks and investment firms long before they fail, or at least impose strict limits on their trading activities—steps that the administration continues to reject.

Mr. Frank, Democrat of Massachusetts, said his committee would now take up more aggressive legislation on the topic, even as lawmakers and regulators continue working on other problems highlighted by the financial crisis, including overseeing executive pay, protecting consumers and regulating the trading of derivatives.

Illustrative of the mood of fear and anger over the huge taxpayer bailouts was Mr. Frank's recent observation that critics of the administration's health care proposal had misdirected their concerns. Congress would not be adopting death panels for infirm people but for troubled companies.

The administration and its Congressional allies are trying, in essence, to graft the process used to resolve the troubles of smaller commercial banks onto both large banking conglomerates and nonbanking financial institutions whose troubles could threaten to undermine the markets.

That resolution process gives the government far more sweeping authority over the institution and imposes major burdens on lenders to the companies that they would not ordinarily face when companies go into bankruptcy instead of facing a takeover by the government.

Deep-seated voter anger over the bailouts of companies like the American International Group, Citigroup and Bank of America has fed the fears of lawmakers that any other changes in the regulatory system must include the imposition of more onerous conditions on those financial institutions whose troubles could pose problems for the markets.

Some economists believe the mammoth size of some institutions is a threat to the financial system at large. Because these companies know the government could not allow them to fail, the argument goes, they are more inclined to take big risks.

Also, under the current regulatory structure, the government has limited power to step in quickly to resolve problems at nonbank financial institutions that operate like the failed investment banks Lehman Brothers and Bear Stearns, and like the giant insurer A.I.G.

As Wall Street has returned to business as usual, industry power has become even more concentrated among relatively few firms, thus intensifying the debate over how to minimize the risks to the system.

Some experts, including Mervyn King, governor of the Bank of England, and Paul A. Volcker, the former chairman of the Federal Reserve, have proposed drastic steps to force the nation's largest financial institutions to shed their riskier affiliates.

In a speech last week, Mr. King said policy makers should consider breaking up the largest banks and, in effect, restore the Depression-era barriers between investment and commercial banks.

"There are those who claim that such proposals are impractical. It is hard to see why," Mr. King said. "What does seem impractical, however, are the current arrangements. Anyone who proposed giving government guarantees to retail depositors and other creditors, and then suggested that such funding could be used to finance highly risky and speculative activities, would be thought rather unworldly. But that is where we now are."

The prevailing view in Washington, however, is more restrained. Daniel K. Tarullo, an appointee of President Obama's, last week dismissed the idea of breaking up big banks as "more a provocative idea than a proposal."

At a meeting Friday at the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, the Federal Reserve chairman, Ben S. Bernanke, said in response to a question by a former Bank of England deputy governor that he would prefer "a more subtle approach without losing the economic benefit of multifunction, international firms."

Republican and Democratic lawmakers generally agree that the "too big to fail" policy of taxpayer bailouts for the giants of finance needs to be curtailed. But the fine print—how to reduce the policy and moral hazards it has encouraged—has provoked fears on Wall Street.

Even before Mr. Frank unveils his latest proposals, industry executives and lawyers say its approach could make it unnecessarily more expensive for them to do business during less turbulent times.

"Of course you want to set up a system where an institution dreads the day it happens because management gets whacked, shareholders get whacked and the board gets whacked," said Edward L. Yingling, president of the American Bankers Association.

"But you don't want to create a system that raises great uncertainty and changes what institutions, risk management executives and lawyers are used to."

T. Timothy Ryan, the president of the Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association, said the market crisis exposed that "there was a failure in the statutory framework for the resolution of large, interconnected firms and everyone knows that." But he added that many institutions on Wall Street were concerned that the administration's plan would remove many of the bankruptcy protections given to lenders of large institutions.

BIG BANKS TAKE YOUR MONEY AND RUN

THE TITANS THAT SURVIVED LAST YEAR'S TUMULT HAVE GATHERED DEPOSITS BY THE BUSHEL. BUT THEY HAVE SHOWN LESS OF A KNACK FOR LENDING IT OUT

(By Colin Barr)

NEW YORK.—A river of cash has flowed into the biggest banks over the past year. But for borrowers, it has been more of a meandering stream.

Deposits at the top five bank holding companies soared 29% in the year ended June 30, according to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Yet only one of those banks—PNC (PNC, Fortune 500) of Pittsburgh—boosted its lending by the same magnitude, according to midyear data from regulatory filings.

At Bank of America (BAC, Fortune 500), JPMorgan Chase (JPM, Fortune 500) and Wells Fargo (WFC, Fortune 500), loan growth trailed deposit growth by a wide margin.

And Citigroup (C, Fortune 500), the bank that has received the most federal aid since the market meltdown of September 2008, reported a decrease in lending despite an increasing pool of deposits.

All told, the five biggest deposit-taking banks added $852 billion in core deposits over the past year—essentially checking and savings accounts of less than $100,000.

Over the same period, their loan portfolios rose by just $564 billion.

This is noteworthy because these five banks received more than $100 billion in direct taxpayer assistance via the Troubled Asset Relief Program (TARP)—a program that was set up to replenish the depleted capital levels of banks and allow them to boost lending to consumers and small businesses.

Some fear the lending gap could hamper chances of an economic recovery.

Federal Reserve governor Daniel Tarullo told Congress this month that commercial bank lending has declined through most of 2009, "with particularly severe consequences for small- and medium-sized businesses, which are much more dependent on banks than on the public capital markets that can be accessed by larger corporations."

Of course, the slower loan growth is hardly a shocker. Loan demand naturally drops off during a recession, as consumers and businesses pay down debt and build cash reserves.

The latest Fed senior loan officer opinion survey cited weaker demand for all sorts of loans—particularly industrial loans and commercial real estate loans.

JPMorgan Chase spokesman Tom Kelly "said that's why the bank's loan growth lagged its deposit growth."

"We continue to lend, but what happened in the market and the economy last year really spooked a lot of people. So they started parking cash at banks," he said.

Banks have also been reluctant to lend since they have been taking big hits as existing loans go sour as well.

Commercial net loan charge-offs hit 2.06% in the second quarter—their highest level since the government started tracking the data in 1988, according to the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council.

Still, evidence that the banks are sitting on cash won't sit well with the growing chorus of bailout critics.

Big banks have come under fire for resisting plans to reduce the risk of another financial sector meltdown and for handing out huge pay packages at a time when jobs are disappearing.

Last week's disclosure that Goldman Sachs (GS, Fortune 500) has set aside $16.7 billion for employee pay this year inflamed critics who question why bankers should reap the fruits of unlimited taxpayer support while the unemployment rate is at a 26-year high.

Many of the deposit gains came after big banks took over weakened competitors during last year's crisis.

JPMorgan Chase bought Washington Mutual after the Seattle-based savings and loan became the nation's largest bank failure.

Bank of America bought Countrywide and Merrill Lynch, both of which owned banks that were among the top 20 in deposits before their acquisition. BofA didn't immediately return a call seeking comment.

Wells Fargo and PNC both bulked up by buying bigger but deeply troubled rivals. Wells acquired Wachovia after it suffered a deposit run, while PNC purchased National City after its request for TARP funding was denied. PNC didn't comment.

"We are in fact lending to creditworthy customers," said Wells spokeswoman Julia Tunis Bernard. She said Wells extended $471 billion in new loan commitments between October 2008 and the end of the second quarter—some 19 times the bank's TARP take.

Even Citi, which sat out last fall's frenzied game of banking musical chairs, still posted double-digit deposit growth as Americans fled other investments for the safety of federally insured banks. Citi didn't reply to a request for comment.

The top five firms—dubbed too-big-to-fail, or TBTF, for their implicit government support—now control 37% of the nation's deposits.

That's well above their average from earlier this decade, reviving questions about the risks of a financial system that's even more concentrated than the one that imploded last fall.

"The TBTF problem has not only moved beyond the banking system, it has become much too costly for taxpayers and the U.S. economy," University of Massachusetts researcher Jane D'Arista wrote in an August paper.

BORDER WAR—THE ZETAS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. POE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I bring you news from the second front—the war on the border between Mexico and the United States. Dangerous drug cartels are already in control of major stretches of the U.S.-Mexico border, and they're taking over whole Mexican border towns.

The Zeta drug cartel is the most violent and the most feared of the Mexican drug cartels. Zetas have attacked Mexican towns in military-style operations at platoon-strength numbers. They have massacred hundreds of their competitors, often beheading and dismembering them. They have fought hour-long battles with the Mexican military in the streets of Matamoros. Madam Speaker, Matamoros is a border town on the Rio Grande River across from Brownsville, Texas.

Recently, shots came over that border, hitting buildings and a parking lot at a University of Texas branch in Brownsville. Authorities presumed this violence was from the drug cartels, themselves. The Zetas have moved into Matamoros. They also claim to control Nuevo Laredo, which is across from the Texas town of Laredo.

The Zetas have no fear of the authorities. There is no law or order in any of the towns they control, and they have assassinated police chiefs and local politicians. They own the towns. They have raised terror throughout Mexico—fighting their rivals, the Mexican Army and the police. The success of the Zeta cartel has forced other Mexican drug cartels into an arms race with military weaponry and tactics.

Who are these Zetas, and where do they come from?

Well, the Zetas were formed by deserters from the Mexican Army's veteran elite Airborne Special Forces Group. The Zetas also include former members from the Guatemalan Kaibiles Special Forces organization. We trained them here in America, at the School of the Americas, in the latest and best tactics and weaponry. When they got back home, they deserted from the military, and they went to work for the drug cartels. In essence, they declared war on the Mexican Government, and they became part of what they were trained to fight.

They make a lot more money in trafficking guns, drugs and people than they would ever have in working as a Mexican or a Guatemalan soldier, and they're using superior military training—that training they received at the expense of the United States. Trafficking in drugs, arms and human beings is a very lucrative business. Billions of dollars worth of merchandise is moved across our southern border every year.

The Zeta international trafficking cartel has evolved into a privately funded military army. They have the best military equipment money can buy, and they have transformed into an international gang, working even in the United States. Without a secure southern border, the violence will continue in Mexico, and only those who live in never-never land will think the problem will not get to the United States. The Zetas are an urban guerrilla organization which threatens to topple any semblance of law and order.

According to the Houston Chronicle, the “Zeta gunmen and their accomplices routinely blockade Matamoros’ downtown streets. Last winter, the gangsters mobilized thousands of people to briefly close the region’s bridges across the Rio Grande, halting trade” with the United States into Brownsville.

Now, the administration’s strategy is to look the other way and to pretend it’s not happening. Well, we cannot wish away this threat to public safety and to America’s national security. We must not allow the situation to continue to escalate unchecked, because violence is actually spilling out into the streets of America near our border towns. Our local law enforcement is overwhelmed. The border sheriffs need more assistance. They are not equipped or trained to handle these military-style incursions by the Zetas and by other drug cartels.

While the administration is stalling and deliberating about what to do in Afghanistan, the government is also giving little attention to our southern border, but this is not the first administration to neglect enforcing the rule of law on the southern border. There has been much rhetoric for years from the government about protecting the border, but like my grandfather used to say, “When all is said and done, more is said than done,” and that is especially by the government.

The Nation needs to understand there is a border war on our southern border. Immediate action is necessary, and the United States should conduct training on the southern border with our military. This will help deter incursions. Plus the Governors from Texas and New Mexico have asked for the National Guard to be sent to the border. So more National Guard troops should be sent to protect the dignity and the sovereignty of our Nation, because the first duty of government is to protect the people, to protect us from the invasion of the crime cartels.

The people who live on the border on both sides of the Rio Grande have a right to expect their government to protect them from the Zetas and from all other criminal cartel enterprises which illegally cross the border.

And that’s just the way it is.

H.R. 268—MILITARY CHAPLAINS BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Madam Speaker, it is a sad day in America when our chaplains in the military cannot pray according to their faiths and consciences. Our troops are risking their lives in dangerous countries to protect the religious freedoms of others, but our own military does not always permit that our military chaplains can pray according to his or her faith.

For this reason, I have introduced H.R. 268, which is a bill to ensure that every military chaplain has the prerogative to close a prayer outside of a religious service according to the dictates of the chaplain’s own conscience.

I have spoken with many, many chaplains who have served in conflicts from Vietnam to Desert Storm, and there never was any restriction on chaplains and on how they prayed until the mid-1990s. This suppression of religious freedom, the very principle on which this country was founded, is a pervasive problem that is affecting every branch of our Armed Forces and that is affecting chaplains of every denomination. As of 2008, 76 percent of the chaplains were Protestant, 9 percent Catholic, 1 percent Jewish, and 14.1 percent were of some other faith.

About 5 years ago, I was introduced to the case of Army Captain Chaplain Jonathan Stertzbach, an independent Baptist by training. Chaplain Stertzbach was called to perform a memorial service for a fallen soldier. In that division, he had to e-mail his prayer to the divisional chaplain. In the prayer, the divisional chaplain struck through the words “Jesus Christ.” He sent back the prayer with the strike-through of “Jesus Christ” to Jonathan Stertzbach. Chaplain Stertzbach went to the company commander, and asked permission not to pray.

The company commander says, Why not?

He says, Because I’ve been ordered not to close my prayer as I see fit, based on my conscience, and knowing that the deceased soldier had attended his chapel, a Christian chapel.

So the company commander said to Chaplain Stertzbach, You will pray, and you will pray as you see fit.

He did, and he closed his prayer in the name of his Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ. From that, the divisional chaplain removed Chaplain Stertzbach from his chapel.

In 2005, when I heard this story, I wrote a letter to Lieutenant General Stanley Green, the inspector general of the United States Army, and I asked for an investigation into this case involving Chaplain Stertzbach. I am pleased to say, Madam Speaker, that Chaplain Stertzbach was returned to his chapel. The inspector general found that he should never have been removed.

Madam Speaker, very briefly, I just want to read the bill, which is so simple. This is what it says: to ensure that every military chaplain has the prerogative to close a prayer outside of a religious service according to the dictates of the chaplain’s own conscience.

Madam Speaker, this is a sad day in America. I would be on this floor for a Jewish rabbi. I would be on this floor for a Muslim who happened to be a chaplain in the military. I hope that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will look at this bill, because all it says is that you can close your prayer based on your heart, based on the dictates of your faith outside the church on base, even over the body of a dead soldier.

□ 1945

Madam Speaker, as I close, I want to make it clear, because I see my friend on the floor who is of the Muslim faith, that I would be on this floor tonight for a Muslim chaplain who was told that he, an imam, could not close a prayer based on their faith.

Madam Speaker, I close by asking God to please bless our men and women in uniform. I ask God to please bless the families of our men and women in our uniform. I ask God in His loving arms to hold the families who have given a child dying for freedom in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Madam Speaker, I ask God to give wisdom, strength and courage to the President of the United States. And I ask three times, God, please, God, please, God, please continue to bless America.

FEBRUARY 6, 2005.

Department of the Army,
*The Inspector General, 1700 Army Pentagon,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR LTG STANLEY GREEN: It has come to my attention that in all branches of the military it is increasingly difficult for chaplains to pray in adherence to their faith. I have read reports, received letters, and seen documentation which verifies that suppression of religious freedom throughout our Armed Forces is a pervasive problem, affecting military chaplains from all denominations and religions. Of particular concern is an incident involving Army Captain Chaplain Jonathan Stertzbach of the 3-6 FA HHB in Iraq. I am writing to request that the Army Inspector General investigate whether Chaplain Stertzbach was illegally removed from his chapel.

This chaplain who is serving our troops in harm’s way in Iraq was asked by another unit, whose chaplain had to return home to start chemotherapy after cancer was discovered, to serve the spiritual needs of the unit’s soldiers in weekly movement to an undisclosed FOB (Forward Operating Base) as well as his own battalion. During one of the missions, tragically, one of the soldiers was killed in action. The unit’s Commanding Officer asked this chaplain to perform the memorial ceremony because he had bravely served the soldiers, and gone to the risk of conveying to the FOB (Forward Operating Base) weekly.

Before the memorial ceremony, the chaplain submitted two prayers and a meditation for the Division Chaplain and his direct supervising chaplain to review and was approved. The Brigade Chaplain, having just arrived from Fort Drum, attempted to remove the chaplain from administering the prayers of the memorial ceremony because he concluded his prayer in the name of Jesus Christ in a public forum. The chaplain, adhering to his conscience and faith tradition, said he would not strike the words Jesus Christ.

The unit’s Commanding Officer intervened, explaining that Chaplain Stertzbach volunteered to serve a different unit outside of his assigned unit and placed his life in harm's way to provide for the needs of the unit's soldiers. The Commanding Officer instructed that Chaplain Stertzbach would pray according to his faith tradition and the prayers that he had already submitted. The Brigade Chaplain told him to qualify his prayer at the beginning with "Please pray according to your faith tradition, as I pray according to mine" and then close the prayer with "in thy name we pray, and in Jesus' name I pray." Chaplain Stertzbach delivered the memorial meditation and prayers for the fallen hero, but still followed orders with the 'qualifier' remaining in place.

After the incident, Chaplain Stertzbach's story reached the media. The Chaplain was directly contacted by the Washington Times and referenced in a Washington Times January story. Chaplain Stertzbach's incident was not printed, but he was quoted as saying the following:

"You need to allow people to pray according to their faith group. Many faith groups do not pray in general and generic terms. . . . For Christian groups, the name of Jesus is from where all the power comes."

I believe Chaplain Stertzbach answered questions fairly, accurately, and within his legal rights. Consequently, his answers to the media and the incident surrounding the memorial ceremony resulted in Chaplain Stertzbach's removal from his chapel.

I am concerned that Chaplain Stertzbach was removed without justification. Again, I am requesting that you investigate this incident and provide an explanation.

Sincerely,

WALTER B. JONES,
Member of Congress.

TRI-CAUCUS WELCOMES ALL INTERNS AND STAFF

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. ELLISON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ELLISON. Madam Speaker, I come here to read a statement that was recently issued by an organization here in our own Congress, our own body, known as the Tri-Caucus. The Tri-Caucus includes members of the Black Caucus, Hispanic Caucus and the Asian Caucus, and is made up of about 87 Members of this body.

The statement says as follows:

"Four of our colleagues, Representatives JOHN SHADEGG of Arizona, PAUL BROUN of Georgia, TRENT FRANKS of Arizona and SUE MYRICK of North Carolina recently requested the House Sergeant at Arms to launch an investigation of the civil rights group CAIR, or Council on American-Islamic Relations, to determine whether it was placing staff and interns in key congressional offices who they fear are acting as 'spies.'"

"This proposed investigation coincides with the launch of a book by Dave Gaubatz, an anti-Islamic activist and author of the book 'Muslim Mafia: Inside the Secret Underworld that's Conspiring to Islamize America.' It features an introduction by Representative MYRICK and was written after Gaubatz posed as an intern at CAIR in an effort to 'infiltrate' the group.

"These charges smack of an America 60 years ago where lists of 'un-American' agitators were identified. We should be affirming the importance of diversity and tolerance for all interns and staff who serve in Congress without suspicion of being identified as 'spies.'"

"The idea that we should investigate Muslim interns as spies is a blow to the very principle of religious freedom that our Founding Fathers cherished so dearly. If anything, we should be encouraging all Americans to engage in the U.S. political process, to take part in, and to contribute to, the great democratic experiment that is America."

"We all have experienced the sting of discrimination and we know that there will be challenges ahead. But our message should be firm that the America we believe in welcomes people of all backgrounds to the U.S. Congress."

"We ask these charges be disavowed and we issue a hearty welcome to interns and staff of all creeds, color, ethnicities and sexual orientation."

I read this statement and will submit it for the RECORD and again thank the leadership of the Tri-Caucus, Congresswoman BARBARA LEE, Congresswoman NYDIA VELÁZQUEZ and Congressman MIKE HONDA. I thank all of them.

IRAN SANCTIONS ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, on Wednesday, the House Committee on Foreign Affairs will hold a long-overdue markup of the Iran Refined Petroleum Sanctions Act. Some of our colleagues are focusing exclusively on Iran's nuclear ambition, as it was the nuclear program in itself that was the catalyst for the concern.

But if Iran were comprised of a responsible, democratic government, would we be as apprehensive about their nuclear activities? Of course not. But we are talking about an Iranian regime which just this year conducted two missile tests and continues to work on the range of its missiles and on enabling them to carry a nuclear payload. We are talking about a regime whose leaders throughout the years have made it abundantly clear that they will stop at nothing to destroy the Jewish State of Israel. We are talking about an Iran which for nearly three decades has been designated by our U.S. Department of State as the world's leading state sponsor of global terrorism. The clerical regime is fomenting bloodshed and promoting chaos in the West Bank and Gaza and Lebanon and the Persian Gulf, as well as in Iraq, where it is actively assisting in the murder of our U.S. soldiers.

On the battlefields of Afghanistan, Iran is also playing a deadly subversive role. As early as 2002, allegations emerged that Iran was supporting insurgent groups in Afghanistan, including its former archenemy, the Taliban. However, the first significant report of Iranian weapons in Afghanistan came in April of 2007. Then-chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General Peter Pace, announced: "We have intercepted weapons in Afghanistan headed for the Taliban that were made in Iran."

Since 2007, several large shipments have been seized near the Iranian border. U.S. officials say that Iranian-made weapons have been found in Afghanistan and used by Taliban-led insurgents. These weapons have included Tehran's signature roadside bomb, the explosively formed penetrator, EFP, AK-47s, as well as C-4 plastic explosives and mortars.

On August 29 of this year, just a few days before General McChrystal submitted his request to this administration, Afghan and NATO forces uncovered a weapons collection in Herat with EFPs, Iranian-made rockets and dozens of blocks of Iranian C-4 plastic explosives.

In the August 2009 declassified, leaked version of his assessment, General Stanley McChrystal stated that: "Iran plays an ambiguous role in Afghanistan, providing developmental assistance and political support to the Afghan government while the Iranian Qods force is reportedly training fighters for certain Taliban groups and providing other forms of military assistance to insurgents."

We cannot allow Iran to undermine U.S. efforts and kill our soldiers in Afghanistan. We cannot allow Iran to return Afghanistan to the status of a failed state and pave the way for attacks against the West using Afghanistan as its launching pad. We cannot allow Iran to develop nuclear weapons capabilities which threaten the United States and our allies.

If we are to be vigilant in protecting the lives of our men and women—military and civilian—in Afghanistan, we must increase the pressure on the Iranian regime and impose immediate sanctions on Iran. This should be our first option.

We don't have the luxury of time, to wait for an eventual Iranian response to U.S. diplomatic overtures. We cannot wait for the U.N. Security Council to come around. We cannot wait for our European and other allies to decide to do the right thing. The United States must lead by example. It is time to cut off the Iranian regimes's economic lifeline. As such, we should not stop at this week's Foreign Affairs Committee markup.

I urge the majority to bring the strongest possible form of the Iran Refined Petroleum Sanctions Act to the floor next week for a vote, followed by quick Senate action so that it gets to the President's desk before the end of the year. We must do this now.

HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Madam Speaker, I came to Congress with a purpose, a purpose of working to preserve the way of life that we live in Kansas. I was born and raised in Kansas, and my home and family are still in Kansas. I never moved to Washington, D.C. because I love the sense of community and belonging that Kansas communities offer. Access to quality, affordable health care is one of those things that determine whether our communities survive and whether we have a future. This is why the current health care reform debate is so important to me, and I am extremely concerned about the direction that we are going.

During his campaign, President Obama stressed transparency and accountability in the health care debate. He said, I'm going to have all the negotiations around a big table and that the negotiations will be televised on C-SPAN so that people could see who is making the arguments on behalf of their constituents and who is making the arguments on behalf of drug companies or insurance companies.

But now the transparency that the President promised us is nowhere to be found, as several Democrat senators and White House staff hole themselves away to draft the health care reform bill behind closed doors. I understand the Democrats' desire to merge the two Senate committee bills, but this process concerns me because in this closed office, the future of health care for Kansans is being decided.

Does this small group understand the problems that cutting Medicare reimbursement rates will pose for Kansas hospitals, doctors, nurses and other health care providers? Kansas hospitals operate on razor-thin margins because they are already dramatically underpaid by Medicare. If these rates are further reduced, as the current reform bills propose, Kansas hospitals may be forced to close and access to health care for Kansans will be reduced.

Is this small group considering commonsense ideas that have been proposed by Members of Congress on both sides of the aisle that would make quality coverage more affordable and more accessible for more Americans? Some of those ideas that we have talked about include placing as much emphasis on wellness as we do on illness by giving employers and insurers flexibility to reward individuals who improve their health and manage their disease; encouraging medical students to become primary care physicians and nurses and incentivizing them to care for patients in underserved communities; permitting the sale of insurance across State lines, establishing high risk pools and reinsurance pools to address preexisting conditions and providing incentives to low-income families to retain or purchase private health insurance that best meets their needs; reforming our medical liability system to reduce frivolous lawsuits that lead to inflated insurance premiums and the practice of defensive medicine; encouraging health care savings by offering individuals health savings accounts that enable families to take ownership of their health; and upgrading our outdated health records system through the use of new technology to streamline costs and reduce medical errors.

It is my hope that these issues are being addressed as the President and Democrat leaders craft the health care reform bill. I have traveled across my State, and I have heard many Kansans who have worries. They are concerned about their health care and about the future of their State and country. Kansans and all Americans deserve to know what their Representatives are voting on, and they deserve the assurance their business will be conducted in a deliberate and open way.

The President has expressed a desire to explore a wide range of options for health care reform. Kansans want commonsense reforms that enhance our current system and reduce health care costs. What we do not want is the trillions in new deficit spending, reduced choices for patients and doctors, and increased power in Washington D.C.

Health care reform must address the underlying reasons that health care costs keep increasing. We lower costs through reforms that eliminate the unnecessary overspending in our current system, not by shifting the costs of health care to taxpayers and mortgaging our children's future with exploding budget deficits.

HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Madam Speaker, sometimes I get so angry when I hear some of the things that are coming out of the Congress, I can hardly believe it, especially when we are talking about misinformation.

I would never impugn the integrity of my colleagues, but I have to tell you, it really bothers me when people like the Speaker of the House and the Majority Leader of the United States Senate give inaccurate information out and cite it as fact when in fact it isn't true. It's not true at all.

For instance, the Speaker of the House said, I'm very pleased that Democrat leaders will be talking, too, about the immoral profits being made by the insurance industry and how those profits have increased in the Bush years. She went on to say that she welcomed the attention being drawn to insurers and their obscene profits.

I am not here to defend everything that the insurance industry does. Obviously there are a lot of things that we need to do to help solve the problems of health care. But misleading the American people by giving false information isn't the answer. Last year, the health insurance industry made a profit of about 2 percent, way down the list as far as corporate America is concerned. Over the past several years, the profit margin made by the health insurance industry runs around 5 to 6 percent, way down to the bottom of where corporate America ranks as far as making profits are concerned.

Yet the Majority Leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House said that they're making obscene profits, and they're doing that to try to demonize the industry so they can ram through a public option that the American people really don't want. They don't want government coming between them and their doctor; and the way to start getting people to jump on the bandwagon is to give them misinformation.

Obviously the cost of health care has gone up. Obviously health care premiums have gone up. And yet they say, well, the reason for that is because the health industry is making these huge profits, obscene profits. Two percent? Two percent? It is not true. It is just not true that they are making obscene profits.

Now, we need to do something to solve the problem of health care. We need to lower the cost of health insurance. We need to come up with alternatives, such as medical savings accounts like my colleague just talked about here. We need to be able to buy insurance across State lines. There is a whole host of things we need to do. But misleading the public is not the answer.

That is not the only thing that really bothers me. The administration and the leadership in the House and Senate continues to try to do everything they can to dissuade people from believing the truth and believing what is really not true, to shut off debate, to shut off the First Amendment rights of people in this country.

For instance, right now, they tried to push through a gag order on Medicare Advantage companies. Humana was sending out to their policyholders information about what was going to happen if the public option passed. And what happened? There was a gag order requested by the Finance chairman of the Senate, requested by the Finance chairman of the Senate, so they couldn't get that information out. Well, the gag order was removed, but the fact of the matter is they tried to stop the people from getting the facts, and that is just wrong. It is wrong. It is not up to the quality that we should expect of our legislators. Nevertheless, they tried to do that.

Now the administration is trying to put the hammer on the Chamber of Commerce, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which is the backbone of the free enterprise system in this country, in part, at least. The business and industry people of this country look to the Chamber of Commerce to give guidance to the government wherever necessary so they can work together with the government to come up with ways to make sure that the free enterprise system continues to work.

Because the Chamber of Commerce does not agree with the public option, does not agree with cap-and-trade and some other things, the administration is saying, oh, my gosh, they are bad. They are the demons. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Can you believe that? I can't. How far is the administration willing to go? How far is the Speaker of the House willing to go? How far is the majority leader of the Senate willing to go in misleading the American people by giving false information out? I think it is just dead wrong.

Then they are talking about doing something about the Fairness Doctrine, to shut down conservative talk radio.

An attempted boycott of Fox News, Rush Limbaugh, and Glenn Beck;

Congressional action to take away the anti-trust exemption from insurance companies;

A Gag Order on Medicare Advantage companies;

Reports in Politico about how the White House is seeking to limit the voice of the United States Chamber of Commerce;

Efforts by the Federal Election Commission to resurrect the so-called fairness doctrine to shut down conservative talk radio; and

The President himself saying he was going to keep a list of bondholders who didn't agree to the government takeover of GM or Chrysler.

My time may have expired, but I will be back, because we need to tell the American people the truth, the truth.

Madam Speaker, I include the following for the RECORD.

[From The American Spectator, Feb. 18, 2009]

OBAMA'S ENEMIES LIST

(By Mark Hyman)

After the Democratic convention, Obama campaign lawyer Robert Bauer warned TV stations against airing a TV ad that was embarrassing to Barack Obama. The commercial focused on the longtime relationship between Obama and Weather Underground terrorist Bill Ayers. Bauer sent letters to the Justice Department imploring the agency to pursue criminal action against those behind the ads. It was not lost on anyone at that time that Bauer was considered a candidate to be the next U.S. Attorney General.

A team of Obama campaign operatives, joined by major news outlets, descended on Wasilla, Alaska immediately after Governor Sarah Palin was introduced as Senator John McCain's running mate. This was immediately followed by patently false reports claiming Palin imposed book bans, joined a fringe political party, charged rape victims for emergency room treatment and cut funding for special needs children.

In late August, the Obama campaign emailed an "Obama Action Wire" to thousands of supporters and liberal activists exhorting them to harass the offices of Chicago's WGN radio by flooding the station with angry phone calls and emails. Activists screamed insults to call-in screeners. The radio station's offense was that a long-time, respected radio host had the temerity to interview Ethics and Public Policy Center watchdog Stanley Kurtz. Kurtz had uncovered university records that documented a much closer relationship between Obama and Ayers than the presidential candidate had previously disclosed.

A few weeks later, state prosecutors and top sheriffs in Missouri who were prominent Obama supporters responded to a chilling Obama campaign request. They styled themselves as a "truth squad" and threatened to prosecute anyone including media outlets that printed or broadcasted material they deemed to be inaccurate about the Illinois Senator.

Obama contributors in the Justice Department's Civil Rights section (headed by $2,000 Obama donor and former ACLU attorney Mark Kappelhof) urged preemptive prosecution of individuals the Obama campaign believed might disrupt the November election. A cited example of anticipated disruption was to send mailings of a non-violent nature addressing voting issues unfavorable to Obama.

In October, a question from a middle-class voter resulted in an answer from Obama indicating the Democratic nominee was in favor of "spread[ing] the wealth around." This voter became the symbol of middle-class America and Obama's response the touchstone of his neo-Marxist policies. Immediately thereafter, Democratic Ohio state officials scoured government data bases and confidential records in an effort to find embarrassing information on "Joe the Plumber" (e.g., he is divorced) that quickly found its way into the press.

In the final days of the campaign, three newspapers that had endorsed McCain were booted from the Obama campaign bus. The New York Post, Dallas Morning News, and Washington Times were unceremoniously shown the door only days after their papers' endorsements appeared. Obama campaign officials claimed the move was to make room for more important media outlets: Jet and Ebony entertainment magazines. Both publications were publishing fawning coverage of Obama.

Those heartened by the hope that a President Obama would be more tolerant of critics and criticism than a candidate Obama had their expectations dashed. In only his third full day as the 44th president Obama personally went on the offensive against a media personality. On January 23rd, Obama warned Congressional Republicans against listening to Rush Limbaugh. The man who offered to sit down with Holocaust denier and Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad without any preconditions whatsoever views an American radio talk show host as a dangerous threat.

In precedent-setting action, Obama moved his director of political affairs, a highly partisan post, from the Old Executive Office Building into the West Wing. Political operative Patrick Gaspard was given White House access not experienced by his predecessors. Obama official Shauna Daly, a non-lawyer and career opposition researcher described as a "partisan dirt-digger," was assigned to the White House counsel office. The move signals not only a new low in partisan activities, but suggests the office assignment may be intended to hide Daly's political activities under the guise of the counsel's attorney-client privileges.

What America witnessed before the election and mere hours after Obama was sworn into office is just a sampling of what Americans can likely expect throughout an Obama presidency. One cannot help but reach the conclusion an Obama Enemies List is already being compiled and free speech restrictions are being considered. Fortunately for Obama he has no shortage of Congressional foot soldiers to help in his cause to muzzle critics and silence news outlets that refuse to adhere to Democratic talking points that are faxed directly into the network newscast teleprompters.

On Election Day, Senator Chuck Schumer likened conservative talk radio to pornography and argued it should be regulated. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi endorsed speech restrictions more than once during the election season. Senators Harry Reid, Dick Durbin and John Kerry have also advocated various limits to political speech. Senator Debbie Stabenow assured a liberal radio talk show host that regulating conservative speech is imminent. House Commerce Committee Chairman Henry Waxman is reportedly working on speech restrictions with acting FCC Chairman Michael Copps.

Imagine the gross violations against political speech that may very well occur when there are no checks and balances from a sycophantic Congress and there is complicity from the national news gatekeepers. The public may be very surprised at the lengths the Obama Administration may pursue to silence critics. Moreover, the self-anointed Praetorian Guard of the First Amendment will conveniently develop a case of amnesia regarding on which side of the debate they fall when it comes to press freedoms. Do not expect to see the New York Times editorialize against Obama and the Congress when it comes to protecting free speech rights aside from its own and that of like-minded, liberally biased press outlets.

The Clinton White House had its own enemies list and engaged in dirty practices that clearly broke the law. Clinton enemies audited by the IRS included Paula Jones, Juanita Broaddrick, Gennifer Flowers, White House Travel Office Director Billy Dale and the independent watchdog group, Judicial Watch, just to name a few.

Early in Clinton's first term, staffers improperly squirreled away more than 400 FBI files on prominent Republicans. This gave the Clintons access to confidential information on key Republicans they viewed as political threats.

Just weeks after the Monica Lewinsky broke in early 1998, then-Deputy Attorney General (and current Attorney General) Eric Holder engineered a federal grand jury investigation of The American Spectator. The magazine had long been a very successful critic of both Clintons, having broken several stories embarrassing for the President and First Lady. Fourteen months later, the federal prosecutor dropped the probe without filing any criminal charges. The probe may have achieved its purpose as it nearly bankrupted the magazine.

Much has been made by the political left of Richard Nixon's infamous enemies list. The reality is while there was a Nixon's enemies list most of the names were those who did not receive presidential Christmas cards or White House reception invitations. This was a hardship that even the most vulnerable in American society could easily withstand.

The heavy-handed actions against Obama critics and opponents that occurred before he had government institutions firmly under his control should have had public interest watchdog groups up in arms. Because so many of such groups are ideologically aligned with Obama may explain why there was not even a peep. Conservative and balanced news outlets have the disturbing habit of holding accountable liberal public interest organizations that engage in dishonest or deceptive practices that the major news organizations just so happen to overlook.

How soon and how far the Obama Administration will extend its attacks against its critics and the political opposition may become evident in the days ahead. Spared any serious scrutiny by most news outlets during his very brief career in public office, Barack Obama has displayed an exceptionally thin skin when he has come under a microscope or when he has suffered political and public relations setbacks.

THE CLAIMS

"I'm very pleased that (Democratic leaders) will be talking, too, about the immoral profits being made by the insurance industry and how those profits have increased in the Bush years."—House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., who also welcomed the attention being drawn to insurers' "obscene profits."

CONTROLLING THE DEFICIT

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. INGELIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. INGLIS. Madam Speaker, we are looking at some scary numbers. Just in time for Halloween, we have the budget deficit numbers in; $1.42 trillion for this year and an accumulated debt of $13 trillion.

Now, this has happened before. We have been in a spot before with historical debt levels shown here on this chart. You can see after World War II we actually reached nearly 110 percent of GDP. Our debt was nearly 110 percent of GDP. But, as you can see, it has gone down, and now it is trending way high.

There is a big difference between this historical debt and the debt that we are experiencing now, because the question is: Who did we owe it to? After World War II, we owed 95 percent of the debt to ourselves. The U.S. public held 95 percent of the United States debt in 1945. Today, in 2009, only 54 percent is held by the U.S. public. China is holding 11 percent, and other foreign countries are holding 35 percent. So nearly 50 percent of our debt is owed to other countries. It is quite different than the scenario after World War II.

It is a shame, Madam Speaker, that we didn't adopt the more significant budget cuts of the Republican Study Committee budgets. Had we done that over the last 5 years, we would now be looking at $613 billion less in spending. We would have saved $613 billion by enacting those most conservative budgets offered on this House floor.

If this keeps up, what we have got now is government spending now as a percentage of GDP, as you can see here under the Obama approach, fiscal year 2010 budget, with the out years being reflected in the long-term fiscal scenario of CBO, you can see that government spending as a percentage of GDP actually rises to nearly 50 percent, 50 percent of GDP being government spending. Under the Republican alternatives, you can see that we trend down after this most recent uptick, and we get down to the level of somewhere around 18 percent of GDP as a percentage of government spending.

Madam Speaker, I am here to say to my colleagues that we must do something. These are scary numbers, and we have got to act.

The key is to get to fiscal restraint and economic growth. Those things have to happen simultaneously. You do that by keeping taxes low, keeping regulation light, and getting litigation down. You do that by making wise energy policy that makes it so that energy can be the new tech boom that leads us out of the current recession.

I happen to believe that the road to recovery and the road to energy independence are one and the same. If we get on that road, we can lead our way out of this recession.

I happen to believe, too, that the upstate of South Carolina has a lot to offer in paving that road, making it so we can get to balanced budgets by economic growth and fiscal restraint, and improve the national security of the United States by breaking this addiction to oil, by finding these new sources of energy and making it so we can create jobs.

Madam Speaker, that is what we should be about here. I hope we can get to it.

THE NEW PELOSIAN CALENDAR

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Madam Speaker, tonight, I want to talk just briefly on the calendar, a little bit of historical note.

Julius Caesar took over the chaotic Roman calendar because, as Matt Rosenberg of About.com said, it was being exploited by politicians and others for their own political purposes and it had the effect of adding additional days, because in certain ways changing the timing of things made a difference politically.

So Julius Caesar, in the year 46 BC, established what we have been calling for years the Julian calendar. The Julian calendar was an improvement over the Roman calendar, except for one thing; it was 11 minutes and 14 seconds too slow, and that added up to a full day off every 128 years.

Well, for a number of centuries, it didn't mean anything. But, over time, it meant something. And what happened was in the year 1582, the Pope, Pope Gregory XIII, concerned that Christianity's most important dates were falling behind with respect to the calendar, particularly Easter, which was based on the date of the vernal equinox, believed what we had to do was to adjust that calendar. So he issued what is known as a Papal bull establishing the new calendar, which actually corrected, fairly well, the problem. It would be comprising 365 days, with every fourth year adding an additional day, but no leap year in years ending in 00 unless they were divisible by 400.

Now, I am not a mathematician. I can't tell you how that works out, but it pretty near makes it perfect. The problem was, of course, there was a cleavage between the Catholics and the Protestants. So the Catholic countries adopted that in 1582.

It wasn't until 1752 that Great Britain decided to follow. As a matter of fact, that is a famous day in English history, because the British Calendar Act of 1751 meant that people went to bed on Wednesday, September 2, 1752, and woke up 12 days later. They lost 11 days in order to correct the calendar.

But this is the calendar that has been adopted around the world ever since that time, until recently. What do I mean by that? Well, here would be the Gregorian calendar for 2009. You see it does have 365 days. You see it does have an August. But we have found this year that August did not exist, because we have what I call the Pelosian calendar.

Under the leadership of the Democrats, we have been told to ignore what happened in August. Those town halls did not take effect. The American people did not express themselves. We did not hear outcries about what was happening in the Congress.

Rather, nothing occurred. You don't hear about it on this floor. You don't hear about it in the President's statements. You don't hear about it in the recommendations made by the Democratic side. And now, as we are moving forward on our calendar and told that we have a few days to make up, we forget about the 31 days.

I would like to say that the Pope took 11 days away from us, but it appears he was a piker. The Speaker has taken 31 days away from us. There was no August. There is no August. There were no town hall meetings. The American people did not rise up and say, Congress, listen to us. We don't want a public option. We want you to make some changes, but don't put us at jeopardy for losing the care and the coverage we currently have.

I must say, this is a historic moment, because it took us 1,600 years to change the calendar the first time. But now, by the magic of the congressional calendar, we have done it in just, well, less than 600 years.

There is something fundamentally wrong, extremely disappointing, that somehow we would have the temerity to tell the American people, You don't count, because we know better here in Washington, D.C. And, as a matter of fact, if you have a different idea, we are going to question that idea. We are going to question what you are doing.

Madam Speaker, give us back those 31 days.

PROVIDING NEEDED RESOURCES IN AFGHANISTAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. WESTMORELAND) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WESTMORELAND. Madam Speaker, as the leader of coalition forces in a faltering Afghanistan, the United States appears indecisive at this critical juncture in the long war.

Madam Speaker, we owe it to the Afghan people, the Pakistani people, our allies and our own national security interests and our courageous U.S. troops to stiffen our spines and heed the recommendations put forth by General McChrystal. As a leading expert on counterinsurgency efforts, General McChrystal has rightly put the focus on winning over the Afghan civilians to our side by providing the security they so desperately want for their families and villages.

As an American and as a Member of this House, I hate to put U.S. soldiers in harm's way, whether it is on our own shores or halfway around the world. We all wish that we could remove our troops from the day-to-day, face-to-face conflicts with the insurgent forces in Afghanistan. We all wish that we could finish this job by dropping bombs on the bad guys from the safety of unmanned drones or conducting surgical strikes with Special Forces. These counterterrorism efforts hold much appeal and those tactics can win in many battles.

But there is a problem. Our own very recent experiences teach us that counterterrorism alone can't win this wider war.

□ 2015

We faced a similar crossroads in Iraq 3 years ago. American forces had suffered heavy casualties. The Iraqi Government was inept and corrupt. The Sunni insurgency and al Qaeda in Iraq ravaged the country. Our Nation then took a new course. We took a risk, a highly controversial one at the time, Madam Speaker, but that risk turned out to be an investment in Iraq's future, and it is an investment that has paid off for the United States today. Today we have a measure of stability that no one could have predicted 3 years ago. As a result, we are positioned to draw down our troop levels there.

In fact, when President Obama was a candidate, he saw the success in Iraq as a chance to redirect our attention to Afghanistan. Then-Senator Obama said in August 2008: "Ending the war will allow us to invest in America, to strengthen our military and to finish the fight against al Qaeda and the Taliban in Afghanistan and the border region of Pakistan. This is the central front in the war on terrorism. This is where the Taliban is gaining strength and launching new attacks. This is where Osama bin Laden and the same terrorists who killed nearly 3,000 Americans on our own soil are hiding and plotting 7 years after 9/11. This is a war that we have to win. And as Commander in Chief, I will have no greater priority than taking out these terrorists who threaten America and finishing the job against the Taliban."

As President, Obama issued an important policy statement on Afghanistan in March. He said his goals were to "disrupt, dismantle and defeat al Qaeda in Pakistan and Afghanistan and to prevent their return to either country in the future." In that statement, President Obama said explicitly that we cannot allow the Afghan Government to fall again to the Taliban because "that country will again be a base for terrorists who want to kill as many of our people as they possibly can."

These are clear words, Madam Speaker. Those words, if they were U.S. policy, would give solace to our allies, to the Afghans, to the Pakistanis and to our own troops taking the fight to the Taliban. But our actual intentions in Afghanistan are not clear, even though General McChrystal's report states explicitly that without more troops in the next year, the United States faces mission failure where defeating the insurgents is no longer possible. That's the view of a respected general, the commander handpicked by President Obama, who works in Kabul and travels around Afghanistan every day.

So why is it that the Obama administration is sending mixed signals to the American public and to the rest of the world? Why is his national security adviser on Sunday morning talk shows saying that Afghanistan is not in imminent danger of falling to the Taliban? After many years of fighting in Afghanistan, after many years of two steps forward and one step back, we cannot flinch. We must let our allies, our military and the Afghans and Pakistanis know right now that we will do what it takes to provide stability and security.

Governing is about tough decisions. We must make the tough decisions to give General McChrystal the troops he needs to finish this mission. We must protect the population and assure them that we're not going anywhere. That's our only hope of winning over the Afghan people who fear that if they work with us, they'll be slaughtered by the Taliban when the Americans leave. As President Obama said just 2 months ago: "This will not be quick nor easy. But we must never forget: This is not a war of choice. This is a war of necessity."

Let's hope that he has not forgotten.

CYBERSECURITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURGESS. I thank the Speaker for the recognition.

I come to the floor tonight to talk about cybersecurity. We all hear about data breaches. They're so common, it seems like you can hardly pick up the newspaper without reading about another occurrence. And unfortunately, the rate at which they're occurring is also increasing. A report in 2009 found that more electronic records were breached in 2008 than in the previous 4 years combined. Almost 10 million United States adults were victims of identity theft in 2008. These are expensive. A 2009 report found that the average cost of a data breach had risen to $202 per customer from last year's $197. Over $600 is lost out of pocket per second to identity fraud, costing consumers and businesses over $52 million a day.

Examining some of the sources of the breaches, 29 percent come from government and military, 28 percent are from educational institutions, 22 percent in general business, 13 percent in health care companies, 8 percent in banking, credit card and financial services. Within the government itself, on the May 2008 Federal Security Report Card, the Department of Interior, the Department of Treasury, the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Agriculture all scored failing grades.

Within the military, the personnel data of tens of thousands of United States soldiers has been downloaded by unauthorized computer users. The data included Social Security numbers, blood type, cell phone numbers, e-mail addresses and the names of soldiers' spouses and children. A 2006 Department of Veterans Affairs data breach put almost 30 million veterans' names, addresses and Social Security numbers at risk.

Within the retail segment, in 2009, a Miami man was charged in the largest case of computer crime and identity theft ever prosecuted. He, along with two unknown Russian coconspirators, were charged with taking more than 130 million credit card and debit card numbers from late 2006 to early 2008, and they did it as an inside job. They reviewed lists of Fortune 500 companies, decided where to aim; they visited the stores to monitor the payment systems used; they placed sniffer programs on corporate networks; and the programs intercepted credit card transactions in real time and transmitted the numbers to computers in the United States, Netherlands and the Ukraine. An expert said the case provided more evidence that retailers and banks needed to strengthen, needed to harden, industry standards.

And finally, educational institutions. As I noted earlier, second only to government and data breaches are educational institutions, probably the most disturbing statistic. In 2007, the number of data security breaches in colleges and universities increased almost two-thirds from 2006, and the number of educational institutions affected increased by almost three-quarters. In August of 2005, hackers stole almost 400,000 electronic records of current, former and prospective students in my congressional district at the University of North Texas. The hackers got away with names, addresses, telephone numbers, Social Security account numbers and possibly credit card numbers.

So what can we do? Of the breaches, 87 percent are considered avoidable if reasonable controls had been in place. Madam Speaker, now is the time for Congress to enact a meaningful national standard to protect commercial and government data. This requires leadership at the top levels of an organization to take an active role in ensuring that their systems are secure. Federal Government subcontractors that have access to sensitive and personally identifiable information should be required to comply with the same standards as Federal agencies and departments. Finally, we must all be involved from the top down and the bottom up. We must encourage leaders of government agencies and private enterprises to actively manage and rigorously protect the data collected and stored within their institutions. We must make this a priority, and Congress should take up and pass House Concurrent Resolution 193.

This bipartisan resolution, introduced by myself and CHARLIE GONZALEZ of Texas, expresses the Sense of Congress for the need to pass meaningful legislation to protect commercial and government data from data breaches. There are a lot of disturbing statistics. Let's take action now so that the occurrence, cost and individuals affected do not continue to increase.

CONGRESS MUST BE TRANSPARENT WITH VITAL LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Michigan (Mrs. MILLER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Madam Speaker, our Nation currently has an unemployment rate of nearly 10 percent. In my home State of Michigan, it's actually over 15 percent. In the last fiscal year, our Federal budget deficit was over $1.4 trillion; and the Obama administration projects that over the next 10 years, our deficit will be over $9 trillion.

When dealing with our budget, difficult times like these require very decisive actions. Unfortunately, over the last year or so, as this Congress has racked up record-breaking deficits, we have seen legislation brought to the floor that forced massive new debt on the American people while giving Members little or no time to read any of the legislation.

Last fall, the Bush administration and the leadership of this House asked the House to vote on a $700 billion bailout for Wall Street with no strings attached on how the money would be spent. I was proud to vote "no" on that Wall Street bailout. Unfortunately, that bill did pass this House, and it became law. The result has been a program that has been widely rejected by the American people.

Then in February, President Obama asked Congress to pass an economic stimulus plan, and many on our side of the aisle were ready to help. In fact, we proposed a bill that, according to a formula used by President Obama's own economic advisers, would produce twice the jobs at half the cost. Instead, the Democrats crafted a bill behind closed doors. They filed a 1,073-page conference report in the middle of the night and asked Members of this House to vote on $787 billion of deficit spending while not one single Member of this House, nor the American people, had the chance to read the bill before we cast our votes.

Then in June, this House voted on a cap-and-trade national energy tax that would fundamentally change our economy. This bill totaled 1,428 pages, including a 300-plus page manager's amendment. The Rules Committee and the Democratic leadership gave us about 16 hours to read the bill and the amendment before it was voted on. Only after the fact did we see a memo produced within the Obama administration that indicated that the bill would cost every single American household an average of $1,700 per year in higher energy costs.

Madam Speaker, we will soon consider health care legislation that will have a far-reaching impact on one of the most personal issues facing every American, and that is how they will protect the health of themselves and their families. Nobody knows what this legislation will look like. Nobody knows how much it will cost. Nobody knows when it will be brought to the floor. But every American has a vital stake in the outcome of the legislation.

Many Members of this House from both parties have had enough and are insisting that we bring transparency into the process before a vote is taken, and the American people are demanding the opportunity to be able to read the legislation that their Representatives will be voting on before the vote so that their voices can be heard. That is why I am proud to cosponsor H. Res. 554 which would require that all major legislation, significant amendments and conference reports be available in their entirety on the Internet so that Members can read the legislation before casting their votes and so that the American people can have some opportunity to have their voices heard. If legislation that will govern more than one-sixth of our economy comes to the floor, don't Members as well as the American people deserve a chance to at least read it?

President Obama ran last year on a platform of openness and transparency, but unfortunately, it has been business as usual in Washington. We have had limited to no transparency. We have not had a chance to read important legislation before asking for us to vote on this legislation. I would urge my fellow Members who have not signed on as cosponsors of this important resolution to join us in an effort to bring transparency to the process, to join us in demanding that we in Congress cast an informed vote on important legislation that will impact every American, to join us in allowing the American people to have their voices heard. The Members of this House and, most importantly, Madam Speaker, the American people deserve no less.

THE CONGRESSIONAL BLACK CAUCUS HOUR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. FUDGE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. FUDGE. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be given 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD on this topic.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Ms. FUDGE. I appreciate the opportunity to join my colleagues of the Congressional Black Caucus for this special hour. Currently, the CBC is chaired by the Honorable BARBARA LEE from the Ninth Congressional District of California. My name is Representative MARCIA L. FUDGE, and I represent the 11th Congressional District of Ohio. CBC members work diligently to be the conscience of the Congress and provide dedicated and focused service to our congressional districts and families nationally and internationally. The vision of the founding members of the Congressional Black Caucus is to promote the public welfare through legislation designed to meet the needs of millions of neglected citizens. It continues to be a focal point for the legislative work and the political activities of the Congressional Black Caucus today. As Members of Congress, CBC members also promote civic engagement and active participation in the legislative process.

The United States is the world's longest-existing democracy. Americans understand that our ability to elect our leadership through a democratic process is precious, and we recognize the need for greater civic engagement. Madam Speaker, I have been joined by my friend and colleague, the Honorable SHEILA JACKSON-LEE from Texas.

I now yield to my friend.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Thank you so very much, Congresswoman FUDGE. Your opening remarks are framed excellently, the reason for our presence here tonight. There are many issues that the Congressional Black Caucus, led by Chairwoman BARBARA LEE, focus on. The disciplines of the members are varied. The chairmanships of the members are varied, including full chairmanships on a number of committees which really enhance the opportunity for a very full agenda.

As I listen to you speak about civic participation, I would venture to say—and probably would not be incorrect—that all of the members of the Congressional Black Caucus and our colleagues here, Republicans and Democrats, engaged in civic participation before being elected to the United States Congress.

They may have started in their early educational days, if you will, primary and secondary school. Some may have started in college. Some may have been activists or locally elected officials. But they understood under this democracy, as you have indicated, the importance of participatory process.

I have the privilege of serving on the House Judiciary Committee with Chairman JOHN CONYERS, and our committees embrace this whole question of fair election laws, the right to vote, and the protection of that privilege and that right to vote.

You may be well aware that in the early days of my tenure, if you will, there were a number of occasions during the presidential election years that members of the Congressional Black Caucus came to the floor of the House to challenge the counting of the electoral college. You may be reminded that in the particular year of 2000, Ohio was in the crosshairs. I know how active you were, having gone to Ohio, having worked with you and, of course, your predecessor, walking the streets with you, remembering discussions that you had about ensuring that you had an election. As you recall, Ohio was quite upset and, therefore, it was the Congressional Black Caucus that went to the floor of the House, in particular your predecessor, the late Stephanie Tubbs Jones. We joined her in challenging the counting of the electoral votes of Ohio. Many people would wonder is that civic participation? And it is. It is making sure that any process is fair.

So I come to emphasize where we are today in pivotal elections that will be coming up on November 3, 2009. As I reflect on those elections, I want to remind people that the best of America was the times in which it moved to remove the barriers of voting. To remove the distinctions between slave and nonslave took a very long time. But to remove the distinction between landowner and nonlandowner were some of the first efforts to create an opportunity for all to vote.

In 1920, of course, there was the amendment to create the opportunity for women to vote. African Americans, however, and language minorities had longer periods of time, and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 came around and then its amendment, which, by the way, the language minority provision in the Voting Rights Act was placed in that act by the Honorable Barbara Jordan, my predecessor. But the idea was to increase participation.

And as I listen to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle recounting maybe the dismay that they have in some of the major changes that are being made by both this White House and Congress, might I say that it is a direct evidence of the vitality of the vote in 2008. It was not something that just developed. It was the message of the voters who went in huge numbers to the polls in November, 2008, ultimately electing President Barack Obama with the message of green energy or renewables or the opportunity for expanding the horizon on producing energy. And I come from oil and gas territory, and I frankly believe we have room for many of those energy types, but I recognize that green energy will be part of our future.

Likewise, the message came from the voters, because of their civic participation, on a vigorous public option in health care reform. So our colleagues are really speaking to the American people whose numbers say give us a vigorous public option.

This vote that is coming up, one or two of the most highlighted ones, of course, are Virginia and, of course, New Jersey. I am not here to speak particularly about the ultimate outcome, but there are messengers, the Governor of New Jersey, for example, who is carrying the message of change in this whole question of public health insurance or public option in health care and the idea of full employment. Likewise, those opportunities or discussions are being heard in Virginia as well.

It is important in every election that is coming up in November of 2009 for the same momentum and the same participation to surge as it did in 2008. And I think this Special Order, if you will, is enormously crucial for the fact that people don't think of elections when you don't focus them on a presidential election. They really think of elections as that highlight, but you are coming to bring to our attention the vitality and the importance of elections every single year, city elections, county elections, Federal elections, and State elections.

Ms. FUDGE. Reclaiming my time, just to take that one step further, I think that people don't understand the significance of voting, as you suggest, all the time. What most people don't realize is that it is bodies like ours, which the gentlewoman from Texas talked about, who make decisions about things that people never think about. Just the very air we breathe, we make decisions about pollution and how much pollution can be in the air, about the quality of the food people eat, about the quality of their children's education. Those are decisions that are made by elected officials many, many times. I think that if people understood how significant it is to vote and how much change could be made by a vote, more people might be inclined to do it on a regular basis.

I yield.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I thank the gentlewoman. That is why I salute you as I join with you in the Congressional Black Caucus because many would not think of bringing this to the attention of the American people.

In addition, I want to salute the Congress and the Congressional Black Caucus because this Democratic majority took the lead on fair election laws right after the unfortunate, I call it, debacle in Ohio. We began to talk about rewriting the election laws to insist that certain parameters be in place to protect the voter, to protect the voter at the voting ballot, to assess the kinds of voting tools that are being used, to try to find consistency. As you know, the most important issue was this accountability, the ability to track the balloting in electronic balloting, to have a paper trail, as we call it. We're still fighting to get that done, but we were the voices to speak about that so that people could have the ability to challenge.

Right now in Harris County we had a very difficult race in 2008. A number of candidates lost. They posed a challenge because they believed there were ballot infractions. We are now in the midst of looking at a settlement agreement that I believe may not be the right kind of settlement agreement, that really didn't answer the concerns of those who were violated, whose votes were not counted and the candidates who did not prevail because we felt that there were inaccuracies in a voting system or a voting office, if you will, the officer who presided over the voting count—there were some infractions.

So even today in 2009 we should not be hesitant to remind voters that a vote is precious, every vote counts, and that it is important, as the United States Congress exists, that local elected officials exist, that State officials exist, they exist because of the vote. And I am hoping as we have the spotlight on States like Virginia and New Jersey that we will spotlight on the local elections and that civic participation is the direct relationship for the kind of outstanding leadership that you get.

I want to yield back on this point: We have local elections in Houston, Texas, local elections around the Nation. Not one single vote should be diminished in its value, for your life gets changed or your voice gets heard by that vote. And it is my commitment, as a member of the Congressional Black Caucus and a member of the House Judiciary Committee, to insist, if you will, on the idea of full participation of voters and making sure that we have the opportunity to protect the right to vote and to make sure that, as protectors of the right to vote, people take advantage of it and vote.

Ms. FUDGE. Thank you so very much.

I just want to just go one step further and talk about the power of the vote. There are so many people who believe that one vote doesn't make a difference. I could go through a litany of things that were decided by one vote, but I won't. But what I will say is this: Your vote is your voice. If you don't vote, then you have silenced yourself. So I think that it is important for us to understand and let the American people understand that no matter what the issue is, if you don't vote, what you've done is help the other side.

So let your voice be heard, because even though I wasn't in the House, obviously, when you took up this whole thing about revising the way we do elections, I am just so pleased that in my State as a result of that, we now have absentee voting for any person. It used to be you had to be a certain age or you had to be infirm or you had to be this. Now any single person with no reason whatsoever can request a vote from the comfort of their home. Especially when we have many, many issues as things get difficult and more and more communities are asking for resources, then they can sit and take their time and not be in a voting booth being rushed or feeling rushed because people are behind them.

I think it is something that really came out of that, and I appreciate and thank you and especially thank Stephanie Tubbs Jones for her work with it as well. But I just hope that people understand it is a responsibility. So many people fought to get us where we are today. It really is a responsibility to go out and vote.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. If the gentlelady would yield for a moment, I want to use one example because I chair the Congressional Children's Caucus. I remember in the summer of 2008, I was begging for Federal dollars for summer youth jobs. You remember those programs.

Ms. FUDGE. Yes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. And they existed 10, 15 years ago, 5 years ago, or I know they existed in the previous Democratic administration. But we literally were starving for those dollars over the last 8 years in the previous administration. So because we didn't have those dollars, I put together what you call a Houston summer job pilot program, where I grabbed small businesses and corporations in the summer of 2008 just to give these young people an opportunity. I couldn't give thousands but I gave a few the opportunity to work and to be paid. We raised the money, the community raised the money, to be paid by these small businesses.

The community needs to know, the Nation needs to know, that in 2009 with change and a new President, on the basis of the vote, there were millions of dollars going into communities during the summer for summer youth jobs.

I want people to take a poll. It's interesting that I'm hearing my colleagues talk about where did the stimulus dollars go? Ask some teenager that had a summer youth job and worked and did legitimate work, cleaned parks, worked in various community services, because of the summer youth program. That came about through a vote that you made, the Nation made, in 2008, where you elected a President, President Barack Obama, who created this vision of stimulus dollars to energize the economy and put millions of young people to work who, by the way, saved money, bought clothes or bought school supplies or helped their family but charged the economy, which I am sure will be reflected as we look back over the summer months, those jobs were valuable input into the economy.

That is what a vote will do. And I hope that as you proceed on this Special Order tonight, it will be well recognized how important it is for the vote to be cast and to be counted, and that will be our commitment as we continue to work together.

Ms. FUDGE. Thank you so very much. I appreciate the gentlewoman from Texas for joining me.

I just want to say this one thing: I was listening to one of my colleagues earlier ask what happened to the month of August? The month of August was spent, at least in my district, hiring 6,000 children to work summer jobs. The month of August was a time when I spent time talking to the people at home who want a public option. The month of August wasn't lost. But let me just say that in the event people believe it was, the month of October certainly isn't. And all the polls indicate that more people want a public option than not. So I just want to make that clear to make sure that the record was straight.

Madam Speaker, I want to continue with our hour this evening, and I just want to say to everyone who is listening that we all share in the responsibility to create a better America. One way to strengthen our government is through civic engagement, whether it is through voting, attending a town hall or other public discussion, or writing a letter to your Members of Congress. These e-mails, letters, and phone calls you make to your elected officials really do have an impact.

In my office my staff keeps a tally of all the phone calls we receive on the issues, which I review on a regular basis. One of my constituents, Paul Gordon, calls every week and sometimes several times a week. I may not always agree with Paul Gordon, but I appreciate his comments and encourage him and other constituents to share their views with me. And that's what happened in August, Madam Speaker. People shared their views. We learned a great deal from the dialogue we had in the month of August.

Madam Speaker, in last year's historic presidential election, voter turnout was at a record high, particularly in the African American community. To create change and hold elected officials responsible for their votes, Americans must continue to stay engaged on the issues year round, not just at election time. Moreover, African Americans must be involved in the debate. The stakes are high in every election, on every ballot, and between elections. Every voting day presents Americans with the same question: Will we be the masters of our own destinies or will we allow others to decide our fate? We must voice our opinions through civic engagement to positively change the course of our cities, towns, and the Nation. As Martin Luther King, Jr. said, Our lives begin to end the day, the very day, we become silent about things that matter.

I am proud to share a few stories of individuals from my district who are actively engaged in the civic process. They come from various backgrounds and ages.

□ 2045

However, they all share a desire to help others and to make government responsive to the people.

There is a young woman named Artavia Hill from Euclid, Ohio. She is a shining example of a young person actively engaged in the political process. As president of the NAACP Cleveland Youth Council, she registered voters during Russ Parr's Back to School Bus Tour in August of this year. She also spearheaded the youth council's "Vote Hard, Step Hard: Stop the Violence" which was an event held at Cleveland State University in January where young people were encouraged to register to vote, they discussed the effects of violence on the city and listened to local candidates. Don't give up on our youth. Artavia Hill is not the only one doing things for Cleveland's community.

Dorothy Jones is another young northeast Ohioan committed to civic engagement. Her grandmother, Margaret Walker Fields, put Dorothy under her wing and taught her the importance of voting. During her childhood, Dorothy canvassed the 55th and Broadway area, and helped seniors fill out their absentee ballots. Because of her grandmother and the sense of reward she gets from helping others, she has devoted her life to public service. Dorothy now works for a council member in Cleveland.

It is people with passion like Pearl Livingstone that brought me and many others into politics. Pearl, a Shaker Heights resident, created a program where the Ohio Secretary of State's office sent letters to high school seniors congratulating them for graduating and encouraging them to vote. She also encouraged 17-year-olds, who would be 18 by election day, to register to vote. To support those efforts, she helped start a voting advocacy group in Cleveland to encourage young people to get out and vote. Pearl deserves praise for putting her energies toward engaging young people in the civic process and educating them on the powerful impact of voting.

And then there are seniors. Senior citizens are also very involved in the process. My friend, Dr. Jacklyn Chisholm, told me about one of her friends and mentors and someone I have known for many years, Ms. Dionne Thomas-Carmichael. Dr. Chisholm said Dionne is very involved in the community, from signing people up for voter registration, to participating in political campaigns, to galvanizing individuals to care about their communities by turning complaints into positive action through advocacy. She is proud of the years that she has spent on the frontline in grassroots political action.

I am always amazed by her energy and willingness to roll up her sleeves and get to work. She believes that we each have a responsibility to ourselves, our families, and our communities to make life better for others. To this end, she recognizes that the political process and advocacy are an important vehicle through which everyday people's voices are heard.

I want to talk just a bit about ex-offenders, sometimes the forgotten people in our society. But in Ohio, an ex-offender can register to vote immediately upon release from confinement even if on parole. The reinstated citizen can vote in the next scheduled election without any restrictions. While there are no barriers that prevent ex-offenders from voting in the State of Ohio, many ex-offenders are not aware that they have these rights. David Singleton who is the executive director of the Prison Reform Advocacy Center says: "States like Ohio, where all former prisoners can vote as soon as they are released, should take steps to ensure the ex-offenders fully understand this important right. When former prisoners believe they are stakeholders in their communities and have the power to contribute to civic life, they are more likely to succeed which is in all of our best interests. Our democracy suffers when the voices of all eligible voters, including former prisoners, are not heard. If 20 percent of the 34,000 ex-offenders on community supervision in Ohio are not voting because they erroneously believe they are ineligible to do so, then 6,800 potential votes have been lost. We want to ensure that ex-prisoners are not being disenfranchised on account of misinformation."

Count every vote. We have all seen why counting each and every vote in an election is so important. During the 2004 Presidential election, Ohio suffered unfortunate irregularities in the voting system, which caused confusion and disruption. That disenfranchisement of voters is why my dear friend, the late Congresswoman Stephanie Tubbs Jones, introduced the Count Every Vote Act while a Member of Congress. The Count Every Vote Act, or CEVA for short, sought to remedy many of the problems that voters continue to face all over this country. This bill is not yet law, but should be.

While the bill is not law and has not been reintroduced this year, I want to highlight some of the voter protection and enfranchisement provisions of this bill.

CEVA maintains that voters deserve a paper trail of their electronic vote. This must be done to ensure accuracy in counting and avoid technological glitches. The first portion of the bill focuses on voter verification and auditing procedures.

CEVA would require that all voting systems produce or require the use of voter-verified paper ballot or record suitable for manual audits.

We must ensure that all Americans, including those with disabilities or language barriers, retain their right to cast a ballot. To that end, CEVA asks that the Federal Government require that at least one machine per precinct must allow voters with disabilities and language-minority voters to cast a vote in a private and independent manner.

I believe that the Federal Government should require all States to offer early voting. CEVA makes this proposal to encourage people to vote by allowing them to vote at times convenient for them and avoiding long lines on election day. As I mentioned before, for our democracy to function well, all Americans must have a pathway to participate in the election process. To that end, the bill proposes that all States end the practice of prohibiting convicted felons who have completed their prison term, parole or probation to vote. After all, they have served their time.

CEVA further proposes that we study the impact of making election day a Federal holiday. Creating such a day would give more voters time to cast ballots and allow more qualified people to serve as poll workers.

Our leadership and moral strength is only enhanced when we help others. We lift as we rise. To have a vibrant democracy, we must encourage the participation of all citizens and fight against efforts to disenfranchise voters. We must work to ensure that our citizens do not encounter barriers to their full participation in the election process. Whether it is seniors who need transportation to the voting booth or ex-offenders who are unaware of the reinstatement of the right to vote, we cannot sit by while our fellow Americans are excluded from the democratic process. We must also encourage voters to be educated and organized citizens in order to strengthen and empower our communities. At the end of the day, civic participation is both a duty and a right.

The legislative process affects all aspects of our lives and we cannot afford to remain silent. Your vote is your voice, so speak loud and clear. Members of Congress and all elected officials will hear you.

Next Tuesday is election day for many. Use the power of your one vote. When you do not vote, by default you cast a ballot against the person or proposal you prefer. Your missing vote is one less that the opposition has to overcome. Thus, your vote is for those with whom you disagree. Get out, use your voice, and vote.

FREE ENTERPRISE, THE FOUNDATION OF AMERICA'S ECONOMIC SYSTEM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a privilege to address you here tonight on the floor of the House of Representatives in this great deliberative body that we once were and sometimes are and perhaps one day will be again in honor of the traditions that we have in this Congress. It has been a difficult year for this deliberative body, and one of the reasons for that I believe is the leadership of this House and the leadership of the majority party seem to be quite concerned about open public debate, quite concerned about limiting the amendments that come to the floor, and quite concerned about pushing a new President's agenda. This new President's agenda follows through a whole series of major moves from a business perspective. Some of them actually started before his election and some of them happened after his election and many of them happened after the President's inauguration. But we have witnessed here within the last 15 months or so the nationalization of huge business entities in America. It is framed by the $700 billion TARP bailout and the $787 billion stimulus plan. In the middle of all of that came the nationalization of three large investment banks, AIG, Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, General Motors, and Chrysler. All of that adds up to about one-third of America's private sector being nationalized, much of it under the watch of this administration, but not all of it, in fairness, Madam Speaker.

The American people are nervous. They know that free enterprise is the foundation of America's economic system. That is so basic to the American people, the value of free enterprise, and it is so basic to the values of, let me say USCIS, the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services, that they have a whole stack of flashcards that are prepared for those who would study for the naturalization test, those immigrants who go through the process to become American citizens, the people we celebrate as Americans by choice, a whole series of flashcards, the history of America is on those flashcards. They are stacked that deep, and you can turn one after another over and you can understand about what George Washington and the Constitution and the Declaration and the Bill of Rights and the Fourth of July and the list goes on and on.

One of those flashcards, Madam Speakers, asks what is the economic system of the United States of America? You flip the card over and it says free enterprise capitalism is the economics system of the United States of America. Yet one-third of it has been nationalized by the Federal Government, and no exit strategy seems to be in sight. As the American people watch this rush towards the socialization/nationalization of one-third of our economy, they also saw a cap-and-trade bill pushed through, about 12 hours from the time the bill was dropped until such time it was on the floor for debate without legitimate amendments.

The American people watched this and they understood intuitively, if not articulated on the streets, that they understood that freedom was being compromised. The principles of our free market system were being compromised. They also understood that a prudent government with people that hold the gavels that are fiscally responsible and a future President that might be fiscally responsible, I believe I have given up hope on this one, could actually set things up so we could work our way through the trillions of dollars of debt that we now have and work our way through the nationalization and begin to privatize, sell those shares back to General Motors, sell them back to Chrysler, privatize Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and require them to be capitalized like other lending institutions, regulate them like other lending institutions and sell those shares back in the marketplace, and for the Federal Government to divest themselves from their investment in this huge nationalization, AIG included.

Now, that could all happen under a future President and under a Congress that is dominated by people that just believe simply the opposite side of that flashcard that asks the question of anybody that wants to become an American citizen, what is the economic system of the United States? Flip it over, free enterprise capitalism. That compels the Federal Government to divest itself if, of course, we believe in the tenet that we require people to know if they're to become an American citizen and naturalize an American citizen.

So the American people saw this rush, they saw this push that went towards this nationalization of our one-third of our economy and the rush through cap-and-trade in the House, and now it is stalled in the Senate, thankfully. I hope it doesn't get brought up again. It is a tax on all of our energy. It is cap-and-tax.

But all of this went through in a rush, and the American people didn't have an opportunity to weigh in. Before they could catch up with what was going on, decisions were made. Those decisions were made behind closed doors—and sometimes the irrevocable decisions of the nationalization of these entities. And once they saw all that happen and they saw the President push hard for $787 billion in bailout money—and, Madam Speaker, they saw every Republican vote “no” on that $787 billion and they thought, at least there's a sign for hope here; Republicans are sticking together. But behind that came cap-and-trade, 12 hours from the bill drop until it was up on the floor for debate, no legitimate amendments allowed. And then they saw health care, a complete overhaul of the health care system coming at them as fast as a freight train of all the other things that came at them.

Now, thankfully, there was a delay for the break in August and the American people came together. There were hundreds and hundreds of town hall meetings that were held by many Members of Congress. I believe every Republican, and many Democrats, held numbers of town hall meetings and constituents filled the rooms. There is a case of a town hall meeting in Oklahoma that brought about 3,000 people. And there were many meetings around in my part of the country that brought in several hundred when a normal town hall meeting for a low intensity period of time might bring, oh, a couple dozen people in to talk to their Senator or their Congressman. But this was hundreds. And it's because the American people finally had an opportunity to step in and weigh in after they had seen this slide towards socialism that had taken place and the nationalization of these eight huge entities and one-third of our private sector economy nationalized.

The American people stood up and they filled the town hall meetings. They had their say, and they rejected this idea of a government option that would go directly in competition against our health insurance industries. They said, We don't need it. We don't want it. We don't want the Federal Government taking over our health care. They understand what happens. When you have a government-run insurance system, it becomes, often, the only insurance system that's there. We've seen this happen, Madam Speaker, with the case of the national flood insurance.

In 1968, the property and casualty companies were providing 100 percent of the flood insurance in America. Now, it wasn't a developed market like it is today, and I don't mean to characterize it that way because it wasn't. It was a lesser developed market. There was a lot less real estate in the floodplains in 1968 than there is today, a lot less developed real estate in the floodplains. But Congress decided that they wanted to engage in this to protect those homes and businesses that were occasionally flooded by high waters, so they passed the National Flood Insurance Act in 1968.

Today, 100 percent of the flood insurance available for purchase in America is the Federal flood insurance program.

There is not one single policy in the private insurance industry that you can buy flood insurance from. And the reason is because the Federal Government went in and dominated the market. They passed the National Flood Insurance Program—and I'm drawing this analogy, this comparison of what happens if we have a national health insurance public/government option, or, as Speaker PELOSI called it today, the "competitive option," or as, let me see—no, I need to correct that. Speaker PELOSI called it the "consumer option." It was Representative DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ of Florida who called it the "competitive option."

So you have a public option, a government option, a government-run health insurance, the consumer option by PELOSI's language, or the competitive option by WASSERMAN SCHULTZ's language. But we know what happens when the Federal Government steps into an industry, as they did in 1968 in the flood insurance. In a few years, it had swallowed up the entire private sector flood insurance program and replaced it with the Federal flood insurance program.

In order to compete, the Federal Government also passed legislation which required that anyone who was borrowing money from a national bank and had property that was anywhere in the floodplain, they were compelled to buy the insurance. So, in order to get the loan, the people that were investing had to buy the flood insurance. So the Federal Government set the premiums, set the rules, required that people buy the flood insurance, and they lowered the premiums out of proportion to the risk and they squeezed out all the private sector. Once the private sector was squeezed out, then the Federal Government sitting there, charging premiums lower than the risk, had to come back here to this Congress to get money to backfill the hole in their budget.

So from 1968 until today, we've gone from no Federal flood insurance in 1968, at the moment the bill was passed, to 100 percent of the flood insurance in the United States is all federally owned and run. The premiums are lower than the actual claims, and so the Federal flood insurance program is $19.2 billion in the red, with no daylight in sight. That's the way the Federal Government runs an insurance program, and that's the way the Federal Government may well run this public option that was announced today.

Now, I'm going to take you through a little bit of history, Madam Speaker, and then we will go to current events today. This is some history. This is 1993, 1994. This is HillaryCare. This is a chart that was in The New York Times back then, 15 years ago. And this is the government agencies that are created or linked by the Clinton health care plan, which was a takeover in our health insurance industry and would have resulted, I believe, in a complete takeover of our delivery system as well.

All of these charts that are in here, you don't have to study them to understand. We should be very concerned. We should be very concerned about the kind of government and the kind of bureaucracy and the kind of hoops that patients would have to jump through in order to do business with the Federal Government that was going to step in and solve a problem that was urgent in 1993, supposedly so urgent that President Clinton had to come here to the floor of the House and from the well of the House address a joint session of Congress, September 22, 1993. House and Senate Members, gallery is full, pleading that they would adopt and pass HillaryCare.

I will say, to President Clinton's credit, even though they met behind closed doors and even though there was a lot of suspicion and a lot of frustration and people got angry, they at least wrote a bill. President Clinton had a bill. And when you have a bill, you've got something that you can at least either support or shoot at. You have some specificity. But what we're dealing with now is still a matter of concepts. We have concepts.

Now, we do have a bill, H.R. 3200, that passed out of the Energy and Commerce Committee here in the House, but in the Senate they're still dealing with concepts. They passed concepts out of the Senate Finance Committee. And it's pretty hard to shoot holes in people's concepts, and it's pretty hard to support them because they are amorphous and they can change.

So HARRY REID announced today that he will have a bill, and he told us a little bit about that, and the Congressional Budget Office is going to score it. But this is 1993. This is the black-and-white scary flowchart of what happens to our freedom if we turn our health care over to the government.

Madam Speaker, this is the modern flowchart. This is the flowchart that was created at the direction of Congressman KEVIN BRADY of Texas, a Ways and Means Committee member who drilled down into this language word by word, line by line, sentence by sentence, concept by concept to verify that this flowchart is accurate, that it does reflect H.R. 3200, it does reflect the bill that passed out of committee in the House.

When you look at the chart, Madam Speaker, you will see these organizations in white, these are existing, with the blue letters—the President, the Congress, Treasury, HHS, Veterans Administration, Defense Department, Labor Department, all of this exists. Any of these white boxes here exist, and those in color are all new. This is all new government agencies:

The Advisory Committee on Health Workforce and Evaluation, new. Insurance mandate, health affordability credits, the Health Insurance Exchange Trust Fund, the Clinical Preventive Services Task Force; new ideas that people get in there because they've got some leverage. Health Benefits Advisory Committee, the Public Health Investment Fund here. Anything in color is all new, Madam Speaker.

So when the President says—and many of the Democrats say—that we need to provide competition in the health insurance industry, I would remind them, Madam Speaker, that this competition would be—the Federal Government would be one new health insurance company.

Today, we have 1,300 health insurance companies in America. Now, some of them may be operating under multiple labels in multiple States, but we have over 1,300 health insurance companies in America, and they offer approximately 100,000 different varieties of policies that one can purchase. Now, that is a lot of choice and it is a lot of competition.

So the President's argument that we need more competition in the health insurance industry, I think that is a legitimate criticism, especially in some of the States where there is almost, let me say, a de facto monopoly where one insurance company might provide 70 or 80 percent of the policies in that State. And so where that exists, it would be good to see more competition to help keep those prices down. But there is also a reason why a single company has gotten such a large market share, and that's because they have the leverage to be able to negotiate lower compensation rates because of the volume that they have.

But the best solution to this is not for the government to create an insurance company and to write new insurance policies, Madam Speaker. The best solution for this is to adopt the JOHN SHADEGG policy, his legislation, which allows for people in America to buy insurance across State lines. Some of the data that came out used New Jersey, for example; very, very high insurance premium rates and a lot of unreasonable mandates have to be included in New Jersey's premiums. But a young man about 25 years old—in fact, exactly 25 years old—that would buy a policy in New Jersey that would be comparable—and I put that comparable, it has to be a qualified statement—but a comparable policy in Kentucky, a young 25-year-old man would pay $6,000 in annual premiums in New Jersey and $1,000 in annual premiums in Kentucky.

Now, as it's envisioned by the federalist philosophy, each of the States would be incubators that would experiment. And in the real world, in an ideal world, people would look at the cost of that premium and they would move from New Jersey to Kentucky. JOHN SHADEGG's bill bypasses that and it recognizes that Congress has the constitutional authority to regulate interstate commerce and to break down those barriers and allow people in New Jersey to buy insurance in Iowa or Kentucky or wherever they may decide. If we open this up so people can buy insurance across State lines, then you have all 1,300 health insurance companies competing against each other and you have all 100,000 policies that are all available for everybody in the United States. A simple fix.

The legislation is here. It has a good number of cosponsors. I will say the lion's share of the Republicans, I am confident, are on that bill. Why couldn't we do the simple solution to this complex problem of how you create competition and allow insurance companies to sell health insurance across State lines? Fix this problem of some States that have a little bit of competition and others that have a lot of competition. Give everybody the same competition. That will drive insurance prices down.

We don't have to create a government entity and stock it with billions of dollars in capital to get it jump-started and then undersell the premiums so they can pick up a market share in the Federal insurance plan; all we have to do is to put competition in. If that's what the President sincerely wants, competition, then all he has to do is give the nod and tell the people who tend to follow whatever he might suggest, that he would like to see JOHN SHADEGG's bill move. We could do that in this House in a day, send it over to the Senate, and I think it could be passed over in the Senate in a short period of time, too.

Although I won't say it's an emergency like a war, it's something that has come to the point where the American people understand the necessity of allowing Americans to buy insurance across State lines.

Well, instead, here is what Democrats in Congress and liberals want to do instead. If you look at these boxes of private insurers—those are the 1,300 insurance companies that I mentioned, and they're producing to this box. These are 100,000 health insurance policies, traditionally health insurance plans. Well, if H.R. 3200 becomes law, or many of the versions that we've seen, including, I believe, the version in the United States Senate, then you get a Health Choices Administration commissioner. This commissioner will write the rules for all of the insurance companies and for all of the insurance policies in America.

That just can't stand. That just can't hold, Madam Speaker, because then you have one of the competitors, which would be the Federal health insurance, this Health Choices Administration and the public option people, writing the rules to regulate their competition.

Now, I would have liked that. Let's just say you're a football coach and you get to go out and recruit the players in the fashion you'd like and get to offer the scholarships that you'd like and get to keep as many people on the roster and on the team as you'd like and get to spend any amount of money for indoor practice and for travel and recruiting, but you get to write the regulations for your competition, which would be that you can't do any of these things. Who is going to win the tournament? Who is going to win the national championship? The entity which is competing and writing the rules for the people it's competing against.

It goes on here. It's ever thus in this Congress. People come to this Congress, and they say, I seek a level playing field, but in fact, many of them are seeking an advantage. Well, I suggest the advantage needs to go to the people who are seeking more freedom, and that's what's being diminished by this health care endeavor which is unfolding.

So briefly, Madam Speaker, before I yield to my good friend from Texas, who has been a relentless and undaunted opponent of, let me say, this government option that is coming at us, here are the things that unfolded in the Senate.

Just to recap, at the press conference at about 3:15 today which was held by the majority leader in the Senate, HARRY REID, he said that, in the proposal that he has put together—and he has pretty much had an ability to mix and match and write his own bill in the Senate—the States would have the choice of opting out of the program. They would have the choice to opt out. I think I know how that works. Then the States have to pass legislation to opt out. There could be a debate in the State House and in the State Senate. They'd have to get a Governor's signature to opt out. Then let's just say, for example, a State like, oh, Texas or Minnesota or Iowa decided to pass legislation to opt out of the government option.

Well, they don't get to opt out of the taxes that will be funding the government option. They would just opt out of being able to tap into the benefits that would be funded by the taxes. So it's unlikely anybody is going to opt out, because it's giving away something to other States, and it's subsidizing the other States.

Then he also leaves it open for nonprofit co-ops to sell insurance in competition with private companies. We know how that will work. Nonprofit co-ops, I presume that's open by the State-by-State version again, and it's not the co-ops that we understand. These would be set up as nonprofit organizations, and they would still be, eventually, a camel's nose under the tent.

Another component of this says it would require most individuals to purchase insurance, and large businesses would not be required to provide insurance to their workers, but they would face penalties of as much as $750 per employee if their employees qualified for Federal subsidies. Huh. So, if you don't provide the insurance and if you don't pay enough money to your employees so that they qualify, then an employer would be penalized $750 per employee who qualified for public benefits. It's a little murky, but it sure looks to me like this is a high amount of leverage.

Then it also says that HARRY REID had a virtual free hand to craft this new measure.

So, as I look at the things that unfold, they have a filibuster proof majority in the Senate. I've continually heard, Madam Speaker, the criticism from Democrats that Republicans are obstructing and are holding up the show. Well, I would like to do that. I would like to kill this bill—dead, dead, dead. I'd like to tell the American people that the entire framework is wrong-headed, that it's rooted in socialized medicine and that it's not rooted in freedom. I'd like to obstruct this bill. I will try to do that. If I can, I'll surely take the blame or even the credit, and I'd be happy to share that credit with all of the others who might step up.

Truthfully, it's the Democrats' obstruction going on within their own caucus that's the problem. It's not a problem to me. I'm happy when they reach indecision because they will make a bad decision. They are determined to go down the path of socialized medicine, but they have a 79-vote advantage in the House of Representatives. There are 79 more Democrats than Republicans, and they're pointing their fingers at Republicans. The Democrats can't get their act together to pass legislation, but they point their fingers at Republicans.

The Senate is the same way. Obstructing Republicans—with what?—40 votes on a good day? There are 60 votes of Democrats in the Senate. This scenario has never been reached in the history of the United States of America—massive majorities for either party.

With Democrats in the House and with a filibuster-proof majority for Democrats in the Senate and with the most liberal President in the history of America, what possibly could come out of this that would be good for America's freedom? I pose that question not just rhetorically but literally, Madam Speaker.

I would be very happy to yield so much time as he may consume to my good friend, Doctor and Congressman MIKE BURGESS from Texas.

Mr. BURGESS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

You know, I was on a conference call a little while ago when you started, and I saw you going through those charts. They do look terribly complex, and lest anyone who is watching your discussion of those charts thinks that, well, perhaps the good gentleman from Iowa is just engaged in a little political hyperbole or perhaps that he is overstating the case for the purposes of discussion, when you look at the bill, H.R. 3200, there are a lot of words contained in here.

We had this bill in my Committee on Energy and Commerce. It was also debated and voted on in the Committee on Ways and Means and in the Committee on Education and Labor. We all had the same bill. We all ended up with a little bit different product at the end. Well, this bill ended up being about 1,000 pages in my committee, so you could just imagine, with 1,000 pages, there is room for lots of twists and turns and rabbit runs and dead ends, as the gentleman from Iowa so eloquently expressed. That was July 31, and here we are near the end of October. So we have volume 1 and volume 2 of the same bill.

I would submit that the gentleman, if anything, is guilty of, perhaps, not having a graph that's complicated enough, because this bill has expanded beyond anyone's reasonable belief of what this bill should be.

Now, Madam Speaker, I would submit to you that 1,000-page bills scare people, and they scare people for a good reason. They scared people when we were in charge, and they scare people now. They scare people because they don't think we're going to read this. They don't think we're going to take this insurance ourselves. They know that their taxes are going to go up and that their freedoms are going to go down. So 1,000-page bills scare people.

We all agree that something needs to be done. Reform is necessary.

It would be so straightforward to pick those things that need attention, to work on those problems, to deliver for the American people, and not to scare them so close to Halloween with now a 2,000-page bill—or actually, it turns out to be about 2,400 pages. I realize parts of this are duplicative and that parts of this are even contradictory because no one has really gone through and has sorted out what Ways and Means did and what Energy and Commerce did. It's just kind of a merged product that we have now.

It really doesn't matter because this bill that was delivered to me on Friday afternoon really could go straight into the round file. The actual bill is being written in the Speaker's rooms even as we speak. I suspect the gnomes who work on bills are over there, crafting away on the legislative language, probably with heavy doses of input from down at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. Certainly, if you looked around the room, I'll bet you wouldn't find any Republicans, and I'll bet you wouldn't even find any backbench Democrats.

Isn't it ironic that the President, who stood on the floor of this House and who said he'd be open and straightforward with the American people and who said that all of these processes would be aboveboard—in the daylight, on C-SPAN—has this all being conducted in the dark in the Speaker's office? The doors are closed and locked. Mr. KING is not allowed in the room. I'm not allowed in the room. No Republicans are in the room. Again, I rather suspect many of the rank-and-file Democrats are not allowed in the room as well.

What will happen now is this bill, which will be written in the Speaker's office, will come to us at some point. They have graciously consented 72 hours for us to read the bill. Will it be this big? I don't know. It certainly could be. It was 1,000 pages when it left our committee. It was 1,500 pages when it left the Senate committee. It's not likely that it has diminished in size with all of these people working on it. We have 72 hours to review the bill. Madam Speaker, the people of America will have 72 hours with the bill up on Thomas to review what's in there. Then we'll vote.

We'll vote, and it will be a vote we will cast not just to affect the rest of health care in the rest of our natural lifetimes but in the rest of our children's natural lifetimes and in the lifetimes of our children's children. That is the implication of what is contained herein. The American people don't trust us with a 1,000-page bill. They don't trust us with a 2,000-page bill, but there are some things they want fixed.

Isn't it ironic we've got over 50 pages in this bill which are dealing with the types of language services you must offer in hospitals and in doctors' offices, but there is not a single word about liability reform? Yet the Congressional Budget Office, in a letter to ORRIN HATCH last week—or in a letter to a member of the other body last week—said that we could save $54 billion if we would enact the right kind of liability reform. Why wouldn't we do that?

We also had the event last week where the Nation's doctors were told, Sorry, we can't help you. You're going to get some bad pay cuts over the next 10 years, but there's just nothing we can do to stop it because we don't have the money to do so.

Well, why not take that $54 billion? There's also other money we could find in other places. Why not find that money and why not help the doctors rather than say we can't do it?

So here we're going to ask our Nation's doctors to be our partners with us as we go through this. They're going to have to live with whatever we pass for the next two or three generations of physicians, and we won't do those two simple things that are so important to the Nation's physicians—liability reform and payment reform in Medicare. It seems so simple. I would just have to ask:

Why is that too much trouble with all the king's horses and all the king's men working on this legislation?

I yield back to my friend from Iowa.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Reclaiming my time, as I listen to my friend from Texas talk, it occurs to me that I had one of those last weekend. I sat down, and I did an odd, surrealistic thing. I read through President Obama's campaign speeches, as Senator Obama, which went through the summer of 2008 right on up to the election on November 4 of last year. It was soaring rhetoric. It was moving. I didn't quite have a tingle go up my leg, but I was moved by the language. I had to stop sometimes and mentally pinch myself to ask: What has happened now compared to what I heard then?

Well, one of the things that really stands out is Barack Obama's pledge to unconditionally sit down with the Iranians—with Ahmadinejad. Without conditions, you know—dialogue is progress. That's what they think. So he made that pledge during his campaign. He has not backed off of that pledge to unconditionally sit down with Ahmadinejad. Yet I just ask the question:

Is anybody sitting down with President Obama who has an "R" behind his name and talking health care? Is there anybody in the House of Representatives, out of 178 Republicans, who is in negotiations with President Obama and who is having a discussion on health care? Is there anybody really reaching across the aisle from over there to look for some Republican components and solutions? Is there anybody in the United States Senate with an "R" behind his name who has been invited to the White House or who is sitting down with HARRY REID, or is it all NANCY PELOSI's office, HARRY REID's office and the Oval Office—all Democrats—all clustered together?

They do have the votes, you know, but this was the President who was going to bring in a new era of bipartisanship. When he found out that he didn't need Republican votes and that he didn't need Republican philosophy either, we ended up with this lurch to the left that continually comes at us over and over again out of this administration.

The gentleman spoke about liability reform and the proposal of $54 billion in savings.

Here are some numbers that stand out to me. I think those numbers are conservative. The lowest numbers that I have seen, as the percentage of the overall health care costs that are attributable to malpractice premiums, the litigation and defensive medicine that's a component of this, the lowest number I have seen is 5½ percent of the overall medical cost. Health insurance underwriters place that at 8.5 percent. That's $203 billion a year. Now you won't save it all, but that's how big the pot, I think, likely is. Other numbers go on up to 10.1 percent; and then talk to your orthopedic surgeons and they will take you right on up to 35 percent because they are faced with it, and the OB/GYNs, the highest level of malpractice.

And we're losing places for women to have babies. The access to health care has been diminished because of the liability, but it's in the tune of hundreds of billions of dollars driven by the trial lawyers, and we can't find $1, not one mention of lawsuit abuse reform in any of the legislation that's passed out of the committees here in the House or in the Senate. I think that's the starkest component of this. It's the most obvious that this isn't legislation that's designed to be good for the American people, it's designed to be good for the American Democrat politicians and the people who are brokering this behind those closed doors.

Again, I would yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURGESS. I think you are accurate in your assessment. I spent the weekend talking to a good number of doctors back in Texas, and I will tell you there is a great deal of concern, a good deal of anxiety on the part of America's physicians as they watch us go through this process and recognize that at the end of the day their two biggest problems are no closer to being solved than they were when the President came to the American Medical Association and spoke to them in June of this past year.

It is, the gentleman mentioned, the monetary issues involved with liability reform. Those are truly significant, but there is no way to calculate the emotional toll, the emotional wear and tear that it takes on physicians and their families as they go through every episode of litigation. It is an unfortunate by-product of our system and, again, it is something where the Nation's doctors thought if nothing else, we'll give up a lot of our freedom, we'll give up a lot of our autonomy, but at least we'll have these two problems solved. It looks like at the end of the day they get to give up all that autonomy and all that freedom, and their problems are no closer to being solved than they were when we started this process.

Mr. KING of Iowa. As I mentioned on Medicare reform, just briefly before I yield, and that is, the President and the White House have identified—well, they haven't identified, they have alleged, that there are billions of dollars that can be gathered together in savings in Medicare fraud and abuse. In order to gain those kinds of savings, they insist that the legislation be passed, H.R. 3200 or some version of that legislation. They also want to cut $500 billion out of Medicare reimbursement rates; and nationally, Medicare is underfunding the cost of delivery by, they pay about 80 percent of the costs of delivery.

I happen to represent, I believe, the most senior congressional district in all of America. Iowa has the highest percentage of its population over the age of 85 of any of the States. In the 99 counties in Iowa, of those 99, 10 of the 12 most senior counties are in my district. I believe I represent the most senior district in America, and our Medicare reimbursement rates are last in the Nation. The President proposes to cut them another half a trillion dollars in order to pay for and fund this growth in this huge national health care plan that they have.

Madam Speaker, America's seniors will not sit still for that kind of draconian cut into the health care that we have pledged to them. By the way, I will add one more point, and I think Congressman BURGESS will recognize this. Essentially it is the President's position, you'll find out what the savings will be in Medicare fraud when you pass my legislation. Then we'll use that to fund it.

That's what you call holding a right hostage to an ultimatum. We have a right to legitimate government. The ultimatum is pass my socialized medicine plan, and then we'll give you a legitimate government. We know where the secret is to all of this, but they won't happen to tell us. It's holding a right hostage to an ultimatum.

I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, who has made her mark on this Congress and on this country, MICHELE BACHMANN.

Mrs. BACHMANN. I thank the gentleman from Iowa and appreciate all that he has contributed to this conversation this evening, as well as my colleague, MIKE BURGESS from Texas, who did the very kind favor of coming to Minnesota and speaking as an expert on the health care issue. I know my constituents still tell me how much that meant to them, and I appreciated it as well.

I was very interested when the gentlemen were speaking about the lack of bipartisanship on this current bill. I would agree. I recall when all of us were filling this Chamber during the President's joint session to Congress, and he stood here in this room, addressed us, and he said if any of us have suggestions, we should come in and sit down with him, and he wants to hear those suggestions.

I was so pleased, I took him up on that. I wrote him a letter, told him about positive alternatives that I had, bills that I had presented. I still haven't had the courtesy of a reply yet. I know there are a number of other Members that took the President up on that offer as well. I don't know what the President would be waiting for. I'm here. I'm ready. A lot of other Members have been anxious to go and meet with the President and give our positive alternatives. There's one that is actually fairly simple that we can do and it's this: Rather than the government owning our health care, rather than our employer owning our health care, we could change the Tax Code so that every American could own their own health care.

Quite simply, we would erase the boundaries between the various States. People could purchase any health insurance policy from any State in any amount. People could do that with their own tax-free money that they have set aside, and any expenses over and above what's in the tax-free account that they fully fund themselves, they can fully deduct on their income tax return. People can take their tax-free money, roll it over year after year and, upon their death, will it to their children.

Then we have true lawsuit abuse reform. That takes care of over 95 percent of the people in this country without spending trillions of dollars and getting our country more bankrupt than what it already is. Those who truly, through no fault of their own, can't afford to purchase health care, that's something we can take care of. Not a problem.

But why not offer and why not embrace first, before we build yet one more big government bureaucracy, why not try a simple, positive alternative that is free market oriented, that makes sense to people. Everywhere I go in Minnesota and talk to people about this option they say, Yes, why not offer that? Why not do it? Why not? Why not do that first before we embrace something that will cost so much money?

There are really two questions that we need to ask ourselves. With the current Democrat proposals that are before Congress, we just ask ourselves this: Will this bill give me more control over my health care? Or will it give government more control?

The bill that Dr. BURGESS held up in the air was about this thick. What was that, about 6 inches, perhaps, thick? That bill would give government almost all, virtually all control over a person's health care, rather than the individual. Then let's ask ourselves this question, and I think Congressman KING alluded to this: Will this cost me more money or less money?

Well, the government plan we know will cost more money. Estimates that have come out so far have said people's health insurance premiums could be estimated to rise by as much as $4,000 a year; $4,000 a year more.

How is this going to benefit the average family? The average family would be getting less health care, more rationing of care, and they would spend $4,000 a year more. What about senior citizens? Senior citizens are paying attention to this debate. They're hearing that the Democrats that control the Senate, the Democrats control the House, the Democrats control the White House, they control every lever of power in Washington as Congressman KING rightly said. The Republicans aren't the one holding this bill up. We don't have the votes.

The Democrats have the majority of votes. But what do they plan to do? They plan to cut Medicare. That's right, Mr. Speaker, they plan to cut Medicare by $500 billion. What does that mean for citizens? Less care, more cost, less care, rationing. That is not the future that they want to have.

What about people under 30? What do they have to look forward to in this bill? People under 30 are looking at having, perhaps, 8 to 12 percent of their income taken away to go to pay for health care. That's a direct new cost that government would impose on young people.

What about businessmen? Businessmen are looking at an 8 percent payroll tax. Most businesses don't even have an 8 percent profit margin. They don't know where they are going to get that 8 percent to pay for that additional amount.

What about the job creators in our country? They are looking at a 5.4 percent surtax on their income. That won't help right now and also, a 40 percent tax on insurance premiums. How do you like them apples?

That doesn't do anything to help anyone in this country bring down costs and expand care because here's the context of our time. Congressman KING had mentioned we are currently sitting at 9.8 percent unemployment, and the White House has told us that we will see probably 10 percent unemployment by the end of 2009, and we will see this level of employment on into next year.

The White House is telling us, high unemployment is the new normal. Well, maybe for this White House it's the new normal, but not for those of us on the Republican side of the aisle. We know it's possible to have lower unemployed and to create jobs in this country, and we can do it by having government spend less money and cut taxes.

Well, this bill would add 5½ million to the unemployment rolls if it goes through. Also, we have seen that the dollar has dropped 16 percent in the last 7 months in value. We have seen China, Russia, the United Nations call to take the dollar away as being our international currency and create some new form of currency. That's going to increase the lowering of our dollar.

We saw this year that the government has spent $1.4 trillion more than what they took in. That's more debt than all previous 43 Presidents put together. President Obama increased the size of the spending in the Federal Government 22 percent this year. In fact, he is increasing what we are spending on welfare next year by a third. How big is that number? That increase is more than what we spent on 8 years of the Iraq war. In fact, it's 25 percent more than what we spent on the Iraq war. We are burying ourselves and our kids in debt, and we are getting nothing to show for it. In fact, the Inspector General said in a report last week that there are untold billions of dollars that he can't account for out of that $700 billion bailout that went to the banks and the auto companies and AIG. Billions. They can't even account for it.

In this context, we are going to give Members of this Congress 3 days to read the bill, and it might be over 6 inches high. This is not only an insult to Congress, this is an insult to the American people. We should have 3 months to read this bill so that we can truly debate and see, will this help America or will this hurt America? Will this take us out of debt? Will this put us more in debt? Will this give the average American more control over their health care or less control? Will this cost the average American more in their income or will it allow them to save? That's the context that we need to discuss this in and not just Republicans in the Chamber, but Democrats working together to truly craft the best possible solution that we could have.

But right now what we need to do is fix our economy and get people back to work. The rest of this will take care of itself. There are people out there tonight, Madam Speaker, who are suffering. They don't know if they are going to have a job tomorrow. They don't know where they are going to go to find food for the table. Well, let's rev up this economy. We can do that with our positive solutions, and let's move forward in the debate.

I will now hand it back to Stunning STEVE KING of Iowa.

Mr. KING of Iowa. I embarrassingly, modestly thank the gentlewoman from Minnesota for that delivery that covered so much territory and laid out so many facts.

I would like to take us back to a couple of principles, Madam Speaker, and that is this: Why did we start down this path? What has been the objective? What was the objective back here when it was HillaryCare, and what is the objective here when it is the color coded jellybean chart that we have from the Ways and Means Committee? The objective was two things. Here are the problems that they wanted to address.

□ 2145

The problems being—this is the President's position—health care costs too much money in America as premise number one; and as premise number two, we have too many uninsured in America.

All right, let's take first the subject of health care costs too much in America. Well, it costs around 14.5 percent of our gross domestic product. Some have numbers that go a little higher, maybe 16 percent, or maybe a little more. Then we are advised, the most consistent data we see, the average for the industrialized world is about 9.5 percent of the GDP.

Well, we get the best results, so it isn't too expensive when you need it to save the life of a loved one. And we produce more than anybody else, also, and once that is indexed back to the overall average gross domestic product of the American people, that adjusts that number a little bit.

But be that as it may, Madam Speaker, do we spend too much money? That is debatable. Maybe we do, maybe we don't. But the solution is not, as the President proposes, to throw 1 or 2 trillion dollars at the problem. If you have a problem of spending too much money, it would go without saying that the solution is to spend less money, not more.

So I will submit that they premised the analysis on spending too much money for health care. That, supposedly, is worthwhile to transform the entire health insurance industry and the health care delivery system in America, because they allege we are spending too much money. They have a point on the money that is being spent. We can discuss that. We can save a lot of that just within the lawsuit abuse reform.

But, the American people know, if you are spending too much money, the solution is not to spend more. That should have never gotten a pass. As soon as a statement like that was uttered, it should have been cut off at the beginning, cut off at the pass, so-to-speak. So I hope that has dispatched that erroneous idea. If we spend too much money on health care, if that is the President's position, then let him propose a policy that spends less, not more.

Then, the second premise is we have too many in America that are uninsured. Well, everybody in America has access to health care. Somehow we have traveled down this road where a position has been taken that everyone in America has a right to first-class, high-quality health care.

Now, that is nice. If we decide to do that, then we should have an open, legitimate debate about it. But it is not a right. It is not a right. It is a benefit that Congress has agreed to make sure it was available for humanitarian reasons. We spend billions overseas in humanitarian aid, and we spend billions in this country to provide health care to anybody that shows up, because we don't want to turn someone away and have them get sicker or die. That is the policy in America, but it is not a right.

Our rights are enumerated pretty clearly in the Bill of Rights. But when FDR, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, gave his famous "four freedoms" speech, he was stretching the rights; the freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom from want, and freedom from fear.

The freedom from want and freedom from fear are not rights. They never were rights, and they never can be turned into rights, because if they do, can you imagine freedom from want? Well, if we lose all of our wants, we lose all of our desires to make the world a better place. We lose our desire to make our life a better life and that of our family. If you don't want for anything, you sit around and whatever you need shows up. Who is going to provide that? Our entire economy would collapse around that kind of thing.

Freedom from fear. Fear of what? Freedom from want, perhaps. But those two were erroneous components of FDR's philosophy. But they live today, somehow, in the minds of the majority of the United States Congress and, it looks like, the majority of the United States Senate, but I don't believe the majority of the American people.

But even though everyone in this country has access to health care, no one has a right to it. They are trying to argue that everybody has a right now to a health insurance policy of their very own. Now, imagine a society that gets to that point and what that does to a society. But the argument is too many in America are uninsured.

So, Madam Speaker, here are the real numbers about those in America that are uninsured. This little pie chart shows the chart of 306 million Americans. Eighty-four percent, in this blue, those are those that are insured, that have a policy through their employer or they take care of it personally, whatever it might be. But they are insured. Then these little slots are the other categories.

One would think that we were trying to address uninsured Americans without affordable options. Well, here is the list of those Americans that are in this 47 million uninsured. That is the number we constantly see, 47 million.

In yellow, illegal immigrants, about 5.2 million. In black are the legal immigrants that are barred by law for a 5-year period. So you end up with 10.2 million of those.

Then you have individuals earning more than $75,000 a year without health insurance that didn't bother to write a check for their premium. Presumably they could manage that with the money they are making. That is about 6 million.

Then you have those eligible for government programs. That is in green. That is 9.7 million.

Then you have those eligible for coverage under the employer but didn't sign up or opted out. That is 2 percent here. That number is actually 6 million.

Then the other category, eligible for government programs, 9.7 million.

We get down to this number. When you subtract from the 47 million all these categories that I have listed, those that would be covered under their employer if they would just sign up; those that are insurance eligible for government programs but don't bother to sign up; those that earn more than $75,000; those that are immigrants, that are legal and illegal, disqualified for one reason or other; you add that all up and subtract it from 47 million, you get over to this red.

This would be the list, Madam Speaker, of the Americans without affordable options. That represents 12.1 million Americans, less than 4 percent of America's population, and that less than 4 percent are the people that presumably the President and the majority party, and in fact the minority party, would like to encourage that they get insured.

But they would upset and transform and overhaul 100 percent of the health insurance in America and 100 percent of the health care delivery system in America for the purposes of reducing this 4 percent number down to what, 2 percent? Maybe on a good day. That is what is going on here.

So, I believe it was Socrates that said if you start with a flawed premise, you end up with a flawed conclusion. If he didn't say that, Einstein did, or some other smart person. You don't have to be very smart to figure out that if you put the wrong formula in, you are going to get the wrong results out. Garbage in, garbage out.

We have, Madam Speaker, we have got garbage here. The idea that first we spend too much money on health care, and being able to spend more, 1 to 2 trillion dollars more is a solution, that is garbage. The garbage underneath it, certainly there is truth to spending too much money on health care in America. Let's debate that. Let's debate how we address that. We don't address it by spending more money. We address it by ending the lawsuit abuse that takes place in this country. We have got to reform that.

We passed that out of the House here in 2005. It came out of the Judiciary Committee where I and Mr. GOHMERT sat. We passed that here on the floor, and it was limited, the noneconomic damages, to $250,000. That was a policy that was modeled after California at the time. Since then, Texas has adopted it and has seen their doctors that were leaving Texas turn around and come back, because now they can practice in Texas without a penalty.

So, just the tort reform component of this would save at least $54 billion. But I am suggesting the numbers I am looking at show that lawsuit abuse costs in the neighborhood of $203 billion a year.

Now, over a 10-year span where these bills are estimated, that would be over $2 trillion that goes to the trial lawyers and some of the plaintiffs, and also goes to the people that are doing the tests, the unnecessary tests that are part of the defensive medicine that takes place.

So, if health care costs too much money, Madam Speaker, the first solution would be to address lawsuit abuse. That is number one. We should be able to agree on that. But there is not one word in any of these bills about reforming the abuse of lawsuits that could be somewhere between the $54 billion savings that was identified by Dr. Burgess a little earlier, on up to what I say is $203 billion, and probably more, and $2 trillion over the life of the bill. But not one dollar is going to be saved. In fact, there will be more spent because of this.

VACATING 5-MINUTE SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the ordering of a 5-minute Special Order speech in favor of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT) is vacated.

There was no objection.

TALKING ABOUT TRUTH, HONESTY, AND INTEGRITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GOHMERT. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I do appreciate this time, and I do appreciate the comments from my friend Mr. KING from Iowa, and I do want to follow up on that subject, a little different approach from a little different angle, because I think it is important that we talk about truth, honesty, and integrity.

It is inappropriate on the House floor to accuse anybody else of lying who is a Member of Congress or the President. We are not going to do that tonight. But we are going to talk about what the truth really is, and people can compare the truth to things that have been said both here in the House and around this country by our leaders and let them figure out for themselves what is truth.

In fairness to the President, we heard him say repeatedly, "You have heard their lies. Where is their solution? Well, they don't have one."

Well, actually we have many, and we tried to get his attention. I know he said if we have proposals, if we have solutions, there is always an open door, and I have no doubt that he is correct about that. I just have not been able to get past all those massive gates and armed guards in order to talk to the President about that. I am sure the door is open, just like he said. It is just I haven't been able to get there. One of my friends from Georgia has indicated he called for weeks and weeks to see if he could get an appointment and had been unable to.

So this is our opportunity to come to the floor and actually speak without all of the craziness and the hoopla and the political bantering.

I did notice last week on the floor right over there at that podium with an easel behind some friends across the aisle, Democrat after Democrat got up, and they had a poster and they kept pointing out and finishing their comments by saying, it has been so many days, where is their solution?

I would like to point my Democratic friends to the fact that if they are looking for the Republican solutions, we have many of them. We have tried to give them to them. We have tried to get them to the floor. We have tried to get them to be brought up in committees, because there are really some excellent solutions to health care reform, some great bills that actually do reform, instead of this stuff that is being attempted now.

Anyway, I want my friends across the aisle to know that if you are coming to the floor of the House of Representatives and asking where is the Republican solution, well, even though there are dozens and dozens of excellent proposals, solutions in bills, and I have one myself, they will not find those here on the floor of the House, because they control the House.

The Speaker controls the House. The Speaker has unbelievable power to influence the Rules Committee in what she believes. No matter who is Speaker, that Speaker has fantastic power to influence the Rules Committee. Then the Rules Committee has absolute power, despite what the Speaker says, to do what they wish.

Unfortunately, the Democratic friends can come to the floor of the House all they want to and say where is the Republican plan, where is their solution, and there won't be one here, because they have been effective in preventing us from bringing our solutions to the floor.

So I hope that that spirit of political bantering that they continually brought here, speaker after speaker, where is the Republican solution, they still don't have one, when are you going to bring one; it won't be found on the floor while they are in the majority. If they would like to give the majority back, like they are apparently working on, we will be glad to take that and immediately bring so many of the wonderful solutions that have been proposed.

I heard a wonderful comment recently. Someone said the Democratic leadership say they want to reform health care. What they are trying to do is deform it. I would have to agree.

I note, also, that so much of the Democratic bills are proposing to have payment coming for those bills from cuts in Medicare that they say will be found in waste, fraud, and abuse.

Well, if they know there is that much in waste, fraud, and abuse in the health care system, then aren't the Congress, the House and the Senate, and the President being accessories if we don't bring that fraud to the attention of the other lawmakers so that we can immediately do something about it? Why would anybody want to allow fraud to continue unabated, costing taxpayers billions and billions and, they say, hundreds of billions of dollars, and they are not going to do anything about it unless we first give them this health care deform, or reform, as you may wish?

Now, for so long the only bill we had was H.R. 3200. This is half of it. The other half is in the other notebook I have here. And I divided it up so it was easier to carry. I was afraid that the way things have played out in the past with the crap-and-trade bill and also the stimulus bill and land omnibus that so much would be brought to the floor without the opportunity to properly review those things. And, of course, as we know in the crap-and-trade bill, it came to the floor the morning that 300 pages of amendments were filed around 3:08, 3:09 a.m. And right here from this podium, I had made a parliamentary inquiry, which we are allowed to do when there's a legitimate parliamentary question, I wanted to know where can I find a copy of the 300 pages of amendments.

Because, after all, normally right outside here in the Speaker's lobby, there are tables out there and they have copies of whatever we are taking up that day. There were no copies of the amendments out there. So I came on the floor, looked around at the Democratic whip table, the Republican whip table. There was no copy to be found anywhere. So I made a parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not we were supposed to have a copy of the amendments since we were actually voting on them right then. And I was told initially by the Speaker, well, there is a copy at the desk. And one of my Democratic friends came up and set four copies of something on the bottom level of the Clerk's table and then pointed to those. So I thought, well, I guess those are copies that they just brought in. So I went there, checked. They were not copies of the amendments. It was the minority report, two copies of that, and two copies of the thousand-plus-page bill, but none of the amendments.

So I came back, made another parliamentary inquiry, and was told that there was one copy of the amendments at the desk. I made further inquiry because I'd been to the desk and couldn't find them, and I was pointed to the chair of the individual who actually had the copy, and she was dutifully going through the original copy of the bill and had the only copy anywhere about these parts of the amendments. And where the amendment would say at page such and such, delete line so and so, insert line so and so, and it would have injected language, she was inserting the language, lining out those.

So we know that kind of stuff goes on, that we vote on things that nobody could read together in one bill because there wasn't even an official copy of the entire bill here.

I made a further parliamentary inquiry since there was not an assimilated copy of the whole because, as you go through these bills and they're constantly referring to other sections, unless you have the correct language of the other sections, you can't really effectively read the bill.

So, anyway, we got this bill, H.R. 3200. There's no telling how many hundreds or thousands of hours that have been spent by individuals across this country reviewing it. I think many more outside Congress have reviewed it than inside. And I didn't the first week or so start going through and reading the bill because I was afraid there would be another 3:08 amendment that would massively change the thing. But then I figured this would give us an indication of where things were trying to be taken. And we heard repeatedly from the President, from leaders here, that if you like your health insurance policy, you're not going to lose it.

Well, page 16 of H.R. 3200 deals with that issue. And so that I am not accused of playing politics, I will just read this section. It's the "Protecting the Choice to Keep Current Insurance." That's section 102 of page 16 of H.R. 3200. Subsection (a), "Grandfathered Health Insurance Coverage Defined: Subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, for purposes of establishing acceptable coverage under this division, the term 'grandfathered health insurance coverage' means individual health insurance coverage that is offered and in force and effect before the first day of Y1 if the following conditions are met," Y1 being the year that this health care plan kicks in. Subdivision (1), "Limitation on New Enrollment. A, In general, except as provided in this paragraph, the individual health insurance issuer offering such coverage does not enroll any individual in such coverage if the first effective date of coverage is on or after the first day of Y1."

That means, of course, if an insurance policy adds an additional insured, someone else comes to work for the company who has bought this insurance and is added to the policy, the policy is gone. It's not grandfathered. It doesn't meet the exception here. And it does have B, Dependent Coverage, you can add a dependent if it's a dependent of someone already on the policy.

Then subsection (2) of A, "Limitation on Changes in Terms or Conditions." This is a good one. "Subject to paragraph (3) and except as required by law, the issuer does not change any of its terms or conditions, including benefits and cost-sharing, from those in effect as of the day before the first day of Y1."

"Restrictions on Premium Increases," that's subparagraph (3). "The issuer cannot vary the percentage increase in the premium for a risk group of enrollees in specific grandfathered health insurance coverage without changing the premium for all enrollees in the same risk group at the same time as specified by the Commissioner." That's about more Federal control for sure.

Anyway, look at number 1 and number 2. And I was talking to some constituents. One was quite proud of his retirement policy from a large company that's been very successful here in the United States, and he says, Our union was very effective in getting us a very good policy. They've been very reasonable; so our company is very profitable, doing very well, and we have got great health insurance as retirees, and it looks great for the future, so I'm not really worried about having health care coverage. It doesn't affect me what you guys do. I've still got good coverage.

Wrong. He had not read page 16 regarding the grandfathered health insurance that he would be allowed to keep.

So I asked him, Will there be any additional people retiring that will be added to your policy?

He said, Well, of course. They retire all time.

There goes your policy. Because on page 16 it says you can't add another individual. You can't enroll another individual. So if you have more people retire from your wonderful company, then they're added to policy, your policy is gone, and you're kicked over under the Federal plan. So that brings us to here. I thought people ought to know that.

And I have heard some friends, wonderful Senators down the hall who had the best of intentions who said, well, you know, if we take out the public option, I think we could get this agreed to. I have heard some other Republicans indicate similar things.

The problem is they must not have read the Baucus bill or the House bill because this bill is not about health insurance coverage, it is about a government takeover, whether there is a public option in it or not.

How about page 21 of H.R. 3200. This is section 113, B, Study and Reports, one study, commissioner in coordination with the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretary of Labor shall conduct, that is shall, meaning they have to, conduct a study of the large group insured and self-insured employer health care markets. Such studies shall examine the following: the types of employers by key characteristics, include size that purchased insured products versus those that self-insure.

Key characteristics are not defined. The government will decide what is a key characteristic of the individual's particular business. Maybe they need to know how much you keep in inventory in your business; how much you are paying your best employees in your little mom and pop business, we are going to study those under this. It is going to be required. Shall study.

It will compare the similarities and differences between typical insured and self-insured health plans. It will study, under C, the financial solvency and capital reserve levels of employers that self-insure by employer size. So we are not just going to look at the big ones, we will look at them by virtue of size. We will look at their financial solvency; how are they doing.

And since the Federal Government has never balanced any business activity that it has undertaken, this is going to be a real stretch as we send Federal agents into businesses around the country to help them figure out if they are making good decisions that are going to help them stay solvent so they can be sure to provide for their employers.

How about D, the risk of self-insured employers being able to pay obligations or otherwise becoming financially insolvent. How do you like that? The government is going to send in somebody to analyze your business for you to help you figure out if you are at risk.

Ms. FOXX. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GOHMERT. I yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Ms. FOXX. I find it interesting that the government is going to do that to businesses that are being highly successful all across the country, and yet we find ourselves right now in a situation where we have the largest deficit ever in the history of this country, a debt so large it is almost incomprehensible, and yet our Federal Government is going to go out and analyze successful businesses to decide whether they are solvent. I find that—I can't even say the height of hypocrisy, it is beyond hypocrisy.

Mr. GOHMERT. If I can follow up on that point, the gentlelady raises a wonderful point. Here we are in the government. We are going to send out people to help examine businesses to see if they are making good decisions, and yet the biggest spender, the biggest risk to the entire country is the Federal Reserve. We can't even get a look at what they are spending, but they are going to come in. I mean, this is the kind of stuff that revolutions are started over. The government will not let anybody know what they are doing. The Federal Reserve is scared to death that this Congress and the people in America will find out what businesses, what banks, what guarantees they have made, what money they have spent.

There has to be some pretty scary stuff for them to fight so hard to not open up their books so we can see what the Federal Reserve is doing, and yet at the same time we want to help people examine their businesses. And it brings again the wonderful example of flood insurance to the fore. That is there were numerous private insurance companies who were selling flood insurance. If this sounds familiar, it should.

The Federal Government said we are going to add a Federal option because we are not sure that the private insurance companies are being fair enough in what they are charging for flood insurance. So the Federal Government provided a Federal option. Well, the Federal Government began immediately running into the red because it was willing to take very little to insure people whose homes were constantly blown away by hurricanes and floods. Yes, build back, we will pay again next year.

So what has happened, they drove the private insurance companies out of business because they cannot continue to operate in the red like the Federal Government does. And continues to do, but there will be a day of reckoning. Instead, it drove the private companies out. It didn't provide an option. What it provided was ultimately there was no option. There is where we are today. There is the Federal Government's flood insurance, and the others got out of the business. That is where we see this headed.

That is why when we hear about a public option, a federally funded co-op, and even if they say we can work a compromise, we will put a trigger in. We will put it back here, we're sure it won't happen, but just in case there will be a trigger and it will kick in. Give me a break. Those triggers always happen, and the Federal Government takes over that whole issue.

People need to know the kind of stuff that is in here.

One other unbelievable thing, and I say "unbelievable" because we can't say anybody is lying, I guess, but we are told that this Federal plan is about providing people more options. Well, go to page 84 of H.R. 3200. You want to find out about more options, page 84, this says the commissioner shall specify the benefits to be made available under exchange participating health benefit plans during each plan year consistent with subtitle C of title I of this section. It sets out what plans the commissioner will set up the conditions for, the terms of, and there will be one basic plan. The entity offers only one basic plan for such service area. So many areas in the country may have one policy offered. One policy. Now initially there will be insurance companies that want to try to participate who can offer that one policy, but there will be no flexibility. There is one policy and that's what they have to offer or they can't offer any insurance.

So instead of having the big, thick booklet like all Federal employees, including Members of Congress, have, they give us these great choices. Many insurance companies, many different types of policies. Now what you will have is a little bitty pamphlet that says here is the basic plan, and here are the companies that offer it. Now if you offer one basic plan and you want to go further, you can offer one enhanced plan, but you have to make that comply. They will all be the same, meeting the conditions that the commissioner sets out. And if you offer a basic and an enhanced plan, then you can offer a premium plan for that particular area.

So there is an optional offering for premium plus plans if you offer those three. You could have some areas where they have four or five policies. That is possible. They will be the same policies. Now there are over a thousand policies. Then we will have—probably most areas will have two or three at the most. Some will have one policy with different people offering it.

But there are provisions in here, there is some good language for an ACORN-type group or ACORN because this requires the commissioner shall, on page 99 and page 100, assist exchange eligible individuals in selecting exchange participating health benefit plans and obtaining benefits through such plans.

And then it says, The commissioner may work with other appropriate entities to facilitate the dissemination of information in this subsection, provide assistance described in paragraph two.

So they can hire ACORN folks to go out and give people the information they want them to have—hopefully not telling them how to set up prostitution rings, but probably try to confine themselves just to the health care. But ACORN is paid to do so many different things, it's reasonable to figure that they may give advice on several things at the same time, perhaps would tell you how to avoid tax problems for your prostitution ring, and then we'll tell you about how to sign up for the Federal plan as well. But anyway, that's all in there.

This is not about choices, though. This is going to eliminate choices like have never been eliminated in our country's history.

Ms. FOXX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOHMERT. I will yield to my friend.

Ms. FOXX. I appreciate your being able to quote chapter and verse in the bill. When I have spoken to groups and have told them particularly about the part you were reading earlier, that once there is any change in any health care plan that plan goes away, I remember when I read that—you know, this is very boring reading. We all know it's very boring reading, but when I read that, I went, Whoa, what is this? Every plan will go away if one little change occurs? And, you know, when I've talked to people about that and told them it was in there, I think a lot of people didn't believe me. I think they just thought that couldn't possibly be the case.

Did you get that kind of reaction from people when you explained that to folks?

Mr. GOHMERT. Reclaiming my time, I absolutely got that reaction from people. They didn't believe it. And that's why I would carry my copy of the bill and say, Here, you read it. You figure it out, because these are smart people and they would figure it out.

But let me tell you, most people wouldn't even get this far. But if you could get clear over to page 828 of the bill, this does not impose a tax. I want to be clear about that. The President is right, there is no new tax here. This is called a fee. It's a fee, not a tax, according to the proponents of this bill.

Anyway, section 4375, There is hereby imposed on each specified health insurance policy for each policy year a fee—not a tax, a fee—equal to the fair share per capita amount determined under section 9511(c)(1) multiplied by the average number of lives covered under the policy. The fee imposed by subsection A to be paid by the issuer.

That means there will be a fee, or, the truth is, many of us do call fees taxes. Some like to call them contributions. And I think that's very noble that we have people out there that make contributions on April 15 of each year to whatever whims happen to come before the Congress. But anyway, that is there. There are fees. There are lots of other fees mentioned.

But I'll tell you one of the most astounding things that I heard. It came a few weeks ago, is we know that the President, in his speech in this room, right there at that second level—at the second level, not the top, because we all know in here, this is the people's House, the Senate joins us, the President is not allowed to come in here without an invitation. And so we extended a unanimous invitation from the House, a unanimous invitation from the Senate. I thought about objecting if he was just going to come berate us, but as a Christian, I got to thinking, you know, what if he's coming to extend an olive branch and since the first time since March allow a Republican to have some input into this bill—even though we've been shut out for so long. What if he's coming in and saying, You know what, I heard the American people during August. I saw them rise up. I saw how upset they were, and I heard them, as I said I would over and over and over and over when I was running, and you know what? I want to work with you. I'm going to reopen the White House, and we'll start tonight as soon as this is over. We can just have an informal sit-down downstairs over in the New Visitor Center somewhere. Let's talk about this, you know, something to indicate that we were really going to work together. But instead, the President came in—and these are all words that he used in his speech. He said that those of us who are critical of the Democrat proposal are not engaged in honest debate. He said we were using scare tactics. He said we were making bogus claims. He said we were making wild claims.

The President said we were engaged in demagoguery, distortion, acrimony. Those are all words he used and leveled at us. He said we were cynical and irresponsible, that facts and reason are thrown overboard, that we were robbing the country of this opportunity, that we were killing—he used that word, “killing”—his good bill. And then two sentences before JOE WILSON used the “L” word, the President used the “L” word first when he said, That's a lie, plain and simple.

It's unfortunate that the President would come in throwing words around like that. We have rules against that kind of thing. The President doesn't have to play by the rules, as we saw by the Auto Task Force, doesn't have to play by the laws. You can always get the Congress to look the other way. You can always get judiciary to look the other way, find a lazy bankruptcy judge to sign stuff so he doesn't have to have all the hearings. And then one of the Supreme Court judges, bless her heart, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, put a freeze on for 24 hours. That was lifted off. All of the checks and balances the Founders put in place were completely emasculated, abrogated. There were no checks and balances. So the President's Auto Task Force was free to violate the law in so many ways, and did.

And here we're coming at it again, same kind of deal. But the unbelievable quote that I heard a few weeks ago, having been told by the President if we misrepresent his bill, he's going to call us out? I mean, those are fighting words. He's going to call us out? I'm not even sure I know what that means. In the old West, that meant you're going to have a duel. I guess that's what Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr did. And that was over the issue of candor and honesty and comments that had been made.

So I felt like I was being demonized by the President because I've been reading from H.R. 3200, and at the time we had no other Democratic bill. So in a meeting with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Secretary Sebelius, very gracious person, I had the opportunity to ask her in front of a number of other Members, since the President has constantly referred to this bill, my bill, this plan, my plan, used those words many, many times, said we would be called out if we misrepresented it, I said, Where can I get a copy of the President's bill so I can be sure not to misrepresent it? Her exact words were, I think he is talking about a set of principles. There is no bill. The President has no bill.

Now, they're working feverishly, apparently, behind closed doors. That does violate his promise that it would all be open, be covered on C-SPAN, all this stuff, that everybody would get to see the discussion so they could feel comfortable about the health care bill coming. None of that has happened. None of that has happened.

And so we come back to this point—that I know the gentlelady from North Carolina has looked into as well—about how many people don't have insurance, and we're told, at most, 15 percent. You're going to destroy health care as we know it, the best health care ever created in any country in the history of the world, because 15 percent of the population needs some assistance?

Are you going to change everything else?

Then we get down to brass tacks, and it turns out actually, if you take out illegal aliens and people who could afford the health insurance but who are young and who don't think they'll be sick so they don't buy it, then it may be as few as 3 to 5 percent that we're talking about. Dramatic drops. I mean it could be that 3 to 5 percent for which you're going to throw out the whole health care system the way we've come to know it when it just needs some serious things fixed. Throw out the whole thing?

I grew up in East Texas. I've lived in East Texas all my life, except for the 4 years when I was in the Army, because I love East Texas wisdom.

I had a guy in East Texas tell me—he said, You know, you're going to throw out the whole health care system because a small percentage of people don't have health insurance? He said, When my ice maker broke, I didn't remodel the kitchen. I fixed the ice maker.

That's pretty logical. Why don't we concentrate on those who need some help and concentrate on what needs fixing? Instead, the information that we've been able to get indicates we're still going to have a vast number of people who will not have insurance once this bill is passed.

Oh, there's one other thing I wanted to mention. I see the gentlewoman from North Carolina has some wonderful posters.

I've heard friends from across the aisle repeatedly come to the floor and talk about all of the money that lobbyists are spending on health care lobbying and that they're just all over Washington. Well, it's interesting because they don't call me or my Republican friends. In fact, I had heard that some of them—and it has been reported in the news—that they've been told, if you talk to a Republican, don't expect to talk to me, and we're the ones who are making the decisions.

So, when they talk about all of the lobbyists' efforts in Washington, they're not directed towards Republicans, because they know we've got some great bills and that we've got some things that will fix the problems instead of create more problems. They're not coming to us. They're going to the Democrats. That's who they're going to, and that's the way the Democrats want it. Don't go to Republicans, say some of them. Just make sure you come to us.

So, anyway, I want to yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Ms. FOXX. Well, I thank the gentleman from Texas for taking on this Special Order tonight and for laying things out so well from H.R. 3200, which, as you've said, is the only bill on our side of the Congress that is out there. As you said again so eloquently, what the Senate has been working on has been behind closed doors.

I was really busy today. I heard there might be a bill released today, but I don't think it has been. I do want to talk about what you were saying about the fact that we are about to turn our whole economy upside down to take care of a small number of people who are lacking health insurance and who can't afford it.

As we know, at the beginning, our colleagues across the aisle and the President were saying there are 45 or 47 million people in this country who don't have health care. When they were challenged on that, they said, Okay, there are 45 to 47 million who don't have health insurance. Even the President, on the night he spoke to us in the joint session, took that number from 47 million down to 30 million because we had kept talking about illegal aliens who were here in the country and who were counted in that number. So he got it down to 30 million, but the number is really much, much smaller than that.

The ironic thing is that, in all of the legislation we've been hearing about, it looks as though 28 million people are still not going to be covered by health insurance even if H.R. 3200 is passed or even if the bill out of the Senate is passed. So we're talking about, again, taking over the whole economy, putting us tremendously more in debt, spending $1 trillion to serve approximately 1 million people if the numbers they have been using are accurate. Of course, we know that, most of the time, they're not accurate, but they're using the numbers.

Let's talk a little bit about who these people are. We have a few variations of the exact numbers that people are using. For example, in noncitizens, I think this says that there are 10 million. A chart that I had said 9.5 million, but if you're talking about starting out with 30 million, then what we're talking about again is of the 10 million who are not citizens and then of the approximately 9 million people who earn more than $75,000 a year. I had the figure of 7.3 at $84,000, but again, different people use different numbers. These people can afford health insurance if they want it, but they choose not to purchase it.

There are 10 million people who are eligible for government programs but who told people when they were questioned that they didn't have any insurance but that they were on either Medicaid or Medicare. They don't understand that Medicaid and Medicare are health insurance programs. So we've got 10 million there who are eligible for employer-sponsored insurance but who are not enrolled. Six million of these are people who just don't want to pay for health insurance and who are not going to pay for it if we have a plan that says you've got to be on it or pay a penalty.

So, on the chart that the gentleman from Iowa, STEVE KING, has been using, he has got 12 to 15 million Americans who don't have affordable insurance options. The number I had been using showed about 8 million people.

So we've got a really small number of people. We could take care of those people easily with a subsidy to help them get affordable insurance. We want to help working people, the working poor. That's who most of these people are. They work, but they can't afford insurance.

Republicans have a plan. As you pointed out earlier, we have several plans, and our plans deal with the things that folks most want. They want portability. People want to be able to take their health plans with them if they lose their jobs. Well, the way to do that is to give individuals the opportunities to take a tax deduction or a tax credit and buy their own health insurance. We have a system now where we give that preference to companies, but we don't give it to individuals.

So a simple thing to do would be to simply say you, as an individual, can buy your health insurance, and you can take the same deduction that your employer has been taking all of these years. That won't cost the Federal Government a dime. We can also allow people to buy insurance across State lines. That can be done. It won't cost the Federal Government a dime. We can have across-the-board medical malpractice reform, and we can get rid of frivolous lawsuits. Texas, I know, has done that. California has done it. My own State of North Carolina has tried on several occasions to do it, but the Democrat-controlled legislature won't allow it to be done because they basically are beholden to trial lawyers.

So those are the three most important things that people want. They want accessibility and affordability. We can take care of those without spending any money whatsoever, but the Democrats seem intent on spending money.

This is really not about health care. I think we all know it. I think the examples my colleague from Texas was using from H.R. 3200 are very clear. This is about government control of our lives. This year in the House, we have already passed a bill that allows the government to take over all loan programs for students who are going to college. That's another takeover of our lives. The government has already taken over car companies, the car production companies. It's going to be having the government run every aspect of our lives.

I want to point out that part of the problem, again, is that we have a real difference in philosophy here in the United States. We have a difference of philosophy here in the House.

Republicans think that it's best for individuals to take care of themselves and to keep as much of their money as they possibly can.

□ 2240

Democrats want to take as much money from citizens as they can and let the government run their lives.

I just want to give a couple of examples of what's happened since the Democrats have taken control of the Congress. The spending has increased in 2009 alone, the stimulus funding and the budgets, we have looked at that and we have found that all Federal agencies will, on average, receive a 50 percent increase in appropriated funds from 2008 to 2010. At the same time, real family incomes fell by 3.6 percent last year.

The people in Washington in control of the purse don't act like there's any recession. They just keep spending, spending, spending. Another thing that's a real problem with this health plan that's being proposed here is that it's going to cause the loss of another 5½ million jobs.

Now I know many people who watch us, even when we read from sections of the bills, think this just isn't possible. How could you have people in charge of this Congress who are so anti-capitalism, who are so anti all of the values that have made this country a great country? I know it's hard to believe, but it happens every day, and it continues to happen.

We have, again, a deficit right now, for last year, $1.4 trillion. Yet since the year began, we are on target to have an increase of that next year of 12 percent. An article in today's Wall Street Journal points that out, and the increases are in what is called discretionary spending. I want to point out, in the mandatory spending programs, that's Medicare and Medicaid—and my colleagues know I hate those words mandatory spending, because there is no such thing. We simply allow things to go on automatic pilot, and they increase in spending every year because we've written it into the law. But we can change that. There is nothing mandatory about it. We allow it to be that way.

Medicare, this year, went up 9.8 percent, spending for Medicare, and spending on Medicaid went up 24.7 percent in the fiscal year that just ended October 1. We are to believe that by putting in a brand new health care program that purports to cover every citizen in the country, that we are going to reduce spending? Well, I have got some swampland in New Mexico I will sell you if you believe that story. It cannot happen. We cannot add people to the Medicare rolls and still spend less money. It just isn't going to happen.

I think it's incumbent on us here in the Congress, who understand the truth, who have read H.R. 3200, to come out here every night, every day, and explain to the American people we are not selling you a bill of goods, they are selling you a bill of goods, because all you have to do is read the bill, and you will see it and match up the numbers with what's been happening.

This is not rocket science, it's happening, and the American people are the poorer for it.

Mr. GOHMERT. I thank my friend from North Carolina for some wonderful insights. It does get very frustrating being a Member of the House of Representatives, because, I know, so much history, it never ceases to be an honor to get to serve here where so many wonderful, caring, selfless people have.

But at times you just wonder, do the American people not realize the power that they have to change what goes on in this body? The old adage is true: democracy ensures people are governed no better than they deserve. What breaks my heart is that the American people for too long have deserved a very poor government, apparently, because they have not gotten a very good government.

When my friend from North Carolina brings up the automatic increases in spending every year, that is an issue that crosses party lines. Of course, when the Republicans took Congress, the majority, in 1994, then they worked very hard and they pushed the President, President Clinton. There was a lot of friction between the Congress and the President, but the Congress prevailed. We got a balanced budget and the President ultimately signed on. We got some accountability.

Then the Republicans got the White House in 2000 and began to have both the House, Senate and the White House. Spending got a little bit giddy. It was unfortunate. I know in 2006, while Republicans were still in the majority, that I was pushing for a zero baseline budget. What that means is we eliminate the automatic increases in every department in the Federal Government, and you start with zero increase. Because the game that's played in this town is you increase automatically every year. If you decrease a little bit from the automatic increase, than you are considered mean-spirited, that you are hurting people by making these draconian cuts when actually it's a decrease to the increase but not a decrease overall.

In 2006, when I pushed my zero baseline budget bill, my Republican leadership friends did not allow that bill to come to the floor. It didn't get voted on. It didn't get fixed. That certainly was not allowed when I re-filed it in the last Congress, and it doesn't look like this Democratic leadership this time will allow it either. But that's the kind of thing we are talking about.

The games that are played around here, this is in page 149 of H.R. 3200, section 313 is entitled in bold letters, all capital letters, "Employer Contributions in Lieu of Coverage." Most thinking people would call those tax, but this says it's an 8 percent tax, or it says it's an 8 percent contribution to the Federal Government.

In any event, we need transparency. The government, it seems these days, is rarely right. But the health insurance companies have not been right. As I explained to some folks in the health insurance business, they say they're in the health insurance business, but what we have in this country is not really health insurance; it's health management.

Insurance is what very few people had. When I was growing up in a small east Texas town, Mount Pleasant, very few people had health insurance. But some people did, and they would pay a little bitty premium, sometimes monthly, sometimes quarterly. That little bitty tiny health insurance premium would ensure against some unforeseeable event in the future, a catastrophic accident or illness that you just couldn't foresee, so you paid a premium just in case that ever came. That's called insurance.

When you buy car insurance, you are ensuring against an unforeseeable event, an accident that you might have someday, or somebody hit you and they're not covered with the insurance. Something you can't foresee, you pay a premium in order to have that.

But with health insurance over the years, that got adjusted. It became not health insurance, but it became health management, so that big health insurance companies began to manage health care. They would cut deals with doctors. And I know Blue Cross has just forced them down to where some of them are getting hurt, but they continue the threat of, Well, we'll include these other doctors over here if you don't sign on, and then you'll be out of the loop, and we're the biggest health insurance folks on the block, so you'll be out of our loop; and they are able to talk them down.

Well, it's good to talk people down in price if it's the fair thing to do. But normally all of that has to be transparent and above board to be effective and to work. We don't have transparency in the health care business these days.

You can't just ask a hospital chief executive officer, as I have, how much a hospital room costs and get an answer, because they either don't know or it depends on whether it is the insurance company, the Federal Government, somebody paying cash, all these kinds of things. But I know from one personal relative, the bills they had for 2 days of hospital care was around $10,000, and the health insurance company satisfied every one of them, paid in full all $10,000 in costs, with $800 from the insurance company. That is the kind of transparency we need. But that kind of transparency right now is protected by contracts, and the State and Federal law have continued to allow that kind of thing to go on. We need transparency.

For those that wondered, I have mentioned a solution. The bill I filed, H.R. 3478, deals with these issues. First of all, when you heard the President talk about his health care plan, the Democrats down the hall have talked about their plan, and at first they were so excited because it was going to come to just under $900 billion. Then we find out we made a mistake; it is going to be over $1 trillion. Whether it is the President's plan, over $1 trillion, or the Baucus bill, over $1 trillion, whatever it is, even around $1 trillion, the last numbers we got from the census indicated there were about 119 million households in America.

If you divide 119 million households into $1.19 trillion in the Democratic health care bill, the cost, because it is going to be around there—some have said it might be closer to $2 trillion. They are probably right, but we don't know, they don't know, we don't know. But if you divide that by the number of households in America, then it is an extra $10,000 average per household for the Democrat new bill. And that doesn't even cover all the people they are saying need to be covered. It still leaves a gap, people uncovered.

So we need to get back to health insurance that people can afford that will get the health insurance companies back into the health insurance business. Of course, many of them came rushing to the White House and said they needed a seat at the table. I tried to explain, whether it is the AMA, the American Hospital Association, or individual health insurance companies, that you don't need a seat at the table when you are on the menu and your profession will be devoured. You may be able to negotiate it to be the third or fourth course, but are still going to be devoured. You don't want a seat at that table.

Anyway, my bill, when I saw that Medicare itself was apparently costing around $10,000 average for every household in America to pay for a very small percentage of our population who needed health insurance, our seniors, for Medicare and Medicaid, over $10,000 now apparently being paid per household average for that small part to have health care through Medicare and Medicaid, when I saw that, I thought, my goodness, this is outrageous.

I know my mother and other people pay all this extra money for supplemental coverage, wraparound coverage of Medicare. For what we are paying for Medicare and Medicaid, we would be better off to give them cash money, say, $3,500 for a household with more than one person in it getting Medicare and Medicaid and SCHIP, just give them $3,500 cash in a health savings account they control with a debit card that can only be used for health care, and then buy them health insurance that covers anything that is not elective. We can't be paying for people if they want liposuction, things like that. But if it is necessary health care, then provide insurance to cover everything beyond the $3,500, and buy them that insurance.

Now, I have a bill we have been trying to get scored since August 19th. We have been trying. We have had all of the Republican prominent people involved in the committees—the Joint Tax Committee and the Energy and Commerce Committee. They have all been begging CBO to give a value to my plan. It also deals with illegal aliens and with people coming in who want visas. They would have to have health insurance. It gives transparency. It is a great bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Lorraine C. Miller, Clerk of the House, reported and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker on Friday, October 23, 2009:

H.R. 2647. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2010 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe military personnel strengths for such fiscal year, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GOHMERT. Madam Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 55 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, October 27, 2009, at 10:30 a.m., for morning-hour debate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

4267. A letter from the Co-Chair, Commission on War Time Funding, transmitting a report entitled "Defense agencies must improve their oversight of contractor business systems to reduce waste, fraud, and abuse"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4268. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense, Department of Defense, transmitting lists of procurement priorities provided by the Chiefs of the Reserve and National Guard components; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4269. A letter from the Chief Counsel, FEMA, Department of Homeland Security, transmitting the Department's final rule — Suspension of Community Eligibility [Docket ID FEMA-2008-0020; Internal Agency Docket No. FEMA-8091] received October 1, 2009, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1)(A); to the Committee on Financial Services.

4270. A letter from the Chief Counsel, Department of Homeland Security, transmitting the Department's final rule — Suspension of Community Eligibility [Docket ID FEMA-2008-0020; Internal Agency Docket No. FEMA-8085] received October 7, 2009, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1)(A); to the Committee on Financial Services.

4271. A letter from the Assistant Secretary for Financial Stability, Department of Treasury, transmitting the Department's monthly report on its activities and expenditures under section 105(a) of the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008; to the Committee on Financial Services.

4272. A letter from the Assistant Secretary for Financial Stability, Department of the Treasury, transmitting the sixth major report entitled "Trouble Asset Relief Program: Treasury Actions Needed to Make the Home Affordable Modification Program More Transparent and Accountable"; to the Committee on Financial Services.

4273. A letter from the Secretary, Securities and Exchange Commission, transmitting the Commission's final rule — Reference to Ratings of Nationally Recognized Statistical Rating Organizations [Release Nos. 34-60789, IC-28939; File Nos. EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

RECOGNIZING THE 80TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BUFFALO POST OF THE JEWISH WAR VETERANS

HON. CHRISTOPHER JOHN LEE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. LEE of New York. Madam Speaker, I rise today with great pride to commemorate the 80th anniversary of the Buffalo Post of the Jewish War Veterans.

Comprised of members of the Jewish faith who have served in the Wars of the United States of America, the Buffalo Post began meeting in 1929. Over the past 80 years, membership in the post has grown to more than 120 active participants.

The Jewish War Veterans have a proud tradition of patriotism and service to our country and to the Jewish community in the United States and abroad.

The Jewish War Veterans advocate for those who have fought our nation's battles to ensure that they receive the treatment and the respect they deserve from our grateful nation. Through their constant support of the state of Israel, fighting anti-Semitism around the world, and participating in civic betterment projects, the Jewish War Veterans Buffalo Post are having a strong positive impact and I thank them for their dedicated efforts.

Madam Speaker, in recognition of 80 years of proud service to our grateful nation, I ask that this Honorable Body join me in honoring the Buffalo Post of the Jewish War Veterans.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE PASSING OF SERGEANT LEONARD B. KELLER, MEDAL OF HONOR RECIPIENT AND AMERICAN HERO

HON. JEFF MILLER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize Sergeant Leonard B. Keller, a Vietnam veteran, Medal of Honor recipient, and American hero who passed away on October 18, 2009. Sergeant Keller spent a lifetime serving his country, his community, and his family, and I am proud to honor his life of dedication and service.

Leonard Keller was a true American soldier. Born in Rockford, Illinois in 1947, he was drafted in the spring of 1966 at the age of 19. After basic training at Fort Campbell, Kentucky and Advanced Infantry Training at Fort Polk, Louisiana, Sergeant Keller was assigned to the 60th Infantry, 9th Infantry Division at Base Camp Dong Tam in the Mekong Delta of Vietnam.

On May 2, 1967, in the Ap Bac Zone of Vietnam, another U.S. infantry company was ambushed by the Vietcong, and Sergeant Keller's unit went to rescue their comrades. Soon after his unit was dropped by helicopter, they came under intense automatic machine gunfire from numerous bunkers and several enemy snipers. Despite several calls for retreat, Sergeant Keller charged forward directly towards the enemy position. Disregarding his safety, he and a fellow soldier began a systematic assault on the enemy bunkers, taking out seven different enemy positions. Eventually the entire North Vietnamese force broke ranks and retreated. After exhausting his ammunition, Sergeant Keller then returned to assist in the evacuation of the wounded. Many Americans owe their lives to the courageous actions of Len Keller that day. President Lyndon Johnson awarded the Medal of Honor to Sergeant Keller on September 19, 1968 "for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty."

Madam Speaker, on behalf of the United States Congress, I am privileged to honor Len Keller as a Vietnam War hero and Northwest Florida leader. Today we recognize his distinguished military and government service, as well as a lifetime of dedication to the United States of America. Our nation is proud and grateful for his courage, service, and patriotism. My wife Vicki and I offer our prayers for his entire family as we remember and honor the life of Leonard Keller. He will be truly missed.

TRIBUTE TO THE REPUBLICS OF TURKEY AND ARMENIA OPENING THEIR BORDER

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Republics of Armenia and Turkey for their ongoing efforts to open their joint border and normalize relations. On October 10, 2009, they signed protocols in Zurich, Switzerland, which establish diplomatic ties and reopen a border that has been closed since 1993. While the negotiations have at times been difficult and emotional, the agreement is an important first step to restoring full diplomatic relations between these neighboring states.

Madam Speaker, I also want to congratulate Secretary of State Hillary Clinton for her leadership in helping to move the process forward. In this connection, I would like to submit an October 14, 2009 Washington Post editorial entitled, "Opening a Border." The article does an excellent job of detailing the deft diplomatic work of Secretary Clinton to assist Turkey and Armenia in taking this historic step.

As the article states, the rapprochement between Turkey and Armenia is critical to the United States since it promotes stability in the Caucasus region and could provide new avenues for gas and oil export to the West.

In closing, I commend Secretary Clinton and her colleagues at the State Department and offer my full support for their valiant efforts. The protocols have been sent to the parliaments of the respective countries. I hope they will be ratified quickly and open the door to a new era of diplomacy and friendship.

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 14, 2009]

OPENING A BORDER

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton executed some deft diplomacy last weekend as the leaders of Turkey and Armenia signed a potentially historic deal to establish normal diplomatic relations and reopen their borders. We say "potentially" because there are some big obstacles to implementing the accord, which we'll come back to. But Ms. Clinton helped to ensure that the signing ceremony in Zurich went forward after four hours of last-minute mediation. Not for the first time in her short tenure, she proved capable of overcoming an impasse and teasing out of a favorable outcome of the United States.

The rapprochement between these two nations matters to the United States for a number of reasons. It could help stabilize the volatile Caucasus region, open the way for new corridors for the export of gas and oil to the West, ease Russia's political domination of Armenia and remove a major irritant from U.S. relations with Turkey. The Obama administration worked diligently to promote the accord: Ms. Clinton made 29 phone calls to the leaders of the two nations. President Obama played a part by sidestepping a campaign promise to formally recognize the mass killing of Armenians by Turks during World War I as "genocide."

The genocide issue—and the refusal of some in the American Armenian community to compromise on it—still threaten to undo the deal. The opening of the border, closed since 1993, would be a huge benefit to impoverished and landlocked Armenia. But there is resistance to a provision of the accords that would set up a joint commission to study the study of the massacres. Opponents say this could give Turkey, which denies that a genocide took place, a means to filibuster the issue—and to stop the annual attempt by some in the U.S. Congress to pass a resolution declaring that genocide occurred. In fact, the issue is one best left to the two countries; that several U.S. Armenian groups have endorsed the accord is a victory for common sense.

A more formidable obstacle to the deal may be Armenia's unresolved dispute with another neighbor, Azerbaijan, over the ethnically Armenian enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh, which is occupied by Armenian along with neighboring Azeri territory. Turkish Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan took the courageous step of declining to make the settlement of this "frozen conflict" a precondition to his accord with Armenia—thereby inviting the wrath of Azerbaijan, which is an ally and energy supplier to Turkey. But Mr. Erdogan has said—most recently last Sunday—that his government will not go forward with the deal unless Armenia executes at last a partial withdrawal from Azerbaijan. That would be a tough step for Armenian President Serzh Sargsyan and require considerable international support: more delicate work for Ms. Clinton.

HONORING THE MEMORY OF ROBERT BROWN

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. PAYNE. Madam Speaker, I would like to ask my colleagues here in the United States House of Representatives to join me in honoring the memory of Robert Brown, the first African American mayor of Orange, New Jersey, which is in my congressional district.

Mr. Brown is remembered by family, friends, and colleagues as a big thinker, a role model and an excellent presenter. He was born in 1947 in Wetumpka, Alabama, but was raised in Albany, New York, where he was described as a stellar student and athlete. He earned a football scholarship to Central Connecticut State College. After college he moved to East Orange and received a law degree in 1973 from Rutgers University in Newark.

Mr. Brown moved to Washington, D.C., where he worked as counsel on the Judiciary Committee for the House of Representatives during the Watergate hearings. He moved back to East Orange in 1976, and served as a municipal prosecutor and as the Essex County public defender before opening a private practice. He was widely recognized for his outstanding oration ability, his skill as a lawyer, and his strong commitment to community service.

Our thoughts and prayers go out to his son, Remington, and brother, Raymond.

As friends and family gather to remember Robert Brown, we are reminded of the tremendous difference that one person can make in the lives of others. I know my colleagues here in the United States House of Representatives join me in honoring the memory of Mr. Brown and in paying tribute to this outstanding person who meant so much to all who knew him and to the entire city of Orange.

HONORING EBRAHIM ASHABI

HON. LAURA RICHARDSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Ms. RICHARDSON. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Detective Ebrahim Ashabi, an 11-year veteran of the Long Beach, California, Police Department. I applaud his contributions to our community and wish him much future success.

Detective Ashabi's unique background has provided him with the tools to excel in his chosen profession. Born in Iran as a Shiite Muslim, Detective Ashabi lived through the Iranian Islamic Revolution of the late 1970s as well as the Iran-Iraq war. In 1982, Detective Ashabi fled from Iran into the Kurdish area of Northern Iraq and then into Turkey. After a few months in Europe, he emigrated to the United States, where he lived in New York and Washington, DC.

In 1990, Detective Ashabi moved to the Los Angeles area and in 1997 joined the Long Beach Police Department. Detective Ashabi now serves in the Long Beach Police Department's Office of Counter Terrorism, protecting the citizens of Long Beach and the United States from domestic and foreign homeland security threats. He is responsible for analyzing, collecting, and investigating criminal intelligence as it relates to terrorism, organized crime, and extremist activities. Detective Ashabi shared his expertise earlier this year at a first response training conference and exposition for law enforcement, military, security, corrections, and federal agencies. He presided as a keynote speaker and presented "A Brief History of Radical Islam," to his colleagues. Detective Ashabi also provides invaluable assistance in investigations with other local, state, and federal law enforcement agencies, including the FBI's Joint Terrorism Task Force.

For the past five years, Detective Ashabi has trained law enforcement officers and his expertise is a tremendous asset to our community. Detective Ashabi holds a bachelor's degree in Public Administration from the University of La Verne and is currently working on his master's degree at California State University, Long Beach.

In closing, Madam Speaker, please join me in honoring the achievements of Detective Ebrahim Ashabi and wishing him continued success.

IN RECOGNITION OF MARY SHIRAH UPON HER RETIREMENT

HON. JEFF MILLER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize Ms. Mary Shirah, a Northwest Florida community leader who is retiring after fifteen years of public service as the Director of the Pregnancy Resource Center in Milton, Florida. Mary spent her career serving others, and I am proud to honor her dedication and service.

Born in 1927, Mary Shirah was a Navy wife. She married her husband, Henry, in 1946, and was married for 62 years until her husband passed away last year. Her family eventually settled in the Pensacola, Florida area, and found a home in the Pea Ridge community. In 1968, Mary went to work for Tupperware where a co-worker suggested that she volunteer at the Alpha Center in Pensacola, a resource center for pregnant women.

After working with the Alpha Center and encouraging her Women's Ministry Group at her church to participate, Mary decided to investigate the need for a similar center in Santa Rosa County. She went on to join the committee to find a director for the center and after much searching, the committee chose Mary to serve as the Executive Director. The Pregnancy Resource Center of Milton opened on March 20, 1995. Until her retirement, Mary has served as the center's sole executive director. Under her leadership, the PRC serves an average of 300 families each year.

Madam Speaker, on behalf of the United States Congress, I am honored to recognize Mary Shirah for her service to Northwest Florida. Mary has worked tirelessly on behalf of the women of Santa Rosa County for the last 15 years. My wife Vicki and I wish all the best for her and her family, including sons Henry, Richard, and John, and her six grandchildren, as they embark on this next journey in their lives.

IN MEMORY OF MR. MICHAEL J.
BONASERA

HON. TIM RYAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Madam Speaker, it is with deep sadness that I inform the House of the death of Mr. Michael J. Bonasera of Warren, Ohio.

Michael J. Bonasera Sr. was born April 13, 1915 in Buffington, Pa., the son of Pasquale and Ninfa Danca Bonasera.

Michael was a 1934 graduate of Hickory High School and came to Warren in 1942 from Sharon, Pa., where he had lived since 1920.

He was a veteran of WWII, having served in the Army Transportation Corps., and attaining the rank of Sergeant. His military service included tours of duty in England and the Philippines.

Michael retired in 1980 from American Welding, where he was a machine operator for 32 years. He was an award-winning machinist, and was one of the first machinists to machine parts for jet and rocket engines. He was a great teacher and was able to pass on his vast knowledge to future generations of machinists.

He was a member of St. Mary's Church, and enjoyed traveling, golf, tending to his garden, and music, and had taught accordion lessons for 45 years. Most of all, he enjoyed spending time with his grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Survivors include his wife of 67 years, Lena R. Maggiano Bonasera, whom he married Oct. 10, 1942; a daughter, Janet M. (Charles) Richards of Warren; two sons, Michael J. (Susan) Bonasera Jr. of Seattle and Atty. Thomas J. (Julie) Bonasera of Columbus; 14 grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren; and a son-in-law, Dan Matthews of Coos Bay, Ore.

He was preceded in death by a daughter, Mary Lee Matthews; a brother, Charles Bonasera; and his sisters, Constance LaMagro, Grace Ciolfi, Sunda Sebastian, Josephine Roman, Rose Russo and Mary Welch.

Calling hours were yesterday from 4 to 7 p.m. and this morning from 9 to 9:30 a.m. at the Peter Rossi & Son Memorial Chapel.

Burial will be at All Souls Cemetery.

The family requests that memorial contributions be made to the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation, 26210 Emery Road, Suite 307, Cleveland, OH 44128.

EFFINGHAM ST. ANTHONY STATE
GOLF CHAMPIONSHON. JOHN SHIMKUS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. SHIMKUS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the achievements of a talented group of student-athletes from Effingham, Illinois.

The Effingham St. Anthony boys golf team took state championship honors this month at the Illinois High School Association's finals at Prairie Vista Golf Course in Bloomington. The squad entered the final day tied with a competitive Mt. Carmel team, but St. Anthony's jumped out to an early lead in the final round and held on to clinch the title.

I want to congratulate Coach Phil Zaccari for his work with the team. But most of all, I want to congratulate the 2009 state champion boys golf squad from Effingham St. Anthony: Michael McHugh, Michael Koester, Derek Rohlfing, Kit Koerner, Lewis Martin and James Jansen. They have represented themselves, their school and their community in an exemplary fashion and I want to join with all the members of this House in wishing them continued success in their athletic and academic endeavors.

CONGREGATION BEIT KODESH

HON. THADDEUS G. McCOTTER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. McCOTTER. Madam Speaker, I rise today in tribute to Congregation Beit Kodesh, which is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year.

In 1958, a small number of intuitive individuals started hosting Shabbat services at the Clarenceville Central Elementary School. This same year, over 200 people attended High Holiday services at the Botsford Inn in Farmington. The following year, the Livonia Jewish Congregation was formally organized. Over the next few years, the Congregation met at several different locations until negotiation with the Jewish Welfare Foundation allowed them to move into the May and Samuel Cohn Building.

Importantly, the Congregation has been served by three Rabbis over the years: Rabbi Nathaniel Steinberg (one year), Rabbi Martin Gordon (twenty-two years) and Rabbi Craig Allen (seven years). When no Rabbi is available, the lay people of the congregation carry out services. Currently, Rabbi Jason Miller, the associate director of the University of Michigan Hillel Foundation in Ann Arbor, is the Rabbinic Advisor.

In 1990, the congregation officially changed its name to Congregation Beit Kodesh in order to recognize members who live throughout the Tri-County area. Two years ago, they combined efforts with Bet Chaverim and began to hold Sunday School classes and activities together at Congregation Beit Kodesh. Notably, students play an important role in these congregations. For example, students attend regular Bar and Bat Mitzvah classes and volunteer at Yad Ezra. In addition, they contribute actively in the community by participating in the Matzos Factory at the Junior Community College, the annual Penny Harvest, and assisting the elderly with various projects. Finally, the synagogue also has an active Sisterhood, which sends relief packages to our soldiers and seeks to advance tolerance in the community.

In addition to being the only conservative synagogue in Western Wayne County, this distinguished congregation was the first in Metropolitan Detroit to elect a woman as president. While receiving very little financial assistance or recognition from the Jewish community, they remain very active and play an important role in the community.

Madam Speaker, for fifty years, Congregation Beit Kodesh has stood as a tribute to the strong efforts of Metropolitan Detroit's Jewish community. As their members commemorate this tremendous milestone, they embody a legacy of distinction and determination. While observing their Jewish customs, this small but significant family synagogue will continue to contribute to the community. Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in commemorating Congregation Beit Kodesh and recognizing their contributions to our community and country.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. SANFORD D. BISHOP, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. BISHOP of Georgia. Madam Speaker, I regret that I was unavoidably absent Friday morning, October 23, on very urgent business. Had I been present for the eleven votes which occurred Friday, I would have voted "aye" on H.R. 3619, rollcall vote No. 812; and I would have voted "aye" on H.R. 3619, rollcall vote No. 813.

CONGRATULATIONS TO DON
WEEKSHON. PAUL TONKO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, residents of New York's Capital Region have been blessed to wake up each morning to the voice of longtime radio host Don Weeks. Since 1980, Don has hosted the WGY morning radio show, entertaining listeners with a mix of comedy and insightful interviews, all delivered with a friendly, neighborly charm.

Throughout the years Don has always put the community first, lending his talent to local fund drives and other special events, from restocking food pantries to emceeding the annual Red Cross Hometown Heroes Awards breakfast. He has been honored with several New York State Broadcaster of the Year awards, and a Marconi Award from the National Association of Broadcasters.

We'd like to congratulate Don on the recent announcement that he will be inducted into the

New York State Broadcasting Hall of Fame. It is a fitting honor for a lifelong Capital Region resident who has dedicated his life to informing and entertaining others, and making our community a better place in which to live.

RECOGNIZING PASTOR CHRIS
WILLIAMSON ON THE OCCASION OF SERVING AS HONORARY
CHAPLAINHON. MARSHA BLACKBURN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Pastor Chris Williamson of Franklin, Tennessee, as he serves as the House of Representatives Honorary Chaplain today.

The music industry brought Pastor Williamson to Middle Tennessee as a member of the Christian rap group, Transformation Crusade. As his music performance career concluded, however, he felt a calling to the pulpit.

In 1995, he founded the Strong Tower Bible Church and has built Strong Tower into one of Franklin's most dynamic and well-known churches. His commitment to racial reconciliation is evident through his work as an author, his mission work, as well as the intentional multi-ethnic and diverse background of his congregation. He is a devoted family man, and I appreciate the opportunity to represent his fine family in the Congress.

Please join me in honoring Pastor Williamson on his service to the House of Representatives today, and I wish him only the best in the years to come.

LABOR HISTORY MONTH
RESOLUTIONHON. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Ms. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ of California. Madam Speaker, I rise today to support a Resolution expressing the sense of the House that a "National Labor History Month" should be established.

Today, most Americans work in clean, well-lit, well-ventilated, air-conditioned workplaces. So it is all too easy to forget the desperate conditions in which our grandparents and their grandparents often toiled. Child labor was commonplace. Workers were subjected to dangerous work environments, and were often forced to put themselves at risk of death or serious injury in order to put food on the table for their families. Women were especially attractive employees—because you could pay them less for the exact same work. The labor movement played a leading role in ending these inhumane and unfair practices. And for this, all modern Americans owe a debt of gratitude.

In addition to fighting against the exploitation of workers, labor leaders also played a significant role in the civil rights movement, fighting to end racial discrimination in the workplace. As early as World War II, labor leaders fought to end racial discrimination against African-Americans working in the defense industry. And Cesar Chávez's United Farmworkers Union fought not only for labor rights, but for equal rights for Latinos in countless walks of life. This resolution will help us pay tribute to those who put themselves on the line for all of America's working men and women.

What they fought for represents the best of the American character. I urge all my colleagues to support this bi-partisan effort to recognize the importance of the labor movement to America's history.

MASSAC COUNTY STATE GOLF CHAMPIONS

HON. JOHN SHIMKUS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. SHIMKUS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the achievements of a talented group of student-athletes from Massac County, Illinois.

The Massac County High School girls golf team took state championship honors this month at the Illinois High School Association's finals at the Crab Orchard Golf Club in Carterville. The Lady Patriots put on an impressive showing at the state finals, finishing 39 strokes ahead of the runner-up. Tala Mumford, of Massac County, shot a 163 for the tournament and was honored as top individual performer.

I want to congratulate Coach Kim Hille for her work with the team. But most of all, I want to congratulate the 2009 state champion girls golf squad from Massac County: Tala Mumford, Sammi Weber, Taylor King, Kristen Faulkner, Laura Bremer and Peyton Helm. They have represented themselves, their school and their community in an exemplary fashion and I want to join with all the members of this House in wishing them continued success in their athletic and academic endeavors.

HONORING MARYBELL BRAZILE BAKEWELL

HON. LAURA RICHARDSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Ms. RICHARDSON. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of Ms. Marybell Brazile Bakewell for her dedication to her family and community. Earlier this month, Ms. Bakewell passed away at Arcadia Methodist Hospital, at the age of eighty four.

Ms. Bakewell was born on April 10, 1925 and was the daughter of Edward and Camille Brazile. She spent over forty years in a loving relationship with her husband, Eddie Trepagnier. Ms. Bakewell graduated from Straights Business School where she received her secretarial certificate. As a result of hard work and determination, she was hired full time at the National Maritime Union. She committed herself wholeheartedly to her job and remained working there for over forty years until she retired.

Ms. Bakewell was a native of New Orleans until she recently had to relocate to Los Angeles, California after her beloved city was destroyed by Hurricane Katrina. While living in New Orleans she was a life member of St. Peter Claver Catholic Church and the Sisters of The Holy Family. Ms. Bakewell spent her entire life staying connected to family, school, work, and her neighbors throughout the City of New Orleans. Her wit, charm, and uplifting spirit shall remain a legacy in the hearts of many.

Even though she can no longer be with us physically, I know that Ms. Bakewell is very proud of her family, including her two children, Danny J. Bakewell, Sr. and Pamela A. Bakewell, both of whom are prominent in Los Angeles civic affairs. She is also survived by eight grandchildren and six great grandchildren. Family was always the highlight of her life and she will forever be remembered as the Matriarch of the Bakewell Family.

Madam Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to her remarkable life and extending our condolences to her family.

IN MEMORY OF MR. ART FURUYA

HON. JOHN SHIMKUS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. SHIMKUS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of Art Furuya, a decorated soldier, devoted husband and loving father.

Mr. Furuya was interned at the onset of World War II because of his Japanese heritage. At the age of 17, Furuya enlisted in the U.S. Army and served as a member of the 442nd Regimental Combat Team, a unit comprised entirely of Japanese-Americans and the most highly decorated unit in World War II. During the war, he became a lifelong friend with a fellow member of the 442nd Regimental Combat Team, Senator DANIEL INOUE. Mr. Furuya received two purple hearts for wounds he suffered on the battlefields of Italy and France.

After World War II, Mr. Furuya married his wife, Penny. They lived in Nashville for over 50 years, where they raised their family and were members of St. Paul United Church of Christ.

I extend my heartfelt condolences to Mr. Furuya's daughter, Anne; his sons, Don and Jim; and his two grandchildren. He was an example of how Americans can rise up to serve their country, even in the face of such great adversity.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. LAURA RICHARDSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Ms. RICHARDSON. Madam Speaker, on Wednesday, October 21, 2009, I was in Long Beach, California hosting Deputy Transportation Secretary John D. Porcari and Maritime Administrator David T. Matsuda at an important national transportation conference held in my district.

On Thursday, October 22, and Friday, October 23, I was in American Samoa and Samoa monitoring the ongoing relief and recovery efforts of FEMA and others currently underway in response to the devastating earthquake and tsunami that struck those islands on September 29. As the Member of Congress with the nation's largest concentration of Samoan Americans on the mainland and as a member of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, undertaking this fact-finding mission was directly related to my representational, legislative, and committee responsibilities.

Because of these excused absences I was unable to return in time for rollcall votes 793 through 813.

Had I been present I would have voted as follows:

1. On rollcall No. 793, I would have voted "aye." S. 1793. Ryan White HIV/AIDS Treatment Extension Act of 2009.

2. On rollcall No. 794, I would have voted "aye." H. Res. 811. Expressing support for designation of October 2009 as "National Principals Month."

On rollcall No. 795, I would have voted "aye." H. Res. 837. Recognizing Kentucky Wesleyan College for their service as an institution of higher education for over 150 years.

On rollcall No. 796, I would have voted "aye." H. Res. 660. Recognizing the distinguished history of the Laurinburg Normal Industrial Institute.

On rollcall No. 797, I would have voted "aye." S. Con. Res. 43. Authorizing the use of the rotunda of the Capitol for the presentation of the Congressional Gold Medal to former Senator Edward Brooke.

On rollcall No. 798, I would have voted "aye." Motion on Ordering the Previous Question on the Rule for H.R. 3585—Solar Technology Roadmap Act of 2010 (H. Res. 846).

On rollcall No. 799, I would have voted "aye." H. Res. 846. Rule providing for consideration of H.R. 3585—Solar Technology Roadmap Act of 2010.

On rollcall No. 800, I would have voted "aye." H. Res. 797. Expressing the sense of Congress with respect to raising awareness and enhancing the state of cyber security in the United States, and supporting the goals and ideals of the sixth annual National Cyber Security Awareness Month (Representative CLARKE—Science and Technology).

On rollcall No. 801, I would have voted "no." Broun (GA) amendment. Changes the number of years for which the Committee is authorized from five to three; reduces to $250,000,000 the amount authorized in each of the three years, from 2011 to 2013.

On rollcall No. 802, I would have voted "aye." Kaptur (OH) amendment. Requires the Roadmap Committee to provide recommendations to strengthen the use of research and development strategies in making domestic industry more competitive and to assist in the commercialization of solar technologies.

On rollcall No. 803, I would have voted "aye." Klein (FL) amendment. Includes research on solar energy storage technology as eligible for funding under the Secretary of Energy's research and development program.

On rollcall No. 804, I would have voted "aye." Titus (NV)/Teague (NM)/Cohen (TN) amendment. Includes the development of solar technology products that are water efficient as a focus of the bill.

On rollcall No. 805, I would have voted "aye." Heinrich (NM) amendment. Requires the Solar Technology Roadmap Committee to release a draft Roadmap to the public at least one month prior to publication in order to receive public input.

On rollcall No. 806, I would have voted "aye." Himes (CT) amendment. Clarifies that solar thermal technologies and concentrating solar photovoltaic technologies will be included within the scope of the research and development program authorized by the bill.

On rollcall No. 807, I would have voted "aye." Final Passage of H.R. 3585. Solar Technology Roadmap Act of 2010.

On rollcall No. 808, I would have voted "aye." H. Res. 175. Condemning the Government of Iran for its state-sponsored persecution of its Baha'i minority and its continued violation of the International Covenants on Human Rights.

On rollcall No. 809, I would have voted "aye." Motion on Ordering the Previous Question on the Rule for H.R. 3619—Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2010 (H. Res. 853).

On rollcall No. 810, I would have voted "aye." H. Res. 853. Rule providing for consideration of H.R. 3619—Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2010.

On rollcall No. 811, I would have voted "aye." H. Res. 836. Expressing support for Teen Read Week.

On rollcall No. 812, I would have voted "aye." Kratovil (MD) amendment. Requires the Coast Guard to study the facility infrastructure requirements needed to fulfill the Coast Guard's missions and capabilities, and ensure that the department in which the Coast Guard is operating maintains the ability to utilize the latest technologies.

On rollcall No. 813, I would have voted "aye." Final Passage of H.R. 3619. Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2010.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

IN RECOGNITION OF CAMDEN, ARKANSAS'S AEROJET EMPLOYEES

HON. MIKE ROSS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. ROSS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the nearly 600 employees at Aerojet-General Corporation's Camden, Arkansas, production facility and their achievement of the milestone shipment of their 5,000th MK 104 Dual Thrust Rocket Motor to Raytheon Missile Systems and the United States Navy.

Aerojet is a world-recognized aerospace and defense leader principally serving the missile, space propulsion and armaments markets. This most significant milestone will be commemorated with a celebration ceremony held in Camden, Arkansas, on Wednesday, October 28, 2009.

The MK 104 Dual Thrust Rocket Motor provides the main propulsion for the Standard Missile 2 (SM-2), the United States Navy's primary surface-to-air air defense weapon. SM-2 is an integral part of the AEGIS Weapon System aboard Ticonderoga-class cruisers and Arleigh Burke-class destroyers. The MK 104 Dual Thrust Rocket Motor also is the second stage propulsion for the Navy's newest defensive weapon, the Standard Missile 6 Extended Range Active Missile (SM-6), which will provide extended-range, anti-air warfare capability over both sea and land. The MK 104 is also utilized on the Standard Missile 3 (SM-3) for Aegis Ballistic Missile Defense (BMD) from sea missions.

Aerojet has manufactured the MK 104 Dual Thrust Rocket Motor since 1987 at its Camden facility. The Standard Missile family of products, which also include the MK 72 booster and MK 125 warhead, is a noteworthy element of Aerojet's industry-leading tactical propulsion portfolio produced in Camden, generating significant employment opportunities for the area.

On the occasion of this milestone, I am proud to recognize the dedicated, hardworking employees of Aerojet in Camden and their achievements so far. These Arkansans are working hard to ensure our men and women in uniform have the resources they need to carry out their missions effectively and quickly and they deserve our sincere appreciation.

an outstanding South Carolinian and a constituent of mine. Attorney Chandler was recently awarded the Order of the Palmetto, South Carolina's highest civilian honor.

Mr. Chandler is a native of Darlington, South Carolina. He graduated from The Citadel in 1968, and earned a law degree from the University of South Carolina in 1971. He is married to the former Sandra Heise of Sumter, South Carolina.

After earning his degrees, Mr. Chandler sought to serve his country and was commissioned a Captain in the United States Army's Judge Advocate Generals' Corps. During his tour of duty, Captain Chandler served as a prosecutor at the United States Army Disciplinary Barrack at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. He later served for two years as a prosecutor and defense lawyer in the Federal Republic of Germany. He completed his military tour in Heidelberg serving as the Deputy Chief of Criminal Law for the Seventh Army, which included all of Europe and Turkey.

After four years of active duty, Mr. Chandler left the Army and became an associate in the Ralph Cothran Law Firm in Manning, South Carolina. In 1979, he formed the Law Firm of Coffey, Chandler & Kent, P.A. Today he serves as the firm's Managing Partner, and handles criminal defense and wrongful death civil litigation.

Mr. Chandler has served as General Counsel for the South Carolina Firefighters Association for the last 32 years. It was this service that captured the attention of South Carolina's Governor and prompted the Governor to award him the Order of the Palmetto. Mr. Chandler was honored for his work as co-author of South Carolina's present arson laws, and for his dedication to South Carolina's firefighters. He was surprised with the award during a recent dinner with members of the South Carolina Firefighters Association in Myrtle Beach.

Madam Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in congratulating Ray Chandler for his work on behalf of this country and his fellow man. He has demonstrated an extraordinary dedication to the firefighters of South Carolina, as their Counsel and one of their strongest advocates. Our nation and my home state are better for his service and leadership.

HONORING THE "AMAZING" GRACE WARREN

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. HALL of Texas. Madam Speaker, I am honored to pay tribute today to a remarkable woman and my former legislative director who passed away this past May following a five-year battle with ovarian cancer—the "amazing" Grace Warren. Today would have been her birthday.

When I was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1980, I knew that Grace had served in key roles for my predecessor, Rep. Ray Roberts, and that she had worked on Capitol Hill for many years. I knew that her experience and knowledge would be valuable to the Fourth District of Texas, and she soon became an indispensable member of my staff as well as a good friend. Grace served as a legislative policy advisor and legislative director, specializing in health care issues along the way. At any time she could have translated her wealth of knowledge into a lucrative

TRIBUTE TO RAY CHANDLER

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. CLYBURN. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Ray Chandler, Attorney, career in the private sector, but Grace chose to remain a dedicated and loyal public servant and a forceful advocate for good public policy.

When referencing Grace or introducing her, it was my custom to refer to her as "Amazing Grace" because she either always had an answer for any question—or she could find it. She was a wonderful mentor to other staff and was respected and admired by so many in Washington, D.C., not only for her policy expertise but also for her caring heart.

In 2005 Grace was diagnosed with ovarian cancer, and she responded to this challenge in characteristic style. She researched as much as possible about the disease, consulted experts and patients, and prepared for battle on both a personal and policy level. She became a spokesperson and resource for ovarian cancer research advocacy groups in South Carolina and at the federal level. At the same time, she fought her personal battle with this dread disease by enduring surgeries, chemotherapy, and relapses—but always with a deep and abiding faith in her Creator and an undaunted spirit. Those of us who knew Grace marveled at her dignity, courage, strength and "amazing grace" throughout this difficult time.

In 2005 the House passed H. Res. 444, the "Gynecological Resolution for Advancement of Ovarian Cancer Education." The acronym for this bill is "GRACE," for it was with Grace in mind that I introduced this bill in Congress. This resolution underscores the seriousness of ovarian cancer, which is the fourth leading cause of cancer death among women in the United States. To date, unfortunately, only a small percentage of ovarian cancer cases are diagnosed in the early stages. More research is needed to develop early detection tools, a reliable screening test, prevention methods, enhanced therapies—and a cure.

Grace would urge us to work toward this goal, and so I urge my colleagues to support funding for ovarian cancer research that will save countless lives today and in the future. And today I also ask my colleagues to join me in paying our last respects to this woman who dedicated her life to the betterment of this institution and to our Nation and who leaves a legacy of service that will be fondly remembered—Grace Warren.

FOURTH GRADE HERO

HON. TED POE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 26, 2009

Mr. POE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I am proud to honor Kaylin Mancera, a fourth grader in Groves, Texas, for her heroic actions. May 1, 2009, has been proclaimed "Kaylin Mancera Day" on behalf of the city of Groves.

The students at Groves Elementary went about their normal lunch period during socializing and laughing until a fourth grader, Kaylin Mancera had noticed her friend choking on her hamburger. Once Kaylin realized that her friend, Annie Gil needed help, she successfully performed the Heimlich maneuver undoubtedly saving her friends life.

Kaylin did not ask for assistance, but promptly performed the Heimlich on her own. Kaylin had learned how to perform the Heimlich from a poster that she passed by everyday at Van Buren Elementary, her former school. Luckily Kaylin was sitting close by and did not hesitate to respond.

It is likely that most children Kaylin's age would not have been so perceptive of such visual instruction. Because of Kaylin's heroic actions, school officials have committed to a higher awareness of basic health and safety practices within the school.

On behalf of the Second Congressional District of Texas, I would like to honor Kaylin Mancera for her heroism. Her quick response on April 8, 2009, will be remembered and will have an impact on others around her.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, October 27, 2009 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, October 27, 2009

The Senate met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable ROLAND W. BURRIS, a Senator from the State of Illinois.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Eternal God, lead our Senators to do Your will. As they find time to spend in Your presence, help them to discern what Your will is in ever clearer light. May the knowledge of the laws of sowing and reaping create in them a reverence for You, which is the beginning of wisdom. Give them courage in the midst of fear, faith in the midst of doubt, love in the midst of hatred, and hope in the midst of despair. Lord, build their interior strength until they reach unity in the faith and knowledge of You, attaining to the whole measure of Your fullness.

We pray in the Redeemer's Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable ROLAND W. BURRIS led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 27, 2009.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable ROLAND W. BURRIS, a Senator from the State of Illinois, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BURRIS thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following leader remarks, there will be a period of morning business for 1 hour, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each. Following morning business, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the nomination of Irene Berger, of West Virginia, to be U.S. district judge for the Southern District of West Virginia. There will be 60 minutes for debate equally divided and controlled between Senators LEAHY and SESSIONS or their designees. The Senate will recess from 12:30 to 2:15 for the weekly caucus luncheons. At 2:20 p.m., the Senate will proceed to vote on the confirmation of the nomination. Upon disposition of the nomination, the Senate will turn to a period of morning business until 5:30, with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees. At 5:30, the Senate will resume consideration of the motion to proceed to H.R. 3548, the Unemployment Compensation Extension Act, with the time until 6 p.m. equally divided and controlled between the leaders or their designees. At 6 p.m., the Senate will proceed to vote on cloture on the motion to proceed to the unemployment bill. Therefore, Senators should expect a vote at 2:20 p.m. and another at 6 p.m. today.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S. 1927

Mr. REID. Mr. President, S. 1927 is at the desk and due for a second reading.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the bill by title for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1927) to establish a moratorium on credit card interest rate increases, and for other purposes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I object to any further proceedings with respect to this bill at this time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been heard, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

HEALTH CARE WEEK XV, DAY II

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, from the outset of the health care debate, Americans have had one key test for reform: Will it make health care cost less? Will it make health care cost less? Well, over the past few months, a number of independent groups have reached the conclusion that the legislation we have seen fails that test. In fact, it would make health care more expensive. So even aside from the issue of whether the so-called government option is in or out of the bill that hits the floor, I think it is fair to say it isn't what the American people were looking for.

Let's start with the independent, nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office. The CBO says the proposed fees and taxes on drug makers, medical labs, and medical device manufacturers would lead to higher health care premiums for Americans who get health insurance through their employers, and it says premiums will go up for people who choose to buy their own insurance. So whether you get insurance through your employer or whether you buy it on your own, your premiums go up. The Joint Committee on Taxation, another nonpartisan group, also looked at the legislation. It says that a proposed excise tax on insurers would also drive up the cost of employer-provided insurance. Here are two independent, nonpartisan groups looking at the health care legislation we have seen. They both conclude it will drive up the cost of health care.

Americans thought reform was supposed to lower costs, not raise them. Yet every day it seems we see further confirmation that the plans under discussion would lead to higher costs and more long-term spending and debt.

One study we have seen says the Democrats' tax on insurance plans would cost families nearly $500 per year in higher premiums starting next year, long before any of the proposed benefits would kick in. Another study says that a family of four in my home State of Kentucky would see their premiums go up from about $350 a month to nearly $800 a month—a big increase. Even if these families were eligible for the subsidies in the Democratic bill, their premiums could still be about 50 percent higher than they are now. This is mind-boggling. Only in Washington would lawmakers propose a health care reform that actually raises costs and do so in the very same month the Federal Government recorded its largest deficit in history and at a time when unemployment approaches 10 percent.

Americans thought the whole point of reform was to lower costs. Yet the plans we have seen would do just the opposite, and the American people are taking notice. Americans are asking us to follow through on the initial pledge to lower health care costs, but that means enacting reforms that would actually lead to lower costs, such as getting rid of junk lawsuits and incentivizing healthy choices. Americans want reform. Instead, the administration and its allies in the Senate are giving them higher premiums, higher taxes, and massive cuts to Medicare. Mr. President, that is not reform.

I yield the floor.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period of morning business for 1 hour, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each, with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees, with the Republicans controlling the first half and the majority controlling the second half.

The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, with the words "health care reform," everybody would expect costs to go down, premiums to level off, and more people being served. But it seems as though the proposals that are before the Senate are going to increase taxes, cut Medicare, and increase health insurance premiums. I think anybody hearing that would say that is not health care reform or at least not the health care reform they expected Congress to pass.

So we are here in the Congress, soon about to consider a single bill that will personally affect the lives of every single American. Not often do we pass a bill that affects the lives of every single American, and not often do we pass a bill that restructures 17 percent of the U.S. economy—maybe never before.

As one Washington Times editorial pointed out—and I am going to quote from it, and it is here for the audience to read:

[The U.S. health care system] is bigger than Great Britain's entire economy. Imagine five bickering Congressional committees trying to redesign the British economy successfully in just a few weeks. No wonder people are getting nervous.

It is true, people are getting nervous. As I travel around Iowa, I hear a lot of concern about out-of-control government spending and a massive government takeover of our health care system. People are worried that health care reform will result in lower quality, less access, and government bureaucrats deciding what health insurance they can or can't have. On top of all of that, Gallup released a poll last week saying 49 percent of Americans believe their personal costs will get worse—yes, worse—after health care reform is enacted. The poll also reported that only—and I emphasize "only"—22 percent actually think costs will go down. Less than one-quarter of the people polled actually thought health reform would accomplish its top priority: making health care more affordable.

I can't speak for my colleagues. I don't know what they are hearing from their constituents. But I know Iowans can't afford to pay more for health care. Costs are already rising three times faster than the rate of inflation. Costs are straining family budgets, and they are making it increasingly difficult for employers to offer health insurance.

The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office, the Joint Committee on Taxation, and even the Office of the Actuary at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services have told us what the American people already know: These massive partisan health care reform bills are going to make the problem worse.

Let me emphasize for the American people who might be listening that the people at the Congressional Budget Office, the Joint Committee on Taxation, and the Office of Actuary at the Department of HHS are professional, not political. They don't change from time to time when the makeup of Congress changes. They are there over a long period of time studying things in an intellectually honest way to tell it like it is. This is what they are saying: These massive partisan health care reform bills are going to make the problem worse.

So I wish to go to some analyses we have already received from these nonpartisan, intellectually honest organizations.

According to a September 22 letter from CBO to Chairman BAUCUS about the Finance Committee bill:

Premiums in the new insurance exchanges would tend to be higher than the average premiums in the current-law individual market.

So according to CBO, after these bills spend $1 trillion, many of the people struggling to afford their premiums today will actually end up seeing those premiums go up if this bill is enacted. The Congressional Budget Office also commented on how the tax increases would also raise premiums.

During the Finance Committee markup, Senator CORNYN asked this question:

Would the new fees on health insurers be passed down to health care consumers?

Dr. Elmendorf, Director of CBO, responded by saying:

Our judgment is that, [the new fees] would raise insurance premiums.

The Joint Committee on Taxation confirmed that they came to the same conclusion during the markup. Mr. Barthold, the director there, said:

Basic economics is that that fee will be reflected in higher premium costs.

Let's not forget that these new insurance fees begin next year, in the year 2010, 3 years before any of the reforms in the bill take effect. So it is irrefutable that premiums will go up for every single American starting next year as a result of a bill that came out of the Senate Finance Committee.

The Office of the Actuary with the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services—another nonpartisan, highly regarded set of expert analysts, by the way—has also looked at some of the Democratic health reform proposals.

In a memo released on October 21, the Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Actuary, provided an analysis of House bill H.R. 3200. In the memo, the Health and Human Services actuary writes that the House bill does bend the growth curve, meaning the inflationary increase in health care costs. Of course, a top priority for Congress and the White House was to bend that curve. Unfortunately, the chief actuary says the Democratic leadership and the White House have failed to tell the American public it bends the curve in the wrong direction—not downward but upward.

According to the HHS memo, health care spending would actually increase if the House bill became law. The actuary writes it this way:

In the aggregate, we estimate that for calendar years 2010 to 2019, national health expenditures would increase by $750 billion, or 2.1 percent, over the updated baseline projection.

While some of the supporters of these partisan bills may not want to tell their constituents, we all know that as national spending on health care increases, American families will bear a burden through increased health insurance premiums.

Let me be very clear. As a result of the pending health care proposals, most Americans will pay higher premiums for health insurance.

Some of my colleagues will try to refute this claim by mentioning the taxpayer-funded subsidies included in these health care bills. It is interesting that they don't even try to deny, in the process of talking about taxpayer-funded subsidies, that premiums will still go up. They don't deny that. They just say the government—or let's say the taxpayers—are going to pick up the tab.

It is true the proposals we have seen so far include about $½ trillion in cuts to Medicare and massive tax increases to pay for this new entitlement program. But once again, some of my colleagues fail to mention that most Americans would not qualify for these subsidies. Most Americans—about 160 million—get their health care through their employer.

But if you are one of those people who get their health care through an employer, you don't qualify for any subsidy until you spend 10 percent of your income on health care premiums.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has used 10 minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I ask unanimous consent for an additional 7 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. The other side plans to throw much of your hard-earned dollars at it to make premiums appear affordable. But even with their $1 trillion in spending, the Congressional Budget Office has confirmed that in 2019 only about 7 percent of those insured will be getting government subsidies.

So even though there will be a huge new taxpayer-funded subsidy program to help pay for these premium increases, most people would not actually qualify for any of that help. They will just be stuck with higher taxes—yes, higher taxes—less choices—yes, less choices—and higher health insurance premiums.

Some people may wonder what parts of the bill are driving up these costs. We have already identified the new insurance fee.

One analyst of the Federal policy group concluded that the insurance fee alone could raise premiums up to $500 per year per family. Then there are the new benefit requirements.

Under the proposals we have seen so far, the Federal Government is now defining what kind of insurance you can buy anywhere in the United States. This means it will be illegal for insurers to sell or for you to buy many of the policies people are currently enrolled in.

By law, it will be illegal to buy policies that don't meet an actuarial value of 65 percent and cover a long list of mandated benefits.

The consulting firm Oliver Wyman has said that since this new Federal minimum standard is higher than many of the policies sold today, new enrollees will have to pay about 10 percent more to meet the new government benefit standard.

This is just under the Finance Committee bill. That 10-percent increase in premiums would be much higher under any of the House bills and the Senate HELP Committee proposals.

Once again, the other side of the aisle will point to a grandfathering policy that, as the President has said, will let you keep what you have. But they fail to mention that this grandfathering policy doesn't count if you ever plan to move or, two, your insurer stops offering coverage or, three, you want to change your policy to add vision or dental coverage.

If you meet any one of those criteria, the promise that you will be able to keep what you have doesn't apply to you.

Another factor that will drive up premiums is the new age rating rules. These rules set limits on the amount premiums can vary between younger and older enrollees.

Some of the proposals being considered would tighten this variation so much it will drive up premiums by almost 70 percent for younger, healthier enrollees. So all those so-called young invincibles we need to get into the health insurance pool, all the recent college graduates, will be hit hardest by the increase in premiums because of the proposed market reforms.

Taking all these factors into account, Oliver Wyman actuaries also concluded that individuals would pay as much as 73 percent more as a result of the policies in the Finance Committee bill. Small businesses could face about a 20-percent increase, which will lead to about 2.5 million less people getting coverage through their small business.

We can certainly debate all these numbers. Some may question whether rates will increase by that much. I am sure some will question the sources of these studies, although I should note we didn't take these estimates at face value. In fact, ever since the Gang of 6 meetings, we have had some of the best independent actuaries and insurance experts analyzing this data.

But even the people who want to debate the sources do not deny the fact that health insurance premiums will go up as a result of the bills we are considering. I am beginning to understand the game. I am actually beginning to wonder if the reason no one is denying it is because this is intentional.

If these bills drive up premiums in the private market, it is going to make it a lot easier to push for a government-run insurance program or a new entitlement program.

A Washington Post story over the weekend reinforced this concern:

[Senator] Reid's original inclination was to leave the public option out of the final bill . . . but his liberal colleagues began urging him two weeks ago to reconsider, after insurance industry forecasts that premiums would rise sharply under the Finance Committee bill.

Let's hope the Democratic leadership and the White House aren't willing to push a bill that forces 200 million people to pay higher premiums unless they enroll in a new government entitlement insurance program. But that is certainly what it sounds like.

Whatever the motive may be, the facts are undeniable. Health insurance premiums will increase for every individual and small business as early as next year as a result of the pending health bills. It will hit young, healthy people the hardest. It will cause small business to stop offering health insurance premiums. We have heard it from Joint Tax, we have heard it from CBO, and we have heard it from the Office of the Actuary within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

I wish to make sure all the American people hear it.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, this health plan being forced on America under phony, tight timelines bites off too much, fails to deliver on promises, and passes the costs on to hard-working Americans.

When the 85 percent of Americans who already have health insurance hear the term "health care reform," they expect Washington to do something that lowers the cost of their health insurance premiums. That reaction should not be surprising, since the President and congressional leaders have explicitly promised that reform would lower health care costs to the average American family.

Unfortunately, the bills Congress has developed will do the exact opposite. These bills will increase health care costs.

Several recent reports have highlighted what I and some of my colleagues have been saying for months. The combination of increased taxes, expensive mandates, and new regulations in these bills will actually increase the cost of health care for most Americans. Unemployment is higher than it has been in decades. The housing market is in distress. There is an out-of-control Federal debt and deficit. More and more middle-class Americans are feeling squeezed by irresponsible decisions being made here in Washington. Unfortunately, the health care bill being put together by the majority leader behind closed doors—and not on the Web yet—is another example of irresponsible policies.

It is important for the American people to understand how these bills will actually increase their health care costs. I wish to highlight 10 specific ways these bills will increase premiums for Americans and individuals. Taken together, these provisions will increase costs, they will stifle competition, and they will take choices away from families, individual Americans, and small businesses.

Here are the top 10 ways the bills before Congress increase health care costs:

No. 1, the two committee bills rely on taxing the young to pay for the old is what the number crunchers call adjusted community rating. This means the premium charged to a healthy 22-year-old will have to increase to be much closer to the premiums charged to someone who is much older and sicker. This means young people will pay a lot more for health insurance premiums than they do today.

Over 40 percent of the uninsured are between the ages of 18 and 34, the same age group that will be hit the hardest, with the highest price increases, if this bill passes. Experts estimate that in most States, premiums for the youngest 30 percent of the population will increase by 69 percent under the tight age bands being considered in one of the Senate bills. These extreme price increases will force the young and healthy out of the market. Most young people will probably do the math and decide, let's see, I can pay the $750-a-year tax penalty rather than pay $5,000 a year more for health insurance. If they get sick later, they can enroll in health insurance later.

No. 2, premiums will increase because of the new federally mandated requirements on health plans. The bill will mandate that most health care plans have to meet new, higher specified actuarial values. If you don't know the term "actuarial value," you are not alone. Let me put this as simply as I can. Actuarial value is a technical term that describes the amount of total health care spending that is paid for by the health plan; in other words, all the benefits and enrollee cost-sharing provisions a health care plan covers. Typically, as actuarial values increase, premiums increase and the cost-sharing requirement decrease. If you are healthy, you cannot opt for lower premiums or for higher copays than your government will tell you or you will pay the penalty.

The bottom line is, experts estimate that 50 percent of the individual market policies purchased today and about 20 percent of the policies purchased by small businesses today have actuarial values that are lower than what the Democrats think you should have, which means millions of Americans will be forced to buy more expensive plans. Compliance with these benefit requirements could cause premiums for the new purchasers to increase by about 10 percent for individuals and about 3 percent for small businesses. For small businesses, 3 percent is a high rate of profit.

No. 3, premiums will increase because of the new federally mandated benefit packages. All plans must include a long list of benefits regardless of what Americans need or want. Why should a 30-year-old single man be required to pay for ovarian cancer screening? Additionally, at least every year the Secretary of Health and Human Services will be required to define and update—perhaps increase—the categories of covered treatments, items, and services.

Not surprising, what this will mean is that the list of mandated benefits will inevitably get longer and further increase costs. If these bills are enacted, every disease advocacy group, drug manufacturer, and health care provider will hire more lobbyists to see that all health plans are required to cover their unique diseases, treatments, and procedures.

That is no way to run a health care program. I believe consumers rather than lobbyists should decide the benefits package that best meets their needs. Otherwise, there will be more mandates and higher costs.

If this bill becomes law, I would not be surprised if every plan in America is required to cover massages and acupuncture. I am not saying people should not get massages or acupuncture if they want to pay for them, but I don't think all Americans should be required to enroll in a plan that covers every single benefit.

No. 4, premiums will increase because of new excise taxes on medical devices and drugs. The official scorekeepers at the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Committee on Taxation have been clear in stating that these taxes will be passed on to patients. That means consumers will see the prices of everything from power wheelchairs to pacemakers to prescription drugs, such as Prilosec, significantly increase. These price increases will also ultimately increase health insurance premiums for the millions of Americans who already have health insurance.

You don't use any of those? Remember, insurance is spreading the risks so you get to pay, too.

No. 5, premiums will increase because of the new excise tax on health insurance providers. The Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Committee on Taxation have said these taxes will be passed on to people in the form of higher premiums. This tax alone could raise premiums for a family by $487 a year.

No. 6, premiums for health insurance will increase when 14 million more Americans are enrolled in the Medicaid Program. Several studies have highlighted how Medicaid's inadequate payments to doctors and hospitals directly increase costs to everybody else by forcing these providers to make up for their losses under Medicaid by shifting those costs on to private purchasers.

The current health reform bills include the biggest expansions of the Medicaid Program since it was created in 1965, while doing nothing to address Medicaid's inadequate doctor and hospital payment rates. If someone cannot see a doctor, they do not have insurance. This will mean billions of dollars in additional costs would have to be shifted on to individuals who already have health insurance, thereby driving up their premiums. Nearly 40 percent of doctors will not see Medicaid patients because of the low reimbursement rates.

As I said, if someone does not see a doctor, they do not have health care.

No. 7, premiums will increase for so-called Cadillac plans because of the new 40-percent excise tax. Companies will respond to this new tax by shifting the costs on to individuals who are the insured or by reducing the value of the health care benefits they provide. Eventually, this tax will start hitting the Chevys and the Buicks, not just the Cadillacs.

Experts estimate that in many metropolitan areas the lowest option bronze plan—that is what we require—under the Finance Committee bill will be considered a so-called Cadillac plan as early as 2016. This does not even go into effect until 2013.

No. 8, premiums will increase because of the new fee to sell plans in the mandated exchanges. The Congressional Budget Office estimates plans would have to pay a surcharge to sell on the exchange, which would add about 3 percent to premiums.

No. 9, premiums will increase because of the new reinsurance program. This new program will cost Americans $20 billion, and those costs will be passed on to someone, most like the healthy enrollees.

No. 10, premiums will increase because of the new tax for comparative effectiveness research. Washington bureaucrats will tax patients so the government can decide which treatments are acceptable and which treatments are denied. Rationing? We have seen this story before in other countries such as England. We know this will lead to the delay and denial of care for our seniors. It is no wonder that a recent Rasmussen poll noted that 59 percent of our Nation's seniors oppose the current legislation.

Taken together, the 10 policies I just described will cumulatively increase health insurance premiums for millions of Americans who currently have health insurance. It is another squeeze on our Nation's middle class.

In my home State of Wyoming, a healthy 35-year-old man can currently buy a high-deductible policy for about $90 a month. The scorekeepers at the Congressional Budget Office estimate the silver plan under the Finance Committee bill will be $392 a month.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I ask for 5 additional minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is only 3 minutes on the Senator's time.

Mr. ENZI. I ask for 3 additional minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENZI. The scorekeepers at the Congressional Budget Office estimate the silver plan under the Finance Committee bill will increase to $392 a month. That is over a 300-percent increase. None of the folks I talked with from Wyoming can afford to pay 300 percent or more for their health insurance. In another economic time, this policy would be bad enough. In today's climate, it is irresponsible.

We all agree the health insurance market is broken and needs to be fixed. Everyone who wants health insurance should be able to get it, and they should not have to spend their hard-earned dollars to get it.

No American should be denied health insurance because they have cancer, diabetes, acne, or some other preexisting condition. No one should lose their health insurance because they forgot about an old injury when they filled out a form. No one should be denied health insurance, period.

These reforms are very important and long overdue. However, we can do better. These goals should be implemented in a way that drives down costs for the majority of Americans who already have health insurance. Congress needs to learn from the experiences of the States that have already enacted these types of reforms. The States did not pass reforms with the goal of increasing costs for a majority of their residents, but that is precisely what has happened over time.

We need to enact reforms that will actually reduce costs and make health insurance more affordable. That is what the American people want but, unfortunately, that is not what the current bills do.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to speak for up to 10 minutes in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I again rise to urge my colleagues, particularly from the other side, to join us in passing an extension of unemployment insurance, to stop blocking a program that is so necessary to every person in this country, not just those who are losing jobs but those who are fearful their jobs might be taken away.

This is a national issue, an emergency. It requires attention and action now, not weeks from now. For the last several weeks, we have been trying to get an agreement to proceed. Last week, Leader REID justifiably filed the first of what could be three cloture motions that some on the other side would insist we must proceed through until we can enact this important effort and benefit for 15.1 million unemployed Americans.

Everyone in Congress, regardless of party affiliation, is concerned about jobs. There is no unemployment crisis just in red States or in blue States or in purple States or any color States. This is a nationwide problem. It requires a nationwide solution, and one of the first steps is simply extending unemployment benefits for the people who are running out of these benefits or who may, in fact, lose their employment and need these benefits.

We have to create jobs. That is the ultimate solution to the current economic crisis. We must have a sustainable and robust recovery. We are receiving some encouraging signs. It is estimated that when the gross domestic product for this quarter is reported, it will be about 3 percent, the first time GDP since the second quarter of 2008. But positive GDP is not the answer for people who are looking for work unsuccessfully. They need the benefits of extended unemployment compensation.

This legislation is very straightforward. It ensures that out-of-work Americans can provide for their families, can stay in their homes, and can maintain a sense of dignity while they continue to search for employment in a very difficult market.

Not only is it simply the right thing to do because it demonstrates some degree of recognition of the extraordinarily difficult situation facing so many in this Nation, but unemployment compensation insurance helps to aid the economy. You don't have to be an economist to understand that getting money to people who will spend it quickly on basic necessities spurs demand and helps prevent further erosion of the economy. Yet my colleagues on the Republican side continue to ignore the urgency of the situation.

As stated, last week the distinguished majority leader had to file a cloture motion to proceed to the House-passed unemployment insurance extension. This is unprecedented.

Congress has acted eight times—in 1958, 1961, 1971, 1974, 1982, 1991, 2002, and 2008—to establish temporary programs that provided additional weeks of unemployment compensation benefits beyond regular unemployment compensation and any extended benefits.

Let's take a moment to look back at the recent unemployment insurance extensions under both Democratic and Republican administrations.

President George Herbert Walker Bush signed an unemployment insurance bill into law that passed the Senate with near unanimous support. Not once, but twice—in November 1991 and February 1992, when the unemployment rate was 7 percent and 7.4 percent, respectively. And we are at a much more serious moment in our economic history today than those years ago.

In July 1992, President Clinton signed an unemployment insurance bill into law that passed with unanimous support in the Senate. The unemployment rate was 7.7 percent.

In March and November 1993, President Clinton signed two more bills into law that passed with overwhelming bipartisan support. The unemployment rate was 7 percent and 6.6 percent, respectively.

In the 1980s, President Reagan signed an unemployment insurance bill into law that unanimously passed a majority Republican Senate. The unemployment rate was 8.8 percent. Months earlier, it was double digits.

These past votes, under Republican and Democratic Presidents and majorities of both parties in the Senate, demonstrate the nonpartisan nature of extending unemployment insurance when the economy is weak and unemployment is high. It is that simple.

In fact, further reinforcing this notion is that the national unemployment rate has now risen to 9.8 percent and may not stabilize until next summer—much higher than the preceding incidents in which, on a bipartisan basis, under Republican and Democratic Presidents, we moved expeditiously to extend unemployment benefits.

Nearly 2 million Americans will exhaust their benefits by the end of the year, but as I speak on the Senate floor, hundreds of thousands of Americans have already exhausted their benefits.

Mr. President, 3,800 Rhode Islanders will benefit immediately from a Federal extension, a majority of whom have already exhausted their benefits going back, in some cases, several months. Hundreds more in my State exhaust their benefits each passing week.

So why are the Republicans sidetracking this legislation? Let's take a look at the list of amendments.

We all, as Senators, have a right to propose amendments, but when they are proposed simply to delay and not to constructively advance an issue, we have to look very skeptically at the amendments. There is an amendment concerning ACORN on which we have already voted. This seems to be just an attempt to delay not an attempt to responsibly legislate.

It is my understanding that Majority Leader REID has made many offers to the other side of the aisle so that the Senate can proceed to the immediate consideration of this critical legislation. It is disappointing these offers have been rejected.

This bill is about stabilizing our economy. It is about helping Americans who, through no fault of their own, cannot find work. It is about this body, the Senate, taking action on behalf of people.

I urge immediate consideration of this extension. I hope we can pass it tonight rather than be forced to another series of pointless and political cloture motions.

I want to briefly mention another proposal related to this issue that is important to consider which would help in this terrible crisis of unemployment.

I have introduced the Keep Americans Working Act to strengthen and expand work share programs. These are programs in which 16 States, at the moment, pay a portion of unemployment benefits if the employer keeps the person on the payroll but reduces their hours to reduce costs and continues to pay their benefits—their pension and health care.

So far this year, approximately 137,000 layoffs have been averted in States that have this program. We have a breakdown of the 16 States. In 2008, 58,000 Americans were taking advantage of the work share program. They would work for 3 days a week, for example, and they would be off 2 days. They would receive unemployment compensation pro rata for those 2 days. The employer would keep benefits flowing, in terms of health care. They would have valuable workers not sent away from the firm but still engaged in productive activities.

I visited a firm in Rhode Island that has this program. It is wildly popular with not only the workers but also with the managers. In Rhode Island, we have jumped from 2,800 last year to 5,400 this year, and it is rising.

When I was at this plant, one of the workers said: This is the only way I can keep paying for my mortgage; this is the only way I can keep paying for the food we put on the table for our children. And the plant manager said: This is the only way I can keep a valuable worker so I can keep producing. I think it is a program that deserves close attention. This program in Rhode Island has helped many people avoid being completely laid off, and it has also helped the drain on the unemployment compensation fund because paying a pro rata share is a much better deal for the fund than paying the full benefits when someone is laid off completely.

There are 16 States, as indicated here. They rank from Arizona, California, Connecticut, Florida, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, Texas, Vermont, and Washington. Again, this program is not a one-State, one-region, one-area program. This is a national program which I hope can be emulated by the other States. It is a win-win, and I hope we can move forward and take up this legislation as a complement to what we are proposing in the extension of unemployment benefits.

The real key, though, ultimately is to get the jobs flowing again, and that is something we have to work on. That is something on which we have made some progress but not sufficient progress. We can't rest until there is confidence again that throughout this land people have a job, they feel confident they can keep it, they can provide for their families, and they can contribute to this great Nation.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois.

ADDRESSING AMERICA'S PRIORITIES

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I wish to commend my colleague from Rhode Island for his statement on the unemployment situation facing our country and also join in his remarks with some concern and dismay over the opposition of the Republican Senators to extending unemployment benefits.

Tens of thousands of people in my home State of Illinois and all across the United States have been unemployed for long periods of time and have now reached the end of their eligibility for unemployment compensation. They are still unemployed. They are still trying to keep their families together, pay the rent, put food on the table, pay for some medical bills, and they need unemployment compensation for that to continue. So we have proposed extending unemployment compensation benefits—the safety net for America—while they look for jobs and while this economy starts ever so slowly to turn around.

The opposition comes from the Republican side of the aisle. They oppose extending unemployment compensation benefits. You think: How could they rationalize that in an economy where there are six unemployed people for every available job? Their answer is: We have other, more important things we want to debate on the floor of the Senate.

Well, let's take a look at what those are. First, they want to return to the debate over an organization known as ACORN. ACORN is an organization that has not been in business in Illinois for 8 or 9 years, so I don't know any of the leaders in that organization personally. I can't say that I can recall working with them on any major issues. But you remember the videos a few weeks ago, those alarming videos of some ACORN employees who were apparently conspiring with people on how to break the law. Those employees have been fired, as they should have been. They should be investigated, and if they are guilty of criminal activity, they should be prosecuted. That is clear. But that is not enough for those who listen to the rightwing cable and TV shows. There has to be more.

Well, I have called for a full investigation of ACORN. I want the Government Accountability Office to find what Federal monies have been spent with that organization and make sure it was spent honestly and spent well. An investigation is appropriate. It is known as due process. But that is not enough for some on the Republican side of the aisle.

One Senator from Louisiana wants to go further. He wants to offer another amendment to flog ACORN, and he is holding up unemployment benefits in Louisiana and Illinois and across the Nation until he gets his amendment, until he can make his speech, until he can beat on ACORN again. Well, that may be his idea of serving the public need. It is not mine. Let's save that debate for another day, if we have to have it at all. Let's not make thousands of people in Louisiana and Illinois—currently unemployed, desperate to keep their families together and a roof over the heads of their children—suffer because a Senator here wants to debate whether we can think of some new way to punish ACORN. You know, for most people, as President Obama said the other day in an interview, there are many more important things in life than this organization and the sorry conduct of a few employees. But for this Senator, it is enough to hold up unemployment compensation for literally hundreds of thousands of American people. That is the reality.

In addition, there is a program called E-Verify. E-Verify is a way to try to establish that a person applying for a job is actually a citizen. They want to use computers, accessed through telephones and computers, to determine whether the identity and the Social Security number given to the employer are, in fact, valid or illegal. It has been a tough program to get up and running. In fact, it is loaded with enough uncertainty and error that some question whether we should pursue it until we have worked out the details. Innocent people were caught up in the E-Verify early days and identified as not being legal when in fact they were. So what we have done is to extend this program for 3 years while we work out obvious problems with it.

One Senator on the other side of the aisle said it is not enough. I am going to hold up unemployment benefits, he says, until this program is extended permanently. Well, that is a worthy debate and topic, but is it worthy enough to deny unemployment compensation benefits to thousands of people out of work while we debate whether E-Verify should be extended 3 years or permanently? Doesn't seem to rise to the same level of importance, in my estimation.

That is what is holding up unemployment benefits for hundreds of thousands of people—amendments like that from the Republican side of the aisle which, to my way of thinking, don't really measure up to the gravity of the issue we are considering.

I wish those Senators from the States offering those amendments would go back home and meet some of these unemployed people, maybe sit down and buy them a cup of coffee, talk with them about what their lives have been like being out of work for 2 or 3 years, what it means to have no health insurance because you lost your job, folks who have exhausted their life savings and now don't know which way to turn. I get e-mails and letters every day from them, people across my State. And these are not folks who have drifted in and out of work; many of them have worked uninterrupted for 25 or 30 years and now find themselves out in the street through no fault of their own. They are trying their darndest to find a job, to improve their skills so they are more marketable, and we should give them a helping hand.

Incidentally, the money that pays the unemployment compensation benefits comes from a fund to which they contributed. While we work, we put a little money away in a fund on the possibility that someday we will be out of work, and if it ever happens, then we are given at least enough money to get by while we look for a job, from that same fund. It is a basic insurance policy. These folks who are caught up in a tough recession need an extension of their benefits for some additional weeks—20 weeks is what our bill provides.

So for those who argue that this is some form of welfare, I would like to correct them. These are benefits paid out of funds paid in by workers across America and employers, and it is a fund that needs to be exercised right now, to be used right now for their benefit.

Mr. President, I am also concerned about some of the debate I have heard on the floor this morning from the other side when it comes to health care reform. I would like to stand here and compare the Democratic proposal for health care reform and the Republican proposal for health care reform. Now, that would be a good debate. But unfortunately I can't because there is no Republican proposal for health care reform.

One of the elements of our Democratic approach in the Senate will be something called opt-out. To put it in a nutshell, we are trying to create a not-for-profit health insurance company to compete with private health insurance companies so there will be actual competition—to keep them honest—and we try to bring costs down. We know private health insurance companies are exempt from antitrust laws. They can fix prices, they can allocate markets, they can jam through increases in premiums, and there is not much you can do about it since there is no competition. So a public option, a not-for-profit health insurance company, would be competitive.

There are some who argue against that and say that goes too far. Even though it is not government-run health insurance like single payer—it is a not-for-profit option—they say it goes too far. So the Democratic approach to health care reform says that individual States can decide whether they want to have a public option available to the people who live there. If the State of Iowa, whose Senator came to the floor this morning, decides they don't like a public option, they can opt out of the public option. It is their choice. Each State can make that choice. That is what opt-out is all about.

Opt-out is also what the Republicans' strategy on health care is all about. They have opted out of this debate. Take an example: The Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee considered over 500 amendments to health care reform. Among the amendments adopted were 150 Republican amendments, accepted in the committee. Some were technical, some were substantive, and in good faith they were debated and agreed to. Once 150 amendments were added to the health care reform bill in the HELP Committee. The vote was called, and when it was called, not a single Republican Senator would vote in favor of the bill they had just spent weeks amending.

It turns out there is only one Senator—Senator OLYMPIA SNOWE of Maine—who joined in the Finance Committee to report out a bill. She is the only Republican Member of Congress, House or Senate, who has actually voted for health care reform. All of the other Senators who have come to the floor criticizing what we are putting forward as our draft proposal on health care reform have not voted for it and have not produced an alternative.

The need is still there, and the need is very serious. Let me give an example, if I can, about the need in terms of a real-life story back in my State of Illinois.

There is a young man named Marcus Evans. Marcus reached a point in life where he couldn't walk upstairs without losing his breath, and he knew something wasn't right. He is 17 years old, and he began suffering from shortness of breath, which kept him out of pickup basketball games but even made it difficult for him to walk around his house. He went from doctor to doctor trying to figure out the problem, but he was uninsured—one of 47 million Americans uninsured.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's 10 minutes has expired.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask unanimous consent for an additional 5 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. So Marcus Evans, being uninsured, couldn't find a doctor to diagnosis his problem.

At the time, Marcus's mom was a working mother of two. She worked as a part-time dental assistant. She didn't receive health insurance through her job and her family did not qualify for Medicaid, which is health insurance for poor people.

For 3 years, Marcus tried to get medical care without success. He was repeatedly told that more tests couldn't be done. He was told they were just too expensive, and he was basically told nothing was wrong. In fact, something was very wrong. Marcus Evans was suffering from t-cell lymphoma, a form of cancer that affects the lymph nodes. Do you know how he received the diagnosis? After Marcus's aunt called 911 because her nephew literally couldn't breathe, he was rushed to an emergency room where he received, finally, an MRI—his first MRI after years of visits to doctors with no diagnosis. That test revealed a significant malignant tumor pressing on his esophagus, which explained the symptoms he had been complaining about for more than 3 years.

Marcus said:

I nearly died before I got the proper health care. It took a lot for them to actually do the test.

Well, that is the situation that is familiar to millions of Americans—people who either don't have insurance or don't have much insurance. They are unable to afford health care premiums for preventive care out-of-pocket, and it takes a severe complication and a trip to an emergency room before they receive any appropriate medical care. They earn too much money for public aid and too little money to afford private health insurance.

For Marcus, a disease that could have been caught and treated when he was a high school student went undiagnosed for years as he tried and failed to get quality treatment. Instead of going away to college after graduating from high school, Marcus found himself stuck at home too sick and too scared to leave home.

Today, after chemotherapy and successful surgery, Marcus is in remission and working to put his young life together. His struggles aren't over. Most of his friends have debts from student loans; Marcus owes more than $100,000 in medical bills at the age of 21—$100,000—even after the hospital forgave him $40,000 for his hospital stay.

Still, he is trying to move forward. He is enrolled as a part-time student at Chicago State. He has a little job with the city, a job that provides him at least some health insurance. It could have made a difference in his life many years ago.

Here is what he said:

I see the difference when you have insurance and when you don't. It's like night and day. When I didn't have insurance, they just pushed me aside.

Marcus doesn't blame the doctors who told him he was suffering from nothing more serious than asthma. He said he understands doctors were faced with an impossible choice caused by our Nation's dysfunctional health care system.

He said:

Doctors shouldn't have to worry about whether a patient has insurance. No decision should have to be made except let's take care of this person.

It is simple logic, common sense. That is what health care reform is all about, and it poses very fundamental questions for us in this country: Who are we? What do we stand for? Are we going to change the current system?

There are those fighting change in the system, and those leading the fight are health insurance companies. They are making plenty of money under the current system even though causes such as Marcus Evans' end up being untreated, and young men end up suffering as a result of it.

That is why this health care debate is so important. I hope at some point, a couple, maybe even three Republican Senators would step up and say: We want to be part of this historic debate. We don't want to stand on the sidelines and complain about the plays that are being called. We want to be into the actual field of battle to help craft a bipartisan bill.

So far they have turned us down every step of the way except for one Senator, Ms. SNOWE of Maine. I hope that can change, and I hope those who come to the floor every day and complain about health care reform will take 1 day to propose their suggestions. What do they want to do? If they want to stick with the current system, if they do not want to change health care as we know it today, have the courage to stand up and say just that. But, unfortunately, they have said over and over again: We want to criticize. We want to opt out. We don't want to be part of this debate.

That doesn't solve the problems our Nation faces.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, first let me compliment my colleague from Illinois. He is right that the health care system in this country is in need of repair or reform. He is right also about the people who are out there believing they are insured when in fact they are one serious illness away from bankruptcy.

Ten years ago in Fargo, ND, I met a woman who had $600,000 in the bank. She said she had a job, she had health insurance, and she had equity in a home. Ten years later it was gone. She has a very serious illness. She is a quadriplegic and needs a substantial amount of care, and all those assets are gone. She had insurance and all those assets are gone because her insurance had a cap.

A lot of people don't know that. They say: I have health insurance. Their insurance often has a cap on how much the insurance company will pay in the aggregate, which means they are just one serious illness away from bankruptcy. That is just one among others of the reasons there needs to be some change with respect to the health care issue.

I think this will be difficult. I commend the majority leader for trying to put a bill together. It will come to the floor of the Senate. We will have an opportunity to review it and offer amendments, which is the way it should be. My hope is at the end of the day we will be able to advance the issue of health care and improve the health care system in this country.

FEDERAL RESERVE POLICY

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I wanted to mention very briefly—and I will speak about this a bit more later—the daily news about the payment of very large bonuses by some of the largest financial firms that received TARP funds or other funds from the Federal Government to try to keep them afloat during difficult times last year. The notices of the bonuses and profits of those firms at this point are very troubling to me and to a lot of other people.

I want to mention that a group of us a while back wrote to the Federal Reserve Board asking the Federal Reserve Board to release information about how much money went out the back door of the Federal Reserve Board when, for the first time in history, they allowed investment banks to come to the loan window of the Federal Reserve Board and get direct loans. For the first time in history, last year, they did that.

Now the question is, Who got money from the Fed's direct window? Under what conditions did they get that money? How much money did they get? A lot of us have asked the Federal Reserve Board to release that information.

Is that information important? It sure is, to me. Are the companies that are now proposing to pay the very large bonuses the same companies that got money out of the direct loan window of the Fed for the first time in history? Probably. What conditions were attached to that money? What were the rates, if any? We would like to know the specifics.

On September 16, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board wrote back to us saying that releasing these names would hinder the Fed's assistance efforts.

That is just a specious argument. The American people's money is put at risk. The American people have the right to know how much money went out that direct lending window at the Fed. We have a right to know—Members of Congress, the American people have a right to know. The Federal Reserve Board is saying we don't have a right to know and they don't intend to tell us.

I am going to talk about this a bit more later. There was a related FOIA case in which a judge found the Federal Reserve had "improperly withheld agency records." The judge called the Fed's argument that borrowers would be hurt if their names were released—the judge says "that was conjectural, without evidence of imminent harm."

Despite the fact that the judge has determined that, we still don't have a release of this information. In a news article of a congressional hearing, it said a Federal official said the Fed was "giving serious consideration" to releasing the names of firms that received assistance.

In the same article they quoted Fed General Counsel Scott Alvarez as saying at the hearing:

We would be happy to work with you to establish procedures for disclosure.

A few days following that a Bloomberg news article said:

The Fed had decided to appeal the ruling that had ordered the Fed to release the information.

The question is, Why does the Fed believe we and the American people do not have a right to know? It makes no sense to me. I am going to speak about this at greater length later, but, clearly, as big bonuses are going out the back door, don't we have a right to know how much money went in the front door from the Federal Reserve to these institutions? How much, at what rate, and so on? I am going to continue to ask these questions.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. GILLIBRAND). Morning business has expired.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF IRENE CORNELIA BERGER TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the following nomination, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Irene Cornelia Berger, of West Virginia, to be United States District Judge for the Southern District of West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Madam President, I rise to speak on precisely the issue the clerk reported. That is something which is extremely important to me and also extremely important to the people of West Virginia, a historic decision we are going to make.

Today the Senate will consider the nomination of Judge Irene Berger to serve on the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of West Virginia. I have had the pleasure of knowing Judge Berger for many years and having a very high regard for her and liking her very much for many years. I continue to be amazed by her tremendous intellect, her calmness—a very marvelous calmness which speaks of integrity and knowledge and fearlessness in the face of whatever may come up—and, of course, her complete dedication to public service, which I will talk about.

She is a phenomenal person and a true professional, which is why I am so proud to join with Senator BYRD in recommending her to the President for this judgeship. Without any doubt, Judge Berger is one of the most qualified people to serve on the Federal bench. She truly is unmatched—in her professionalism and in her experience and in her demeanor—for this position. She has the temperament that should be expected of any judicial nominee, which is not just calmness and the right demeanor, but she embraces the courtroom, masters the courtroom. She is in charge of the courtroom. It is a wonderful thing.

She is very smart, obviously. She is very fair. She is dispassionate, she is rational, she reaches her decisions in a very calm and deliberative way, showing respect and equal treatment to all claimants before her in the courtroom.

I think it is perhaps, and I would judge, her upbringing that helped Judge Berger to be the outstanding person and judge that she is today. She grew up in a very large family in one of the four poorest counties in the United States of America. She worked hard, got a good education, and ultimately earned her law degree from the West Virginia University College of Law.

Rather than seeking—which would make some sense in view of what she had been through—a high-paying job in a corporate law firm, which would have been hers just for the asking, so to speak, she decided to do what is natural to her, which is to give back to her community and to her State by devoting her entire 30-year legal career to serving her fellow West Virginians. In so doing, she has gained profound experience at nearly every level of our judicial system.

She began her career as a legal aid attorney, protecting the rights of our State's most vulnerable citizens, and then kept our communities safe by serving for 12 years as a prosecuting attorney in Kanawha County, WV, which is the county in which I live. She would go on to serve briefly as an assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of West Virginia before being appointed to fill a vacancy as a circuit judge for the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit of West Virginia, a position she held for 15 years.

As an attorney and a jurist, Judge Berger's hard work and determination have earned her the unqualified respect of all of her peers. Federal judges—everybody has written in saying this is the best person.

After her initial appointment to the circuit court, the voters of Kanawha County, WV—and that was part of why that position in the court is different from the one she is now hopefully going to be voted into—voted three times to keep her in that office because of her reputation as an honest, thoughtful, and skilled jurist.

I think we all agree the Federal judicial system is fundamental to our democracy's continued vitality, and there is absolutely no one I trust more than Judge Berger to faithfully and skillfully serve in this enormously important role.

Those are words, of course, but they are words, in my case, that come from deep within me. The American people deserve to know when they enter the courtroom that their judge is committed to justice and to equality and will treat them fairly, and that is exactly the type of judge Irene Berger is and will continue to be if we make that possible.

She made that clear in her confirmation hearing by saying:

I want to say very strongly that I will ensure that all parties are treated fairly and equally. They will be heard equally, be they rich or be they poor.

Judge Berger has also remained an integral part of our community and our State. With her uncommon wisdom and insight she assumed leadership positions, obviously, within the court system and has been called to serve and agreed to serve on a number of boards of nonprofit organizations and educational institutions.

She's writ large in life in West Virginia, I just have to say that. Her honors and awards are many. I almost hesitate to mention them because that is what everybody does, but it should be said: West Virginia College of Law, Outstanding Woman of Law Award; YWCA Woman of Achievement; the American Bar Association Foundation Fellowship; West Virginia University's Outstanding Alumna; and the NAACP Image Award for Leadership, to name just a few.

I am perhaps most impressed by Judge Berger's courage and determination and her refusal to back down from any worthwhile challenge. She was one of the first students to integrate her local elementary school in McDowell County. That was not easy. McDowell County is the most southern county in West Virginia and, in fact, most of it is south of Richmond, VA.

She is the first in her family to attend college. That can only be admirable. That can only talk about sacrifice and determination in a close family unit, family values. She was the first African-American woman to serve as a circuit court judge in West Virginia.

If confirmed today, she would, I proudly say, become the first African-American Federal judge in the history of West Virginia. Granted, the history of West Virginians is not as long as the history of New York. But it goes back to 1863, I would say to the Presiding Officer, and we are very proud of that.

I would like to close by personally thanking Judge Berger and her family. Her dedication to her country and State means so much to me. I wish to see her confirmed. I am not a lawyer, but I have been in West Virginia a long time. I started as a VISTA volunteer. I know a good person when I see one.

Her willingness to assume this important role speaks volumes about her character as a person and as a judge. I would like to thank President Obama for his leadership in nominating Judge Berger for this position. He could not have selected a more qualified person. I cannot wait for them to meet.

Finally, I would also like to thank Majority Leader REID, Minority Leader MCCONNELL, Chairman LEAHY, Ranking Member SESSIONS, and the whole Judiciary Committee for allowing us to move forward on this critical nomination by, I will have to say, a unanimous vote for forwarding her nomination.

We can rest assured Judge Berger will serve with enormous honor and distinction, as her predecessor, the Honorable David A. Faber, served before her.

I am proud and all West Virginians deserve to be proud and are proud, even if they have no idea what is going on right now, as one of our own premier legal minds and unwavering leaders continues to serve our Nation and the cause of justice.

I yield the floor, and I ask unanimous consent that all quorum calls during the debate on the Berger nomination be equally charged to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARDIN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, I know time has been reserved for Members to debate the confirmation of a district court judge in West Virginia. I certainly support that confirmation. It is interesting that there are not too many Senators coming to talk about this particular judge, even though there was a request that we reserve time on the floor in order to debate the nomination.

I raise this because there are four nominees ready for confirmation to the courts of appeal and six district court judges who are ready for confirmation, having been moved through the committee, who, for some reason, Republicans are now not allowing us to bring to the floor for confirmation. This is a deliberate effort to try to slow pace of the confirmation process of Federal judges appointed by President Obama.

I think this is wrong, and people should understand it. In my own circumstance in Maryland, we have a judge who has been approved by the committee for the circuit court of appeals, Judge Andre Davis. A hearing took place in April of this year. The Judiciary Committee reported out his confirmation by an affirmative vote of 16 to 3. This is clearly a nonpartisan recommendation. Judge Davis is highly respected by members of the bar in Maryland. He has 22 years' experience as a district court judge. He has handled all types of cases. He has been recommended as being fair and even-handed and is ideally suited to serve on the appellate court. He will add diversity to the court, being the third African American, when he is confirmed, and he will be confirmed. There have been anonymous holds put on appellate court judges on a rotating basis and, in some cases, on district court judges, in an effort to slow down the process.

When we get a chance to vote on his confirmation, whether it requires a cloture vote or not, he will be overwhelmingly approved, as he should be. He is well qualified to serve on the appellate court.

I am somewhat perplexed. Floor time is valuable. Time has been set aside now to talk about the confirmation of a West Virginia district court judge. Yet I don't see too many Members rushing down to speak. Why haven't we brought up the other six district court judges ready for action? Why haven't we brought up the four appellate judges, if there is a desire to debate, so we have time now. Let's debate the issue. If there is a need for a vote, let's determine how much time is necessary and then let's get a vote. If there is a sincere effort to filibuster, which I find regrettable, then notify the leadership. Let's schedule a cloture vote on these nominations.

The bottom line is, this is an abuse of the rights of an individual Member of the Senate, and certainly it is wrong for us to hold up the confirmation of judges who are prepared to take on this public responsibility. There is a bill pending that would create new judges. Why don't we fill the current vacancies? Why don't we get these appointments to the floor and vote on their confirmations?

I know in Maryland there is strong support for Judge Davis's confirmation. I hope we can work out arrangements and bring these nominations forward and carry out our responsibilities to vote up or down those who are nominated to serve on the Federal bench.

I know there have been accusations made back and forth. I opposed several of President Bush's nominees to the court. In each case, I made it clear I was prepared to vote at any time. I never delayed consideration of those appointments, including those to the appellate court. They were brought forward, and we voted them up or down. All I am saying to my Republican friends is let's bring these nominations to the floor of the Senate; let's get a chance to vote on these nominations; let's not schedule time to talk about a district court judge and that person's confirmation, when in reality there has been very little interest shown in coming forward.

I see the distinguished ranking member of the Judiciary Committee. He has been fair and has tried to work this out. I don't know what the issue is on his side on an individual Member objecting to other judges coming forward. I hope we will have a chance to bring forward other nominations so we may move forward with one of the principal responsibilities of a Senator, to act in the confirmation of Federal judges, to give advice and consent to the President.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I rise to speak on President Obama's nominee to the district court for the Southern District of West Virginia, Judge Irene Cornelia Berger. The historic significance of her nomination should not be lost on anyone. If confirmed, she will be the first African American to serve on the Federal bench in the State of West Virginia. She has had a distinguished career. She has been a State judge for the last 15 years. Before that, she was a State prosecutor for 12 years and a lawyer for the Legal Aid Society. I enjoyed the dialogue we had during her confirmation hearing and was especially pleased to see her responses to the questions for the record. She indicated in those answers outright that she did not agree with the empathy standard President Obama has used, saying:

A judge should apply the law to the facts of a case without being influenced by sympathy or empathy.

She further stated that it is never proper for a judge to indulge his or her own sense of empathy in deciding what the law means. I wholeheartedly agree and am pleased to be able to support her nomination. The President's nominations deserve deference, although we do have a constitutional responsibility to examine the nominees, to ask the tough questions, to support them when we can and to oppose them when that is the appropriate action.

I commend Chairman LEAHY on the pace of his hearings. Last week, the committee held its 16th judicial nominations hearing. But I wish to set the record straight about a few things. At this point in his Presidency, President Bush had nominated 60 judges, but only 22 nominees had hearings. In contrast, President Obama has nominated only 23 judges, including a Supreme Court nominee, which took a great deal of our time, as it rightly should. Yet 16 of his nominees have received hearings.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is doing its job. We are processing nominees at a reasonable pace, in a fair and bipartisan manner. There are those who say that Republicans are slow-walking nominees. I suggest that is a preemptive accusation to complain about something they think might happen. It is not happening, in my view. The raw numbers show that. Those same individuals also claim that the vacancy rate on the Federal courts is higher now and, therefore, we need to confirm more judges than we did during President Bush's first 2 years in office. However, the need to fill vacancies does not undercut the responsibility to properly vet those lifetime appointments.

Furthermore, we can only process the nominees we have before us. There are currently 22 circuit court vacancies but only 9 nominees before the Senate. There are 75 district court vacancies and only 10 nominees before the Senate. This chart shows that. These are the vacancies in blue and the red represents the circuit court nominees. These are the only nominations we have received so far. To date, President Obama has announced a total of only 23 nominees, one of which was a Supreme Court nominee. By this time, the Bush administration had sent the Senate 60 nominees, almost three times as many.

Over the past few weeks, I have heard the chairman of our committee come to the floor and state that the pace of confirmations is not acceptable. I wish to point out a few numbers to those who now say Democrats confirmed a significant number of President Bush's nominees. As I told the chairman, I hate to get into this. We have been doing this for a number of years, but I am not going to remain silent while the record is distorted. We need to talk about perspective, and if we are going to continue to have tit-for-tat, I will be down here to explain the other side of the question.

President Bush had fewer nominees confirmed than any two-term President in modern history. President Clinton had 377 confirmed; President Bush only got 326. President Clinton was also able to confirm two Supreme Court nominees. Under the Bush administration, the Democrats held up qualified nominees for years in some cases, denying an up-or-down vote even though a majority of the Senators were ready and willing to confirm.

There are those who say the Republicans are filibustering nominees, and to them, I say that is not correct. A hold is not a filibuster. When a Member of this body has concerns about a nominee, they have a right to put a hold on that nominee. The majority leader has the prerogative to file cloture on that nomination. There were nominees that I have strongly opposed and have voted against, but I voted for cloture when the majority leader sought to bring up the nomination so the nominee would get an up or down vote. That is the way you overcome a hold.

Madam President, how much time do we have remaining?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. SESSIONS. I think most of us in this body who were here remember that soon after President Bush was elected in 2000, a group of well-known liberal professors—Laurence Tribe, Marsha Greenberger, and Cass Sunstein—he is the one who has recently been appointed by President Obama to one of his administration posts who believes animals should have lawyers appointed for them—met with the Democratic leadership. The New York Times reported at that time that they proposed changing the ground rules of the confirmation process. They proposed that Senators consider a nominee's ideology. For the first time in the history of the country, they proposed that the burden be shifted to the nominee to somehow prove they were worthy of the appointment instead of having the Senate respect the presumptive power of the President to make the nomination and then object if there was a disagreement. This was a major change in the history of the Senate. It was done by the Democrats when we had a Republican President.

It was clear to me then that as a result of that meeting, a majority of the Democratic Members of the Senate agreed. After the Democrats took control of the Senate a few months later when Senator Jeffords changed parties, the Senate confirmed only 6 of President Bush's 25 circuit court nominees. Five nominees had bipartisan support, and two were prior Clinton nominees. President Bush renominated two prior Clinton nominees. They confirmed them, but only a few others were confirmed. Yet the majority of President Bush's first nominees nominated on May 9, 2001, waited years for confirmation.

Priscilla Owen was nominated to the Fifth Circuit, a fabulous supreme court justice in Texas. It took 4 years for her to be confirmed. She was on the short list for the Supreme Court. She is a brilliant justice.

Now-Chief Justice John Roberts was nominated at that time for the DC Circuit—one of the most brilliant Justices I have ever seen come before the Senate. It took two years for him to be confirmed, and he had to go through two hearings.

Jeffrey Sutton, another brilliant nominee to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, was confirmed but only after 2 years in 2003.

Deborah Cook was nominated for the Sixth Circuit—it took 2 years to get her nomination confirmed.

Dennis Shedd, nominated to the Fourth Circuit—it was a year and a half before he was confirmed.

Michael McConnell, a brilliant lawyer—and so is Dennis Shedd, but McConnell is a real intellectual—for the Tenth Circuit, it took a year and a half before he was confirmed.

Terrence Boyle waited almost 8 years, until his nomination lapsed at the end of President Bush's term. He never got a vote.

Perhaps the most disturbing story was that of Miguel Estrada, who was a brilliant, outstanding, well-qualified consensus nominee. He was nominated to the DC Circuit on May 9, 2001. He waited 16 months just to get a hearing—16 months—only to be confronted with unreasonable requests for more information. After almost 2½ years in limbo and a protracted 6-month long filibuster battle, we brought his name up a number of times, and he was blocked by filibuster. Mr. Estrada withdrew his name from further consideration, and we remain baffled as to why such a fine nominee was treated so poorly. His character was attacked and his nomination was ultimately blocked for no reason other than the fact that some said he was so capable he would have been on the short list for the U.S. Supreme Court.

I don't say all of this to say there is going to be payback. I do not believe in that. It is time for us to move forward with judicial nominees in the right way. I am saying this to set the record straight because I will not stand silent and have what is happening today be compared with the incredibly obstructive actions the Democrats took in early 2000.

That said, this Senate, when I think of many of its Members, understands that it would be wrong for us to be a rubberstamp for every nominee. We have a constitutional duty to vet nominees. As a minority party, we have a duty to ask the important questions that may not be asked at other points in the process.

During his campaign, President Obama pledged he would strive for a bipartisan administration, but the President has failed to put action behind those words in a number of instances. He has refused to renominate some of the noncontroversial consensus circuit court nominees who were not confirmed by the Senate in the last Congress, as President Bush did when he took office. For example, Glen Conrad had the support of his Democrat home State Senator. Yet he was never given a hearing before the end of the Bush administration. Peter Keisler had broad bipartisan support from lawyers and colleagues throughout the country, a brilliant and capable nominee, but never got a vote. He was denied a vote by the Democratic leadership. In addition, Mr. Keisler was praised in the Justice Department Inspector General's report, one that dealt with the danger of politicizing the Department of Justice. The IG examined it and praised Mr. Keisler because he spoke and acted in opposition to those who appeared to have allowed political considerations to play a role in hiring decisions. He focused on the candidate's qualifications. But rather than being rewarded for his courage, he fell victim to the very partisan wrangling he stood against.

Now, I think President Obama chose to set an aggressive tone by nominating Judge David Hamilton, a former board member and vice president for litigation of the Indiana chapter of the ACLU, as his first circuit court nominee. Judge Hamilton's nomination is clearly controversial. It was only exacerbated by the rushed hearing schedule on his nomination. Indeed, I think it is fair to say he is outside the mainstream of even President Obama's nominees. Instead of embracing the constitutional standard of jurisprudence, Judge Hamilton has embraced this empathy standard, this feeling standard. Whatever that is, it is not law. It is not a legal standard. He has said that he believes a judge will "reach different decisions from time to time . . . taking into account what happened and its effect on both parties, what are the practical consequences."

Judge Hamilton also appears to have embraced the idea of a living Constitution. In 2003, he indicated in a speech that a judge's role included writing footnotes to the Constitution. I am not aware that a judge has the power to write footnotes to the Constitution, which has been ratified by we the people of the United States of America.

When Senator HATCH questioned him about these comments in a followup question, he retreated somewhat but then gave a disturbing answer in the next question about judges amending the Constitution or creating new rights through case law.

This judicial philosophy has clearly impacted his rulings. He issued a number of controversial rulings during his time as a district court judge and has been reversed in some very significant cases. So that is why he is having difficulty on the floor of the Senate and has not moved forward.

Yet the Democrats will not call up another nominee, Judge Beverly Baldwin Martin for the Eleventh Circuit, on whom everybody is prepared to vote.

Andre Davis, whom we have heard about before, has been nominated to the Fourth Circuit. We have had a number of battles over the failure to fill some of the vacancies on that court. President Bush submitted a number of nominations and couldn't get them up for a vote. For example, Judge Robert Conrad, Judge Glen Conrad, Steve Matthews, and Mr. Rod Rosenstein. Mr. Rosenstein was nominated to a seat designated as a judicial emergency on November 15, 2007—the very seat for which Mr. Davis has now been nominated—and he was held up. These vacancies were basically maintained by our Democratic Senators from Maryland for 9 years. The ABA rated Mr. Rosenstein “unanimous well qualified.” He was unanimously confirmed as U.S. attorney for the District of Maryland. He held several positions in the Department of Justice under both Democrat and Republican administrations. But he waited 414 days for a hearing that never came. His nomination was returned in January of this year.

In 2008, a Washington Post editorial stated that:

Blocking Mr. Rosenstein's confirmation hearing . . . would elevate ideology and ego above substance and merit and would unfairly penalize a man who people on both sides of this question agree is well qualified for a judgeship.

So after a few weeks went by, the Democrats were already blaming the Republicans, saying they are not moving fast enough on Mr. Davis, who has some serious problems in his background, and I just have to say I am concerned about it. He has been reversed quite a number of times. But he certainly has had his hearing. He had a hearing 27 days after his nomination, and he was voted out of committee on a split vote just 36 days later.

There is no question that Mr. Davis is a good man, but his record is a cause for some concern. He has been reversed by the Fourth Circuit numerous times in cases where he misapplied the law, including six criminal cases where he threw out evidence that could have been used to help convict a criminal. He was reversed at least six times in cases that he had wrongly dismissed because there remained unresolved issues between the parties. He dismissed the case in its entirety and the parties had to appeal. Six times he was reversed at great expense and delay. If he didn't accurately assess the facts or apply the law in these more simple cases at the Federal trial court level—some of them are not so complicated; others are—is he qualified now to be on the Fourth Circuit? So these are the concerns we have.

Mr. Chen, a U.S. magistrate, was recently nominated for the Northern District of California. He stated that he finds “most rewarding . . . contributing to the development of the law via published opinion, especially if it comports with my view of justice.” That is pretty nice if you can develop the law—in other words, make law and make sure it comports with your view of the law. A judge is supposed to be a neutral umpire. They are not supposed to use their moment on the bench to rewrite the law to make it say what they would like it to say. If they would like to write the law, let them run for Congress.

Mr. President, Judge Chen made a number of speeches and statements about which I am concerned. I will not go into that today. But these are some of the nominees who are going to have some difficulty on the Senate floor.

Most of the nominees, such as the one on whom we are about to vote, will go through in an expeditious manner. Too often a problem we are dealing with is that there is a philosophy out there—I don't think it is a legal philosophy but rather nonlegal—that it is legitimate for a judge to look outside the law in judging, and that it is legitimate for their personal policy preferences and those matters to impact their decisionmaking.

We are talking about a lifetime appointment to the Federal bench. There is no opportunity to examine the nominees after they have been confirmed. They should demonstrate that they will not render rulings that go beyond the plain meaning of the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Chair and just say that I intend to support this nominee. I will conclude by saying that those of us in the minority intend to give these nominees a fair hearing and to allow the majority of them to have up-or-down votes promptly. But those we think should be objected to will have a difficult time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, I know my friend from Alabama mentioned the ongoing issues of filling the judicial vacancies. We can talk about individual cases, and I am more than happy to do that. But I think we need to look at the record, at the number of judges, the number of vacancies, and the record during the different administrations.

There is a disturbing trend that is developing with the Republicans blocking President Obama's confirmations by inaction, by not allowing us to, in fact, bring those nominations to the floor for a confirmation vote.

I am going to use two charts to point out the differences we have seen with Republicans using tactics to deny confirmation votes and the time during the years when President Bush made the appointments. During the Clinton years, we saw an increase in the number of vacancies that could not be brought to the floor for a vote. It reached 110 vacancies in the judicial branch at the end of the Clinton administration. The Democrats worked with the Republicans during President Bush's years, under times when Republicans were in control and when Democrats were in control of Congress. The number went down to 53 percent when President Bush left office. We are now up to 94. We are seeing a significant increase in the number of unfilled positions. Yet there are noncontroversial nominees who have been approved by the Judiciary Committee who have not been brought to the Senate floor.

I will talk about the appellate court because we think it represents a deliberate effort to slow-walk the confirmation process.

When President Clinton was in office, we saw an escalating number of appellate court judges who were delayed and not acted upon—doubling from 16 to 32 when President Clinton left office. We know the appellate court is where most of the appellate decisions will be made because very few cases go to the Supreme Court. These are critical judges.

During President Clinton's years, the Republicans used every tactic they could to deny the confirmation of appellate judges. Look what Democrats did during President Bush, whether in the minority or majority. We not only reduced the number of vacancies on the appellate court, we brought it down—in 1 case, from 32 to 9. When President Obama took office, it was 13. It is now up to 21.

There are four nominees who have been approved by the committee who are ready for action right now on the floor of the Senate. This is an abuse of the rights of the minority. We need to vote on these confirmations. The appellate courts need these judges. The district courts need these judges. We have, right now, over 10 judges ready for a vote on the Senate floor, none of whom I believe will require an extraordinary vote because I think they are basically without controversy.

Let's get on with these responsibilities and bring these forward. These facts indicate that clearly there has been a deliberate effort, and it is not right. I ask my Republican friends to end this and let's bring up these matters for an up-or-down vote.

With that, Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. KIRK. Madam President, as the Senate prepares to debate the critical reform of our Nation's health care system, I am privileged to stand at the Massachusetts desk from which the voice—that unmistakable, booming voice—of the most effective legislator of our time was heard throughout this Chamber that he loved for nearly a half century.

The voice of Senator Edward M. Kennedy called out against injustice, denial of opportunity, and needless suffering of every kind. Sometimes with humor, sometimes with indignation, he spoke skillfully and tirelessly as a champion of working families, the poor, the disabled, and those engaged in a constant struggle for economic and social justice.

Of all the issues on which he led the Senate and our Nation, the one Ted Kennedy called the cause of his life was the battle for affordable, quality health care. He saw the need as universal—made real by experiences deeply personal. He was the father of three children who faced serious illnesses and received the finest health care in the world.

He understood firsthand the anguish of a parent who learns that a child is gravely ill. He found it unacceptable that some Americans receive quality health care while millions of others do not.

For almost 50 years, his voice thundered in this Chamber and across the Nation with a clear and compelling message: Affordable, quality health care must be a basic right for all, not a privilege for the few.

In Senator Kennedy's own maiden speech in this Chamber, he noted the conventional wisdom that freshman Senators should be seen and not heard. But he felt compelled to speak out on the Civil Rights Act of 1964 because it was the defining moral issue of that time.

As the newest of freshman Senators, who is honored to stand briefly in his place, I have no doubt about my obligation to Senator Kennedy, to the values and friendship we shared, to the citizens of Massachusetts, and to the country we love. So I am grateful for this opportunity to speak out at another defining moment for our Nation, on what I and Senator Kennedy believe to be the moral issue of this time.

At this moment, we are closer to realizing the long-held dream that all Americans have access to quality, affordable health care than at any time in our Nation's history. By seizing this moment, we will, at long last, put America on equal standing with other nations that long ago assured their citizens quality, affordable health care as a matter of right.

Despite the urging of Republican and Democratic Presidents alike, from Theodore Roosevelt to Bill Clinton, the United States remains the only industrial Nation that has yet to guarantee health care for all its citizens.

It has been 40 years since Edward Kennedy gave his first speech on this issue. In an address at the Boston University Medical Center, he declared the time had come to establish a national plan to provide affordable and quality health care for every American.

Rough estimates at the time suggested 25 million were without any coverage. Today we have 46 million uninsured Americans.

In the four decades since Ted Kennedy issued that challenge, despite the expenditure of trillions of dollars and a passing of a generation, millions of Americans worry each day whether their health insurance will be there for them and for their children. They fear their insurance company will drop them if they are sick or set limits on their coverage that will leave them destitute. They wonder if their insurance will be adequate and if they are but one serious illness away from bankruptcy.

They ask why insurance companies are permitted to charge higher premiums for women than for men. They are afraid, if they lose their jobs, they will be unable to get new insurance because they have a preexisting condition. Worse, tens of millions of our fellow citizens go to bed each night praying their children will stay well because they have no insurance at all. They work hard, they play by the rules, they do everything possible to provide for their families, but they need every penny to put a roof over their heads and food on the table. In the end, they simply cannot afford health insurance.

After decades of falling short of the mark, quality, affordable health care for all Americans is, at long last, within their reach. Thanks to the leadership of Senator REID, Senator DODD, Senator BAUCUS, and others, in combining the bipartisan work of the Health and Finance Committees, and thanks to similar work being done in the House of Representatives and the leadership and support of President Obama, we are closer than ever to fixing our broken health care system.

Yes, there are issues yet to be resolved. In the days ahead, I, too, will advocate for a public option because we need to stimulate competition and reduce costs in the health care marketplace.

I will also speak for the so-called CLASS Act, a voluntary, self-funded, self-insured, deficit-reducing plan that will protect millions of Americans against the crushing cost of long-term services and support so necessary in their senior years.

But as this debate moves forward, we who are privileged to serve in this historic body, on both sides of the aisle, have the opportunity and the obligation to take the long view, to put aside partisan politics and come together to seize this unique and critical moment in our history.

Bipartisanship works for the people. Only 3 years ago, with Senator Kennedy's guidance, Democrats and Republicans in Massachusetts worked together to adopt a health reform plan approved by a Democratic legislature, signed by a Republican Governor, and implemented with essential support from a Republican President.

The experience of Massachusetts was bipartisan. It has helped to shape the legislation this Senate will soon consider. Our national legislation draws ideas from both sides of the aisle and from all parts of the political spectrum. Similar to our Massachusetts reform, it will make a lifesaving and cost-saving difference for millions of Americans, whatever their station in life and whatever their political persuasion.

It is regrettable that efforts for reform in the Senate and the House have been under assault by special interests that have a financial stake in our failing health care system. As part of that opposition, they have attacked the success of our reform in Massachusetts. But let me set the record straight.

First, because of our bipartisan reforms, less than 3 percent of the Massachusetts population is without health insurance today, lower than any other State.

Second, the most respected independent fiscal watchdog concluded that Massachusetts implemented its reform in a fiscally responsible and financially sustainable way.

Third, unlike every other State, employer-based health insurance is increasing in Massachusetts.

Finally, according to a recent statewide poll by the Harvard School of Public Health, 79 percent of the public, and practitioners in every sector of the Massachusetts health care system, including physicians, strongly supports our bipartisan reform.

Let me quote a recent message from a Massachusetts doctor:

You will be glad to know that I just saw the very last uninsured patient in my panel of about 300 patients for whom I am the primary care physician. He is a 62-year-old diabetic electrician from Mattapan. He finally got his insurance last month—with help of [the reform law], we are now finally getting his eye exam, his blood work, and refilling all his prescriptions.

That is just one example of a substantial difference a bipartisan health reform measure has made in the lives of the people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. That is the kind of substantial difference bipartisan reform can make in the lives of people all across America.

I am the 100th Member, the most junior Member of this distinguished body. But I am hopeful that a newcomer's perspective will be received as a constructive contribution to this debate.

Let me be candid. At this moment, when American families are imperiled by economic hardship and uncertainty, it gives them no comfort to see the Senate so politically polarized over an issue that should be bringing us together on their behalf.

The accelerating health care and health costs crises strike fear in the hearts of the average American family. These crises should not be dividing this Chamber; they should be uniting us. These crises do not discriminate in their impact on our constituents. They are the common fears of Republicans and Democrats, Independents and the unenrolled, old and young, urban and rural, businesses large and small, workers organized and unorganized, the self-employed and the unemployed, married and single, straight and gay, and Americans of every ethnic or racial heritage.

These are the people we are honored to represent. They expect us to work together in their common interests and, I submit, they deserve no less.

Years from now, history will look upon this debate and record that this was our opportunity to act on a defining domestic obligation of our time. During the coming weeks, I hope each of us will take the long view, think beyond the politics of the day, and come together in good faith to do what is right for our people.

When I accepted my oath of office a month ago, much was made of my being the 60th vote for health reform. This debate should not be about one party reaching 60 votes. It should be about 100 Senators reaching out to each other to reform a health care system that will better reflect the true values and character of our Nation.

As this debate continues, we would do well to pause for a moment to hear Ted Kennedy's voice in the quiet of our hearts. You and I know he will urge us to seize this moment to come together in this common cause and to make sure, at long last, that all Americans will have access to the quality, affordable health care they have long deserved and now so urgently need.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Madam President, I congratulate my colleague from Massachusetts, who has made his first comments on the floor of the Senate, what is traditionally called a maiden speech, and what was for many years a speech that often took months, if not, in some cases, years for a Senator to make. The times have changed and, indeed, the issues have changed. Now Senators, by custom, address the floor much before that kind of time period has elapsed.

Let me say I am glad that is the custom, and I am glad my colleague, PAUL KIRK, is here to share in his ability to be able to present his values and the values of Ted Kennedy and Massachusetts to the Senate, with respect to the issue he talked about today.

I cannot say that for many of us who sat here and listened to this, as we looked across the Senate at this desk, that there still is not an adjustment as we look there and do not see our friend Ted Kennedy but see, instead, the person who has been chosen to follow in his footsteps.

I know Ted Kennedy would be both enormously proud and enormously pleased that PAUL KIRK spoke the way he did today and chose to speak as he did about health care.

PAUL KIRK was in the Senate working for Ted Kennedy in 1969, when Ted Kennedy first took up the great cause of health care. It was no accident that he came to be here working for Ted Kennedy, though it was somewhat of an effort because PAUL had chosen to work in the Presidential campaign of Robert Kennedy. When Robert Kennedy was assassinated, PAUL felt there was not a place in politics for him, and so he stepped back for a moment. It took Ted Kennedy a considerable amount of personal persuasion and effort to give him a sense that working in the Senate, working with him was the best way to try to carry on. That was the beginning of an extraordinary working partnership. I think PAUL worked with Ted Kennedy until about 1977 or so in the Senate, but he never stopped working with him as both a friend and an adviser. He went on to become the founder of the Presidential Debate Commission. He chaired the Democratic National Committee. He has chaired the Kennedy Library, and now he comes to us as an extraordinarily appropriate replacement, to the degree there can ever be a replacement—we all understand the difficulties of that—for our friend Ted Kennedy.

I thank him for his words today. I thank him for his willingness to come and serve at a difficult time. I thank him for being willing to go through all the gyrations one has to go through to meet the standards of the Ethics Committee of the Senate to serve just, knowingly, for 4½ months. That is a great statement both about his feelings about being chosen to fill the seat he fills but also about his commitment to public service.

I thank my colleague for his comments about health care. He is absolutely correct; we are on the cusp of a historic choice in this country, and I think it is more than fitting that PAUL KIRK, who knows Ted Kennedy's staff, who had such a close relationship with him, who shares his values so intensely, is here to be part of this vote.

He is absolutely correct. While he is the 60th vote, it may change some of our ability to move or not move, the thought he expressed about our desire to have all Senators join in this historic moment and weigh in, in a way that permits more of them to take part is exactly what the Senate is about.

I close by saying, as I looked across at PAUL, I thought about this transitional moment, of his first speaking and following in the footsteps of Ted Kennedy from that seat and that desk. It reminds all of us that we all come and we go here. It gives us a sense of the timelessness, if you will, of this institution. It reminds us that while we do change and we come and go, this institution is here, the Congress is here, the country is here, the demands of the people are here, and good people keep coming here to try to meet those demands and live out the best values for our Nation.

I congratulate my colleague for representing Massachusetts so effectively, for keeping faith with Ted Kennedy and this institution, and helping to remind us of the importance of the work ahead of us in the days ahead.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, next to the door of Senator Kennedy's old office—now Senator KIRK's office—is a small brass plaque that Senator Kennedy had mounted near the door with an old Gaelic greeting: Cead Mile Failte—100,000 welcomes. With his first maiden speech on the floor of the Senate, I extend to Senator KIRK, my colleague, officially, Cead Mile Failte, 100,000 welcomes to this great body. The fact the Senator would stand and speak to an issue of such enduring significance, not only to the Nation but to Senator Ted Kennedy, is entirely fitting.

Forty-five years ago, Ted Kennedy gave his maiden speech on the floor of the Senate, addressing the moral issue of his time—the issue of civil rights. Over the years, he came to understand the issue of health care is an issue of civil rights. His son, Congressman PATRICK KENNEDY, tells the story when his dad was in the hospital recently recuperating from cancer, he would walk the wards. We can see him plodding along, going from room to room, talking to people about how they were doing and, more specifically, how they were paying for their medical care.

Ted never stopped caring about not only the many people he represented in Massachusetts and around the Nation but around the world. During the time he served in the Senate, he extended the reach of civil rights and opportunity through health care, with Medicaid and Medicare and COBRA and children's health insurance and so many other things that he was a part of. I am honored the Senator is here today, as he has said, to be the voice and the vote of Senator Edward M. Kennedy. The question asked is: Will the circle go unbroken? With the Senator's speech today, it is clear it is unbroken; that the Senator is carrying on the fine tradition not only of Senator Kennedy but of so many people who were inspired by his words over the years.

I congratulate my colleague on his maiden speech on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Madam President, I simply wish to rise and acknowledge the wise words of a good man and a good Senator in the great tradition of Ted Kennedy.

I thank the Senator, for his work, his commitment, and his dedication. With his help, we will complete the work Senator Kennedy started.

I yield the floor.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will stand in recess until 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:32 p.m., recessed until 2:15 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. WEBB).

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF IRENE CORNELIA BERGER TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the senior Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the Senate will vote today to confirm West Virginia Circuit Court Judge Irene C. Berger for a seat on the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of West Virginia. I thank Chairman LEAHY and Ranking Member SESSIONS for moving the nomination forward. Along with my colleague, Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER, I was proud to recommend Judge Berger, for she is not only an outstanding jurist, she is also an exemplary person. A native of Berwind, in McDowell County, WV, Judge Berger has devoted her legal career to public service in West Virginia.

As a young attorney, she provided legal services to those who were most needy. As a prosecutor, Judge Berger obtained many high-profile felony convictions. Judge Berger has served as a circuit judge for the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit of West Virginia for 15 years—1½ decades—and she has devoted countless hours of service to her community.

Through her drive and determination, Judge Berger broke barrier after barrier. She was the first in her family to attend college. She was the first African-American woman to serve as a circuit judge in West Virginia. Embodying true mountaineer spirit and pride, Judge Berger's contributions to legal service and to education have been substantial. Sitting on the bench, she will continue her fine service to her community and to the great State of West Virginia.

I want to be the first to congratulate Judge Berger, and I thank my colleagues for their support of this very fine lady.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, it has taken nearly a month to obtain Republican consent to consider the nomination of Judge Irene Berger to the Southern District of West Virginia. Judge Berger is a consensus nominee unanimously rated "well qualified" by the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary, the highest rating possible. Her nomination has the support of both of West Virginia's highly respected Senators. Senator BYRD, as the senior member of the Senate, is the President pro tempore and is the longest serving Senator in history. Senator ROCKEFELLER is a senior member and the chairman of the Commerce Committee. I thank the Senators from West Virginia for their statements in support of the nomination, their work on this nomination, and their recommendations of outstanding judicial nominations for West Virginia over many years.

Republican delay in the confirmation of this consensus nominee continues a pattern that has been followed all year. Last week, the Senate was finally allowed to consider the nomination of Roberto A. Lange to the District of South Dakota. I regret that the Republican minority allowed 3 weeks to lapse since the nomination was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee before allowing the Senate to consider it. They also required 2 hours of debate on the nomination, though they used fewer than 5 minutes to discuss the merits of the nominee. In that 5 minutes, the ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee endorsed the nomination. That nomination had the support of both Senator JOHNSON and Senator THUNE, a member of the Senate Republican leadership. Ultimately, Judge Lange's nomination was confirmed 100 to 0, but only after weeks of unnecessary delay.

The pattern is being repeated today with respect to Judge Berger. When confirmed, Judge Berger will be the first African American in the history of West Virginia to serve as a Federal judge. For the last 15 years, Judge Berger has served as a circuit judge in county court. Before that, she spent more than a decade as a State and Federal prosecutor.

So I ask, why has the Republican minority delayed consideration of this experienced and highly qualified jurist and of this historic confirmation for the last several weeks? Will any Republican explain why there will remain nine other judicial nominations reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee on which Senate Republicans continue to refuse to allow the Senate to proceed? Two were reported in June and have been stalled for more than 4 months.

Last week, the Senate also finally confirmed the nomination of Judge William Sessions of Vermont to chair the U.S. Sentencing Commission. An anonymous, unexplained Republican hold stalled that nomination for more than 5 months. The majority leader was forced to file a cloture petition in order to end the obstruction. Cloture petitions were previously required to overcome Republican obstruction on the nominations of David Ogden to serve as the Deputy Attorney General and Tom Perez to serve as the Assistant Attorney General heading the Civil Rights Division.

I said last week before the Senate unanimously confirmed Judge Lange that these delays are a dark mark on the Senate. They prevent us from doing our work. Worse, this obstruction means that nominees must place their lives on hold for an undetermined amount of time. The Senate should be the conscience of the Nation. These needless and harmful delays, particularly in connection to consensus nominees, make the Senate look foolish.

Judge Berger's nomination is one of 13 judicial nominations reported favorably by the committee this year to fill circuit and district court vacancies on Federal courts around the country. The President has worked hard to consult with Republicans and Democrats alike to make consensus, well-qualified selections. Unlike his predecessor, he has not sought to turn judicial nominations into a partisan matter. Ten of these judicial nominations were reported by the Judiciary Committee without a single dissenting voice. Yet, due to the pattern of Republican delay, this is just the fourth of those nominations allowed to be considered by the Senate.

It is now October 27. By this date in George W. Bush's first year in office, the Senate had confirmed a total of 12 lower court judges, including 4 circuit court judges. We achieved those results with a controversial and confrontational Republican President after a midyear change in the Senate to a Democratic majority, in spite of the attacks of September 11, despite the anthrax-laced letters sent to the Senate that closed our offices, and working virtually around the clock on the PATRIOT Act. By comparison, this year the Republican minority has allowed action on only three judicial nominations to the Federal circuit and district courts, with only one circuit court confirmation all year. Judge Berger's confirmation will raise the total judicial confirmations to only one-third of that achieved by this date in 2001.

I made sure that President Bush's judicial nominations were treated better than President Clinton's had been by the Republican Senate majority. By contrast, Senate Republicans are making sure that President Obama's nominees are treated worse even worse than they treated President Clinton's nominees. By this junction in President Clinton's first year, the Senate had confirmed twice as many judicial nominees as we have this year.

This is all despite the fact that President Obama sent nominees to the Senate 2 months earlier than did President Bush. This is despite bipartisan support from Republican Senators like Senator LUGAR, Senator THUNE, Senator Martinez, Senator ALEXANDER, Senator CHAMBLISS, and Senator ISAKSON for President Obama's judicial nominees to judicial vacancies affecting their home States.

When I served as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee during President Bush's first term, I did my best to stop the downward spiral that had affected judicial confirmations. Throughout my chairmanship, I made sure to treat President Bush's judicial nominees better than the Republicans had treated President Clinton's nominees. During the 17 months I chaired the Judiciary Committee in President Bush's first term, we confirmed 100 of his judicial nominees. At the end of his Presidency, although Republicans had chaired the Judiciary Committee for more than half his tenure, more of his judicial nominees were confirmed when I was the chairman than in the more than 4 years when Republicans were in charge.

Senate Republicans began this year threatening to filibuster every judicial nominee of the new President. They have followed through by dragging out, delaying, obstructing, and stalling the process. The result is that 10 months into President's Obama's first term, the Senate after today will have confirmed only four of his nominations for circuit and district courts while judicial vacancies skyrocket around the country. After reducing vacancies as low as 43 last year, even during the last year of President Bush's second term and a Presidential election year, vacancies have already more than doubled to 95 vacancies around the country in our Federal circuit and district courts. There are another 26 future vacancies already announced. These vacancies are at near record levels. We can do better. The American people deserve better. Justice should not be delayed or denied to any American because of overburdened courts.

When will Senate Republicans allow the Senate to consider the nominations of Judge Hamilton to the Seventh Circuit, Judge Davis to the Fourth Circuit, Judge Martin to the Eleventh Circuit, Judge Greenaway to the Third Circuit, Judge Honeywell to the Middle District of Florida, Judge Nguyen to the Central District of California, Judge Chen to the Northern District of California, Ms. Gee to the Central District of California, and Judge Seeborg to the Northern District of California?

President Obama made his first judicial nomination, that of Judge David Hamilton to the Seventh Circuit, in March, but it has been stalled on the Executive Calendar since early June, despite the support of the senior Republican in the Senate, Senator LUGAR. The nomination of Judge Andre Davis to the Fourth Circuit was reported by the Judiciary Committee on June 4 by a vote of 16 to 3, but has yet to be considered by the Senate. The nomination of Judge Beverly Baldwin Martin to the Eleventh Circuit has the support of both of Georgia's Senators, both Republicans, and was reported unanimously from the Committee by voice vote on September 10 but has yet to be considered or scheduled for consideration by the Senate. The nomination of Judge Joseph Greenaway to the Third Circuit has the support of both New Jersey Senators and was reported unanimously from the Committee by voice vote on October 1 but has yet to be considered or scheduled for consideration by the Senate. All of these nominees are well-respected judges. All will be confirmed, I believe, if only Republicans would consent to their consideration by the Senate. Instead, the President's good efforts are being snubbed and these nominees stalled for no good purpose.

The Senate's failure to adhere to its tradition of regularly considering qualified, noncontroversial nominees has not been limited to filling vacancies on the Federal bench. The Republican minority has irresponsibly stalled nominations to critical posts in the Department of Justice, depriving the President, the Attorney General, and the country of the leaders needed to head important divisions at the Justice Department. These are important leaders of our Federal law enforcement efforts. Presidents of both parties, especially newly elected ones, are normally accorded greater deference to put in place appointees for their administrations.

Yet, 10 months in to President Obama's first term, five nominations to be Assistant Attorneys General remain stalled on the Senate's Executive Calendar due to Republican opposition and obstruction. These are the President's nominees to run 5 of the 11 divisions at the Justice Department—nearly half. By comparison, at this point in the Bush administration the Senate had confirmed nine Assistant Attorneys General and only one nomination was pending on the Senate Executive Calendar. The difference is that the Republican minority is refusing to consider these nominations.

The President nominated Dawn Johnsen to be the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Office of Legal Counsel at the Justice Department on February 11. Her nomination has been pending on the Senate Executive Calendar since March 19. That is the longest pending nomination on the calendar by over 2 months. We did not treat President Bush's first nominee to head the Office of Legal Counsel the same way. We confirmed Jay Bybee to that post only 49 days after he was nominated by President Bush and only 5 days after his nomination was reported by the committee.

Mary Smith's nomination to be the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Tax Division has been pending on the Senate's Executive Calendar since June 11—more than 4 months. We confirmed President Bush's first nomination to that position, Eileen O'Connor, only 57 days after her nomination was made and 1 day after her nomination was reported by the committee. Her replacement, Nathan Hochman, was confirmed without delay, just 34 days after his nomination.

President Obama's nomination of Ignacia Moreno to be the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Energy and Natural Resources Division has been on the Senate Executive Calendar for over a month, even though it was reported by the Judiciary Committee by unanimous consent. By comparison, a Democratic majority in the Senate confirmed President Bush's controversial nomination of Thomas Sansonetti to the position only 1 day after it was reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Chris Schroeder's nomination to be the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Office of Legal Policy has been pending on the Senate Executive Calendar since July 28. It was reported by voice vote without a single dissenting voice. President Bush's first nominee to head that division, Viet Dinh, was confirmed 96 to 1 only 1 month after he was nominated and only a week after he his nomination was reported by the committee. The three nominees to that office that succeeded Mr. Dinh—Daniel Bryant, Rachel Brand, and Elisabeth Cook—were each confirmed by voice vote in a shorter time than Professor Schroeder's nomination has been pending. Ms. Cook was confirmed 13 days after her nomination was reported by the committee even though it was the final year of the Bush Presidency. By contrast, the majority leader may have to file another cloture position in order to overcome Republican obstruction and obtain Senate consideration of Professor Schroeder's nomination.

Instead of withholding consents and filibustering President Obama's nominees, the other side of the aisle should join us in treating them fairly. We should not have to fight for months to schedule consideration of the President's judicial nominations and nomination for critical posts in the executive branch.

I look forward to congratulating Judge Berger and her family on her historic confirmation, and I thank the West Virginia Senators for their strong support of the nominee through another extended and unnecessary delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Irene Cornelia Berger, of West Virginia, to be United States District Judge for the Southern District of West Virginia?

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be a sufficient second.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. KYL. The following Senator is necessarily absent: the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. DEMINT).

Further, if present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. DEMINT) would have voted "yea."

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 97, nays 0, as follows:

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, currently the Nation's unemployment rate is higher than it has been since 1983. In my home State of Michigan, the unemployment rate is 15.3 percent, 5.5 percent higher than the Nation's unemployment rate of 9.8 percent. Translated into real people, this means over 15 million Americans are unemployed, more than 740,000 of whom are living in Michigan. As of October 16, more than 44,000 Michiganians have exhausted their much needed unemployment benefits, and by the end of this year, the number will rise to almost 100,000 people. Since the beginning of this year, Michigan has been losing on average 27,000 jobs per month. Our people need help.

My constituents make a simple request: Please act so our benefits do not run out. These people are eager, even desperate for work. Until the economic recovery that appears to be starting begins creating new jobs, these Americans need our help. They need us to listen. They need us to help ensure they can still feed and clothe their families and remain in their homes.

Economists tell us that direct payments such as unemployment insurance are also the best, most efficient way to boost economic activity in a downturn. In fact, economists estimate that for every $1 we provide Americans in extended unemployment benefits, we generate $1.64 in new economic activity.

Michigan's families are waiting. America's workers are waiting. We must pass this legislation extending unemployment benefits. Every day that passes without doing so deepens the pain and suffering of our people.

Today's vote on cloture on the unemployment benefits extension is a critical vote for millions of Americans. I hope we rise to the occasion. The people of Michigan, the people who so desperately need work and cannot find it are waiting eagerly and hopefully.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, last week I spoke on the floor about the urgent need to pass an extension of unemployment insurance that would help 18,000 people from the State of Washington and millions of Americans across the country. I came here and told the story of three Washington State families who have lost their jobs in the most difficult time since the Great Depression and who desperately need the support that an extension would give them to get back on their feet. Unfortunately, despite the hard work of many of my colleagues on the floor, this small measure of financial stability has been delayed to families across the country who need it the most, families who right now, as we debate about whether we will get to the bill, are having a much more agonizing debate at home about how to make next month's rent or even next week's grocery budget if their unemployment runs out.

For these families, this bill will provide real help. It provides every single unemployed worker who has exhausted his or her benefits, regardless of the State they live in, an additional 14 weeks of support. It extends unemployment to laid off workers in States hardest hit by job losses, including my home State of Washington, by 6 weeks. It makes critical changes to help more families, like making sure an additional $25 per week in benefits that Congress included in the recovery act doesn't count against someone who is seeking food stamps.

Washington State workers and Americans across the country have been hurt through no fault of their own. They are out there every day looking for work. While we are seeing some progress on the economic front, for many of them the job market is still discouraging. Unemployment is now at 9.8 percent. That is a 26-year high. Since this recession began back in December of 2007, over 7.4 million people have lost their jobs, and the 15 million Americans who are trying to find jobs are searching for an average of 6.5 months before something comes through for them.

While those statistics clearly point out the need for this legislation, the stories behind those statistics are even more of a call to action. Last week, I told of the stories that have been pouring into my office from people who are unemployed in my home State of Washington. These are workers who are not asking for a handout; they are just asking for a small measure of support as they work very hard to try to get back on their feet. Today, I wish to share a couple more stories from the hundreds that have come into my office over the past few days urging me to do everything I can to get this bill passed.

I heard from a woman named Loretta Messick. She lives in Auburn, WA. She sent me a message just yesterday. She told me she has been working for more than 25 years, but she was recently laid off for the first time ever in her career. She said she is desperately looking for work, but she is not sure she is going to be able to find any before her benefits run out. She is working with her bank, she told me, to try and adjust her mortgage payments, but she told me that if unemployment runs out, she fears her family is very much in danger of losing their home.

Loretta is not alone. I also have a story from a woman named Patricia Obrist. She lives in Renton, WA. Patricia and her husband both had jobs in the construction industry—good jobs, she told me—but they were laid off when business slowed down for the companies they worked for. She told me she has only 8 weeks of unemployment benefits left and then, she said, she is going to have to start dropping expenses such as health care, the car payment, their mortgage. She asked me for just a little more time for her to find a job and to give her a chance to avoid losing everything she has worked so hard for.

For Loretta, for Patricia, for their families, and millions more like them, these questions haunt them every day: What will we do if support runs out? Where will we go when our savings are exhausted, when the credit card payments can no longer be met? What do we do when the bank will not wait any longer for a mortgage payment? Whom do we turn to?

In a time of national crisis, it is our job to make sure we are answering those questions. We can, by helping to provide a bridge to financial stability. We cannot sit on the sidelines. Doing so would only compound the problems we already face. More families will be pushed into bankruptcy, more homes will be foreclosed upon, more people will lose their health care, and less progress will then be made on the road to financial recovery for all of us. We can't sit by as working families are pushed to the brink by a financial crisis they did not create but they are paying for.

I hope all our colleagues listen to the voices of their constituents and join us in passing an unemployment extension that makes sure the struggles of America's laid-off workers are not ignored. This bill could not come at a more crucial time.

I wish to point out that these benefits would mean very little if we don't quickly get them into the hands of the people who need it most. The people of our State workforce agencies, people such as the Employment Security Department in my home State, are critical to making that happen. Despite the increasing demand, they have been working tirelessly to serve unemployed claimants, and I know this time will not be any different. So I wish to take a second to applaud them for their efforts to make sure these funds are distributed as quickly as possible to eligible claimants.

I appreciate all those who have been working hard to bring the unemployment extension bill to the floor of the Senate. I urge us to act now. We should not block this with any other efforts, even though many of them are important. Our families are struggling. We cannot afford to see anybody else lose their health care or their home or their car or their financial stability. Let's pass this unemployment extension and then move on to continuing the other important work that comes before the Senate.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UDALL of Colorado). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when I am finished speaking the Senator from Illinois be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BIPARTISANSHIP

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, last week, something remarkable happened on the floor of the U.S. Senate—bipartisanship broke out. We had a vote where 40 Republicans were joined by 12 Democrats and 1 Independent to vote down a piece of legislation that would have added \$250 billion— $\frac{1}{4}$ trillion—to the Federal debt. That $\frac{1}{4}$ trillion, with interest, was \$300 billion.

It was highly anticipated, as we were heading toward that vote, that there would be enough support to pass it. But I think it tells Members in the Senate, and probably people around the country, that there is a certain amount of discomfort among Senators when it comes to spending, borrowing, and adding to the debt $\frac{1}{4}$ trillion. I think that is good. That is the kind of bipartisanship I wish we had more of in the Senate: bipartisanship in the interest of fiscal discipline. Fiscal sanity in this country would be a welcome prize for most Americans.

As we draw nearer to the next stage of the debate on health care—and I would argue that was sort of the first vote on health care reform because it was a health care-related vote and, frankly, something many of us believe needs to be addressed. The physician reimbursement issue is an issue Congress deals with on a year-to-year basis. This would have put a 10-year solution in place, but, again, at a cost of $250 billion—$300 billion with interest—and not paid for, borrowed, put on the Federal debt, a Federal debt which is already growing at a record pace.

Last year, the deficit was \$1.4 trillion. The deficit this year is expected to be at a comparable range, and every single year, as we spend more than we are taking in, we borrow more and more from future generations. In fact, last year, in fiscal year 2009, which was just concluded, 43 cents out of every dollar that was spent by the Federal Government was borrowed. Yet we were talking about putting another $\frac{1}{4}$ trillion—\$300 billion with interest—on that Federal debt with the vote that was held last week.

So I was very pleased that bipartisanship did break out on the floor of the Senate and that we were able to defeat a piece of legislation that, frankly, would have saddled future generations with even more debt than they are already facing.

I think the next big issue in the debate over health care, Mr. President, has to do with whether—in the legislation that is being written behind closed doors—there is going to be a so-called public option, which is the phraseology that has now been adopted to describe what I would characterize as a government plan, and whether that government plan is going to have an opt-in for States, an opt-out for States, or whether it will have a trigger that will take effect somewhere down the road. All these questions, in my mind, belie the basic fundamental fact that what we are talking about is government-run health care.

Whether we have a State opt-in or a State opt-out or some sort of trigger, the conclusion is still the same: we are going to have a government plan that will compete with the private health care market and the opportunities that are available to most Americans. When you do that, of course, I think you put the competitive marketplace at an unfair disadvantage because the government, obviously, will have huge advantages, and eventually over time you will see more and more people pushed into that government plan, more and more employers will drop their coverage as people gravitate toward the government plan.

My point simply is this: Whether you call it a State opt-in or a State opt-out or a trigger, a government plan by any other name is still a government plan. What we are talking about is creating a mechanism whereby the Federal Government can enter into the marketplace and compete against the private sector when it comes to offering health care insurance to people in this country. That, to me, is an unacceptable outcome and I hope one that will be defeated.

It seems to me at least that the vote last week perhaps is an indication that there already is some discomfort developing among Members here, in a bipartisan way, on the direction in which this health care debate is headed.

I think the No. 1 concern most Americans have when it comes to health care reform is the issue of cost. It really is. How are my day-to-day costs for health care going to be impacted by the debate occurring in Washington, DC? Is health care reform going to drive that cost down or is it going to increase it?

What we have questioned consistently with respect to all the proposals out there, including the more recent version released by the Senate Finance Committee of which we finally got a written copy last week, over 1,500 pages, currently being merged with the Senate HELP Committee legislation—again in a process which is very closed to most Members of the Senate where a handful of people in a room are developing this—we hope to see that merged version at some point here in the not too distant future and know what it is going to cost because I think that is a consideration all of us are going to be following very closely: What is this latest version going to cost?

For most Americans, the issue is going to come back to how it impacts my premiums. We have now seen the Congressional Budget Office, we have seen the Actuary at the Department of Health and Human Services, we have seen a number of independent studies that have said this is going to bend the cost curve up, not down. In other words, you are going to see overall health care costs increase, you are going to see premium costs increase for most Americans.

In fact, if you are one of the 185 million Americans who derive their health insurance through their employer, you are going to see higher premiums. There are those who are going to get their insurance through an exchange—18 million Americans—for whom subsidies are available. But if you are one of the 185 million Americans who get their health care insurance through their employer, you are not going to be eligible for a subsidy. You are, however, going to be paying the higher taxes that are associated with this and you are going to see your premiums go up.

The most recent, I guess, analysis of this, which was released last week by the Department of Health and Human Services, by the Chief Actuary there, suggested that overall spending for health care at the end of the 10-year period would be up 2.1 percent. In other words, today we spend about $1 in every $6 of our entire economy—one-sixth of our GDP is spent on health care. In 2019, we will be spending 21.3 percent or over one-fifth of our entire economy on health care. So $1 out of $5 in our economy is going to pay for health care at the end of that period. What does that mean? It means health care spending is going to increase by about $750 billion over that period of time. That is the wrong direction to go if you are talking about reform.

As I said before, most Americans, when they look at how this impacts them, want to know whether health care reform that is being acted on by Congress is actually doing something to impact the cost of their health care in a positive way—in other words, that the cost for their premiums, their health care premiums, is going down.

I say again, based upon all the analysis that has been done with respect to my State of South Dakota, I have seen several studies which suggest that if you buy your insurance in the individual marketplace, you could see your premiums go up as much as 47 percent. If you are a family buying in the individual marketplace, you could see your premiums go up as much as 50 percent. In fact, there have been some analyses done that suggested premiums could go up as much as 73 percent for some people.

What does that mean to the average American who is observing this debate? It means not only are you going to see taxes go up—according to the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Tax Committee, the tax increases in the bill are going to hit the middle-income classes the hardest. In fact, about 90 percent of the tax burden will be borne by those making less than $200,000 a year. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, over 50 percent of the tax burden will be borne by those making less than $100,000 a year. The taxes are clearly going to hit right at middle-class Americans. If you are a senior over 65, you are going to see significant cuts in Medicare because that is one of the ways the new expansion of this program, this new entitlement program, is financed and paid for. So you are going to see higher taxes, you are going to see cuts to Medicare, and then ironically, as I said earlier, you are going to see your premiums go up. The average American has to be sitting out there asking: What is the whole purpose of this exercise?

One of the things that has been advocated in the debate over health care reform is we have to cover the people who are not covered. There are a lot of Americans who do not have access to health care coverage today. That could be addressed. There are lots of ways that could be addressed, but the way it is proposed to be addressed here actually leaves 25 million Americans uncovered. So not only have you raised taxes, cut Medicare, and increased premiums for people who already have insurance, you leave 25 million Americans without health care coverage. How can you, in any stretch of the word, characterize or define that as health care reform?

As the debate gets underway, I hope last week's vote was an indication, at least, of the initial stages of this debate; that there is some bipartisan support for constraining spending, for fiscal responsibility, and for fiscal discipline; and that as we get into this, we can move away from this discussion about a $2 trillion expansion of the Federal Government financed with tax increases and Medicare cuts and premium increases for 185 million Americans who get their insurance through their employer and start focusing on things that actually would provide greater competition and would bend the cost curve down, would drive costs down for most Americans. We believe that is a fair place to start.

We think there are things that could be done that would accomplish that, one of which is allowing people to buy insurance across State lines, creating a bigger market, a more expansive market for people in this country. Another is to allow people to join larger groups and get the benefit of group purchasing power, small business health plans—legislation voted on a number of times here and always been defeated. We ought to address the issue of medical malpractice reform and defensive medicine, which costs, some estimates are, $100 billion a year in terms of additional spending.

There are many solutions that we think make sense that actually do get at the issue of cost, which, as I said, is where I think most Americans are concerned about health care reform and where all the bills we have seen so far, including the one that was released by the Senate Finance Committee, fall short. It doesn't do anything to impact premiums, the health care costs for most Americans, at least those Americans who have health insurance; it raises them at the same time it raises taxes on working families in this country and cuts Medicare for senior citizens to the tune of $½ trillion.

If you take a fully implemented 10-year time period for this—bear in mind that many of the tax increases in this bill are implemented immediately and the actual other provisions in the bill are implemented later on down the road in 2013. So you see a distorted view of what this bill really costs. The 10-year fully implemented cost is $1.8 trillion, almost $2 trillion. That amount, of course, is financed evenly between cuts in Medicare Programs and tax increases on people in this country.

I do not think that is what we want to see in terms of reform. It certainly is not what I think the American people are expecting Congress to do. They are expecting health care reform that does do something about getting their costs under control. This bill, the last bill we have seen—of course, we have a bill that is being merged now behind these closed doors which we hopefully will see in the near future—falls short on that account, and that is why I hope there will be strong bipartisan opposition to this legislation, allowing us to start over and in a step-by-step process work in a way that will actually impact, in a positive way, the costs most people are paying for insurance in this country by driving the overall cost of health care down rather than up.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I applaud the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota about bipartisan cooperation on health care reform. We have been trying all year, and unfortunately there has only been one Republican Senator, Senator SNOWE of Maine, who has voted to report a bill from committee; not a single Republican Congressman—none—and no other Republican Senator.

In fact, when the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee considered this health reform bill—and it is a big one because it affects $1 out of $6 in our economy and virtually every American—there were over 500 amendments. Over 150 were offered by the Republican side of the aisle and adopted. There were 150 Republican amendments, and not one single Republican Senator would vote for the bill. That is frustrating.

Senator MAX BAUCUS, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, determined to get bipartisan support, sat down with three Republican Senators literally for months—Senator GRASSLEY of Iowa, Senator ENZI of Wyoming, and Senator SNOWE of Maine—and said: Let's do this together. Let's do a bipartisan bill. Eventually, one fell off, the other fell off, and finally Senator SNOWE was the only one who would vote for it.

I applaud the Senator from South Dakota calling for bipartisanship. We have tried. And the notion that we are going to throw out all we have done and start over—what, another 500 amendments in the HELP Committee? Another 150 Republican amendments, and then they are going to vote against the bill?

We have a bill moving forward. It is a painful, difficult process, and the other side has nothing except criticism. They basically tell us what is wrong with our bill, and when we ask them: What will you do to significantly change health care in America, they have nothing. The current system is unsustainable. The cost of the current system is going to break the backs of individuals and families and businesses and governments.

Just 2 weeks ago, the insurance industry told us: If you pass health care reform, we guarantee you we will raise premiums. And they will. Trust me, they will. How do I know that? They have done that consistently every year. They just announced a 15-percent increase in health insurance for next year for businesses. Fewer businesses will be able to offer health insurance. How can they say this with certainty? You would say it is like guaranteeing that the price of a certain commodity is going up.

What about competition? The fact is, there is little or no competition in health insurance. First, this is one of two businesses in America exempt from antitrust. That means the heads of the insurance companies selling health insurance can legally sit down together and collude and conspire on the premiums they are going to charge people across America. They can decide how much they will charge and agree among themselves that they are going to charge the same thing. And they can allocate markets in America and say, well, this particular market in Los Angeles belongs to this health insurance company, this market in Chicago belongs to this health insurance company, and it is legal—the McCarran-Ferguson law. It is legal.

When they threaten to raise health insurance premiums, mark my words, they can do it. The only thing that stops them is competition. If there is some other entity out there offering health insurance that is competitive, at a lower price, then we have competition. What do we call that? The public option.

The people who come to the floor and criticize the notion of a public option—I have yet to hear the first person come to the floor and criticize Medicare. We created Medicare over 40 years ago and said: If you are over the age of 50, we are going to give you peace of mind. You won't go to the hospital and lose your life savings because of medical bills. That is what Medicare is all about. It has worked. Seniors live longer, they get better care, they have their independence, and they can live by themselves longer, which is exactly what they want to do. And they are not exhausting their savings.

When I was a child growing up, it was not unusual for grandma or grandpa to come and move in with you because they reached a point in their lives where they didn't have anything, and their families brought them into that spare bedroom. It happened in my family and a lot of others. Then came Social Security, then came Medicare, and then came independence, where they could have the kind of independence they enjoy and want to have.

How many people have come to the floor criticizing the public option in government health insurance and calling for the abolition of Medicare?

None. Not one. Maybe somebody will. I have yet to hear it.

I am all for bipartisanship, but I hope we put it in context. If we are going to deal with cost, if we are going to make sure Medicare is financially sound for years to come, if we are going to make sure the abuses of the health insurance companies come to an end—whether preexisting conditions or caps on payments for medical care—then we have to pass legislation. Merely coming here and saying what is wrong with the existing bill is not enough.

There is also a need for bipartisanship when it comes to the unemployed in America. Here is something on which you would think we could all basically agree. If you are one of the unfortunate millions of Americans out of work, if you have reached the point where you do not have a regular paycheck and you are trying to keep the lights on in your house, trying to pay the rent or the mortgage, put food on the table for your kids and some clothing and basic needs of life, gasoline in the car, we have always said in that situation, the American family—that is all of us, the collective Nation of America—will come and help.

Unemployment benefits will be the first thing we will help you with so you have something, a check, to get by on while you are looking for another job. Sadly, this recession has been very deep and has gone on for a long period of time. Millions of Americans have exhausted their unemployment benefits, and we have extended their benefits, realizing we have not turned the corner as we hoped we would, and we still have to realize a lot of people will not be able to find jobs quickly.

It used to be this was done automatically. We said: Well, we may bicker and squabble over economic policy. We may disagree on a lot of issues, but we will agree on this issue. The safety net in America should be there for unemployed people. Unfortunately, that has not been the case when it comes to the unemployment benefits we need today.

We have tried, more than once, to bring to the floor of the Senate a bill to extend unemployment insurance for Americans who are still out of work and need help. As I said, it should not be a partisan issue. The unemployment rate is close to 10 percent across the Nation. In many areas of the country, including my home State, it is even higher. Each day that goes by more people are running out of their benefits.

Here is story from a man who has written me from Mt. Vernon, IL, in Jefferson County, southern Illinois:

I have been unable to find a job. I have been unemployed since May 2007. My employment benefits exhausted in September. I am 54 years old. I have worked in factories most of my adult life. Therefore I have gone back to school. I still need a job. I realize I am not the only one. Please help us. I have no health care insurance. I have no life insurance since

I lost my job. I am praying for our country. God bless you.

A woman from my hometown in Springfield, IL, writes:

Mr. Durbin, I lost my job when the economy went south at the end of last summer. I am 54 years old, and at that awkward age, cannot retire, and not as attractive to employers as a younger job candidate, no degree and not enough work years left to pay back a student loan to get a degree. I have two kids. I am trying to help them get through college. I went from earning $30 an hour in telecom to $8.25 hour an hour in retail. Without my unemployment benefits, even my modest house payments are going to become difficult. Can anything be done to move the extension through the Senate? I am down to my last couple of weeks of benefits. I have lots of office skills and experience but cannot quite compete in this tight job market. Thanks for being our voice in the Senate.

The unemployment rate in Illinois now is 10.5, in Peoria it is 11.1 percent, in Decatur it is 12.4 percent, in Kankakee it is 12.8 percent, and in Rockford it is 15 percent. Our State is not alone with these numbers.

In the 19 days since Republicans in the Senate blocked our move to pass a strong unemployment insurance extension bill, another 130,000 Americans who cannot find work have lost their benefits. If we did not pass the extension of unemployment insurance this week, we will put 200,000 families in a position of not being able to put food on the table. It is that stark. It is that real. Some 20,000 of those families live in my State.

How do I explain to my constituents why the Senate has not acted on this bill that we obviously need and need desperately? Well, we cannot pass it because on the Republican side of the aisle they want to offer amendments.

Do the amendments have anything to do with unemployment or the payment of unemployment benefits? No.

One amendment from a Senator from Louisiana is to, once again, for the fourth or fifth time in the Senate in the last few months, flog an organization known as ACORN. How many times are we going to take up the time in the Senate to go after this organization? I do not know. But as long as it is Exhibit A on rightwing radio and TV, Members will come to the floor and say: Well, let me do something that might be mentioned tomorrow on one of these talk shows.

Well, that might be an interesting political exercise if it was not at the expense of these people who are basically unemployed and running out of money. The Senator from Louisiana wants to offer this amendment the fourth or fifth time. By the end of this year, nearly 9,000 families in Louisiana will lose unemployment insurance benefits if we do not act; 38,000 families in Alabama; 4,000 families in Kentucky will have lost their benefits during the month of October alone; 5,000 families in Arizona will have lost their assistance this month.

I would like to believe, at some point, even though we like to give speeches on the floor—and I am doing it right now—that you might step back and say: It might be more important that we pass this bill and then give the speech afterward. I hope we can. We should not be surprised families need our help. Unemployment has jumped across America. We need to do more than just help Americans find work. We need to provide small businesses better access to credit so they can grow and create jobs. We need to think about what other incentives we can put in place to help all employers, large and small, create jobs. In the meantime, we need to fix the safety net.

I would like to ask my colleagues who come to the floor and ask for bipartisanship, can we be bipartisan when it comes to unemployment benefits? It is not just the Democrats who are out of work, it is Democrats, Republicans, Independents, folks who do not vote, folks who do not think much of us, and folks who may have thought a little bit more of us before we got into this mess. This is a time for bipartisanship. In about an hour we will have a chance to vote. Let's hope Members from both sides of the aisle will come forward and stand up for these families who are so desperate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak as in morning business for such time as I shall consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I am certainly not going to object, may I inquire how long my colleague will speak?

Mr. INHOFE. It will not be more than 15 minutes.

Mr. CARDIN. I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized immediately after the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CAP AND TRADE

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, this morning we had the first of 3 days of hearings we are having on the proposed Kerry-Boxer climate bill. It was one I never quite had an experience such as that before. Senator KERRY came in, was given 30 minutes to talk about the same thing Al Gore has been talking about for the last 15 years, without any chance to rebut.

What I would like to do is take a few of the statements. It is a very confusing issue we have because we do not have a lot to work with. We were given a draft of a bill with some analysis. I think it was a couple days ago—not time to get into it. But the bottom line is, it is going to be the same thing, according to the EPA, as the Waxman-Markey bill.

So what I would like to do is use them interchangeably, since that was the response we got from the EPA when we made a request that we be given time to get an analysis, an EPA analysis of the bill. I think the words were: You do not need an EPA analysis of the bill because it is the same bill, for all practical purposes, as Waxman-Markey.

So that is what we have. I would like to go over it point by point. Senator KERRY is correct that cap and trade will impose higher costs in the form of higher prices for electricity and gasoline. I think we do know these costs are there.

According to the National Black Chamber of Commerce, the bill—which I will refer to as “the bill,” it could be Waxman-Markey, it could be Kerry-Boxer—the bill would increase gas prices by 19 cents a gallon by 2015, 38 cents a gallon by 2030, 95 cents a gallon by 2050. Also, electricity bills would rise by about 4 to 5 percent in 2020.

I say this because the head of the National Black Chamber of Commerce was an excellent witness. He brought the point home. Not only is this bill—this cap-and-trade bill—expensive, it would be something that would be regressive because the percentage of expendable income by a poor person is far greater than a rich person on such things as home heating and driving your cars. So his whole point was it was a regressive tax.

In a recent Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearing, Senator JEFF SESSIONS asked the government witnesses—the government witnesses were CBO, EPA, EIA, and the CRS—whether anyone disagreed with the finding that the net effect of cap and trade would be to reduce jobs. None did. Again, this morning, most of the witnesses responded in the same way.

Then Senator KERRY talked about the NASA scientists. “The best experts we have,” he said, “tell us that the last 10 years have been the hottest in decades on record.”

Of course, we know that we have—in fact, just the other day, last week, BBC, which is certainly no friend of skeptics, in their lead story said: What happened to global warming? This headline came out as a bit of a surprise; so, too, might the fact that the warmest year recorded globally was not 2008 or 2007 but 1998. It went on to say that for the last 11 years, we have not observed any increase in global temperatures. In fact, we have actually had the indication we are starting another cyclical cooling spell.

Senator KERRY said: That is why countries of the world, including India, China, and the United States, have agreed to limit the global rise in temperature to just 2 degrees Celsius. In fact, this is not true. I am sure he thinks it is true or he would not have said it. But China is the world's leading emitter of CO₂. India is No. 3. India has been moving up. We have a quote from the top environmental minister in India, whose name is Jairam Ramesh: "India will not accept any emissions reduction target, period." He went on to say: "This is non-negotiable." You cannot get any more emphatic than that.

At the same time, when you talk about China, they may give you some lip service. Let's keep in mind, though, that China is cranking out coal-fired generating plants at two a week right now. So that does not show there is much interest in China to do anything close to what has been represented. The next statement made was that the pollution reduction measures in this bill are tightly focused on maximum impact.

Only companies emitting 25,000 tons of carbon each year are covered, 98 percent of America's businesses. The bill still covers three-quarters of America's carbon pollution. So what he is saying is that three-fourths, as near as I can determine, of the carbon that is emitted comes from only 2 percent of America's businesses.

The fact is, the Kerry-Boxer bill or "the bill," I will say—because it could be Markey or the same—contains no provision to stop the EPA's endangerment finding, which would trigger a flood of regulations under the Clean Air Act. As such, all the sources Senator KERRY mentions would be covered in some form of regulation under the act.

Second, Senator KERRY ignores the fact that the sources he mentioned would be severely impacted by higher energy prices, declines in productivity, fewer jobs in the sluggish economy that would arise because of Kerry-Boxer and Waxman-Markey.

I mentioned what the National Black Chamber of Commerce had said about that. I think that should stand. He stated: Third, climate change and our dependence on foreign oil are a threat to our national security. I agree with that. We are dependent upon foreign countries for our ability to run this machine called America.

Unfortunately, this is a very partisan subject because it is the Democrats who insist on having a moratorium on offshore drilling. The problems we are having right now—we have something, and this came out just last week. The new report from the Congressional Research Service reveals that America's combined recoverable natural gas, oil, and coal reserves are the largest on Earth.

We keep hearing people say: We do not have these reserves. We do. Far greater than Saudi Arabia's; they are No. 3. No. 4 is China. That is not even talking about including America's immense oil shale and methane hydrate deposits. So we have the largest reserves and the capability, I believe, and I will make this statement and, hopefully, someone will refute it because I cannot find anything to the contrary; that is, we are the only country that will not develop its own natural resources.

They say we are dependent on other countries. Well, yes, we are because politically they will not let us develop our own resources. I would say that between the oil and gas and the coal—and of course we are all concerned about nuclear, we want to do everything we can to overcome the obstacle that such a small percentage of our energy comes from nuclear. However, that is not going to be here tomorrow. We need to start working on that now.

I am talking about things where we can get energy produced right in the United States and stop—we could actually stop our dependence on foreign oil just by developing our own natural resources.

Then Senator KERRY talked about 11 former admirals and high-ranking generals who issued a seminal report warning that climate change is a threat multiplier.

They talk about famines and catastrophes. These assertions, which were first made by Al Gore back when he did his science fiction movie, have all been refuted. Consequently, when I hear 11 former admirals and generals out of 4,000, if they could only find 11, I think they have a problem.

The other thing is the fact that the bills would do virtually nothing to stop the pandemics, droughts, floods, and the like. According to an analysis by Chip Knappenberger of Master Resource:

No matter how the economic and regulatory issues shake out, [Waxman-Markey] will have virtually no impact on the future course of the earth's climate.

He went on:

By the year 2050, the Waxman-Markey Climate Bill would result in a global temperature "savings" of about 0.05 degrees Celsius.

That reminds me, back in the 1990s we had an analysis by, at that time, one of the top scientists around. This was done by then-Vice President Al Gore. The guy's name was Tom Wigley, a top scientist. Vice President Gore gave him the chart. He said: If we were to sign on to the Kyoto Treaty, if we complied with its emissions requirements, how much would this reduce the temperature in 50 years?

The answer was 0.07 degrees Celsius. That is not even measurable. He didn't use that afterwards, but we found the report. Nonetheless it was there, and it is quite obvious.

Stop and think about the fact that we have gone through these natural cycles year after year. We have the cycles, and they show what we are going through. It reminds me—and I am old enough to remember—of the middle 1970s when the same publication, Time magazine, and the rest of them, many of the same scientists said we would have to do something about global cooling because another ice age was coming, and we have to address it.

We have to keep in mind there is a lot of money in these statements. People like to think a disaster is occurring because there is a lot of money in it.

That reminds me of something else said this morning by Senator KERRY. He talked about Duke Energy and others. There are about five major corporations in America that joined a group called CAP USA. These were corporations that came in and said: We are stewards of the environment. We want to do something. We embrace cap and trade.

Then we stopped and did an analysis of the five that appeared before the committee only to find that without exception, each one of the five, if we were to have some type of a cap and trade—and it doesn't matter whether it was the Markey bill or the current Kerry-Boxer bill—if we were to do that, we know what the results would be because we have gone through this before over and over again. The idea that we could have something like this and not have the problems come has been disproven for a long period.

Let's go back to the Kyoto Treaty. We actually have had five debates on the Senate floor. We had the Kyoto Treaty, then in 2005 the McCain-Lieberman bill, then the 2003 McCain-Lieberman bill, then the 2008 Warner-Lieberman bill. In each case we had analyses done by the Wharton School of Economics, by MIT, and other groups. They all agreed it would be an expensive proposition. They said it would cost the American public between $300 and $400 billion a year.

I know that is difficult for people to understand. How does that impact me? But we do have an analysis that breaks that down. For the average family, it would cost about $2,000 a year. In my State of Oklahoma, it would be more than that because the price would be higher in the central part of the United States than it would be on the east coast or the west coast.

The cost is going to be there, and it doesn't seem to make too much difference which of the five different approaches we soundly defeated in the past is under consideration. Senator KERRY also claims that India is working on its own domestic legislation to reduce carbon pollution. I already read what their top people have said. They have no intention of doing it. In fact, I have talked to people who are from China, people who are saying: We are sitting back and are kind of hoping maybe America will do this because, if they do, American manufacturers have to go someplace to find their energy.

Since we have rationed it in this country, if we should pass such a cap-and-trade bill, then that would send more manufacturing jobs to places where there is no rationing.

I appreciate very much Lisa Jackson, the new Director of the EPA. Several weeks ago—she was there again this morning—she was on the witness stand. I asked a question: If we were to pass one of these bills like the Waxman-Markey bill, and we were to pass it unilaterally, how much would that reduce emissions globally?

The answer was, it wouldn't. I would go one step further. It will not reduce them unless we include Third World countries, the major emitters—China, India, Mexico, and these other countries. If we don't do that, then we will chase our manufacturing bases where there are no restrictions, and that would have the effect, common sense would dictate, of increasing CO₂ emissions.

We have gone through this now for 10 years. I think it is going to come to a climax in Copenhagen. Once every year the U.N. has this big party, and they have all these countries come in and say what they are going to do to try to stop emission of greenhouse gases.

I had one—I will not mention his name, but he was from the West African country of Benin—who was there the last time I attended one of these conferences. It was in Spain at that time, I believe. Milan, Italy. I went up to this individual and I said: You and I have talked about this before. You know there is no relationship between greenhouse gases and global warming.

He said: Yes, but this is the biggest party of the year. So you are going to have a lot of people to go to Copenhagen in December who really aren't strongly behind the effort of the United Nations.

One last time, it all started with the United Nations, the IPCC, the Intergovernmental Climate Change Program. It started there. They are the ones who are perpetrating this thing. As we get into the debate—and we will have more hearings tomorrow—I hope we will be in a position, before we send a bill to the floor from the Environment and Public Works Committee, to analyze it.

We have called upon the EPA to give us an analysis so that we will have something and we will know more specifically, is this just a warmed-over bill that passed the House, the Waxman-Markey effort, or is this something that is different? According to the EPA, it is about the same. I suggest it is about the same as it was back in 2005, 2003, and back during the Kyoto discussion.

We will move forward. We have seen certain incontrovertible truths that have come up. One is there is no question that if something like this is passed, something like the draft form we are discussing and having hearings on right now, if this should become a reality it would be the largest tax increase in the history of America. The last large tax increase we had was in 1993. It was called the Clinton-Gore tax increase. It increased marginal rates, inheritance taxes, gasoline taxes, capital gains taxes, all the rest. We were pretty outraged at the size of that increase. That was a $32 billion tax increase.

According to all the analyses we are looking at now, this would be 10 times the size of that tax increase.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CARDIN. I ask unanimous consent that Senator KYL be recognized when I have completed my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, let me respond to my friend in regard to the global climate change bill that was introduced by Senators KERRY AND BOXER. Today Chairman BOXER started hearings before the Environment and Public Works Committee on the climate change bill. I agree with my colleague, we want to make sure we get this right. This is an important issue, and we want to take the time necessary to make sure this bill does what it needs to do.

There is a sense of urgency for many reasons. We can look globally at what is happening with climate change and the impact on the stability of countries. We now have climate migrants, those forced out of their homes because of rising sea levels.

I don't have to take my colleagues to Asia or Africa or Europe. I can take them to Maryland on the Eastern Shore, Smith Island is disappearing. The residents are concerned as to what is going to happen to their homes. I can show them in my own State the urgency of dealing with global climate change by talking to watermen who tell me the Chesapeake Bay is warming too quickly. As a result, the sea grasses are not surviving and juvenile crabs cannot survive, affecting the waterman's livelihood. There is a sense of urgency for the sake of our environment, for the sake of America being an international leader on this issue to move forward with global climate change.

Let me offer a reason with which I think everyone will agree: We need an energy policy that not only allows us to lead on the environmental issues but also helps us on the economic front. Clean energy will mean new jobs, good jobs in America. We developed the technology for alternative and renewable energy sources. Let's keep the jobs in America. These are good jobs. This bill means more jobs in America by investing in technology that other countries are now investing more in than America. They understand the future is going to be in wind power and solar power and, yes, in nuclear power. This bill allows us to move forward so we can keep jobs in America.

Lastly, I think everyone will agree that from a strategic point, we need to use less energy and produce more in America. The bill Senator KERRY has brought forward will help us achieve those goals.

I look forward to debating global climate change and energy policy. I hope we can come together for the sake of the Nation, for the sake of the future, and develop an energy policy that not only will keep us safe, will not only help our economy, but will be responsible on international environmental issues and be an international leader.

UNEMPLOYMENT EXTENSION

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, shortly we will be voting on a cloture motion on the motion to proceed to the unemployment compensation issue. Senator DURBIN addressed this issue a few minutes ago. I want to underscore how important it is for us to move forward.

Yesterday I had the opportunity to visit one of our employment offices in Maryland. We have a one-stop location where people looking for work can come and get the services of not only governmental agencies but nonprofit agencies to help them find employment. I have been to these offices in the past in Maryland. I have had a chance to talk to people who are seeking employment.

When I walked into that office yesterday, I was shocked to see how many people were there. It was hard to get through the door. People were coming in desperate to try to find jobs because there are no jobs out there for them to find. They are desperate to be employed, not only for the sake of having income but for the dignity that comes with employment. We have a problem out there. I think we all understand that.

I will give you two people with whom I talked yesterday: Bernice from Anne Arundel County, a resident who worked for a mortgage company until it went out of business, she has been unemployed since September 2008. She is about ready to lose her UI benefits. She talked about how difficult it was for her to talk about this, how difficult it was for her to tell her story. All she wants is a job. She wants the dignity and income of a job.

Charlene from Baltimore talked about being employed by Business Manager for Watermark Media. She lost her job in September 2008 when the company went out of business. She is a very qualified individual. Yet she cannot find employment. Her UI ran out on October 25. Her husband is expected to lose his job this week, and it is possible she will lose her family home.

That is what we are talking about, people in our communities who are unemployed and cannot find employment.

We now know there is about 1.9 million Americans who will run out of unemployment benefits by the end of this year unless we act, unless we take action. That includes about 25,000 Marylanders who will find themselves without any benefits. Currently, there are over 15 million Americans who are unemployed and over 200,000 Marylanders who can't find jobs. We need to act. We need to act on behalf of Bernice and Charlene and the literally hundreds of thousands of Americans who shortly will be running out of their unemployment benefits.

The bill before us is an extension of an additional 14 weeks of benefits for every State in the country. The original bill that came over from the House had a trigger mechanism of 8.5 percent unemployment. I brought this chart to show my colleagues why it is important to extend benefits in every State in this Nation. I think Maryland is a typical State.

Our unemployment numbers may be a little bit lower than the national average. We are in the 7 percent unemployment rate. But look at the orange counties in my State of Maryland: Cecil County, 8.6 percent unemployment; Caroline County, 8.8 percent unemployment; Dorchester County, 10.9 percent unemployment; Somerset County, 9.5 percent; Washington County, one of the growth counties not far from here, 9.4 percent unemployment—some of those people commute to Washington to work—and then Baltimore City, the center of our State, 10.6 percent unemployment.

I thank the leadership for bringing forward an unemployment compensation proposal to extend benefits that apply to every State because we need it in Maryland. I could talk about minority unemployment and the fact that the African-American unemployment rate in this country is around 15 percent. The Latino unemployment rate is around 12 percent. There are pockets of unemployment in all of our States that are at extraordinarily high numbers, and that is why we need to extend the unemployment benefits.

Let me also point out that these are not benefits that aren't paid for. These are insurance benefits. They are paid for by the current workforce. They pay into a fund so we have money available in a recession to help those who lose their jobs and can't find employment. That is why it is called unemployment insurance benefits. It is there for this circumstance.

Is there anyone here who denies that we are not in a tough time if you are looking for a job? We all know that. So now is the time to extend unemployment benefits so people have income in order to be able to literally survive until our economy can rebound.

Let me also point out, I know there are a lot of us who are always looking for bills on which to put amendments.

I understand the frustration of some of my colleagues. Here is a bill, it is a tax bill, let's put a provision on it. Quite frankly, I have a few provisions I would like to see enacted into law. This is not the right bill to do it on. If we put amendments on this bill and let it go back to the House with issues that are unrelated to unemployment compensation, it could take a long time to reconcile those differences.

We already have some differences with the House with regard to the States that qualify. Let's reconcile that quickly so that individuals such as Charlene, who currently are losing their benefits, know soon that they are going to be able to continue to get these unemployment benefits. It is important that we act quickly to get the job done.

One last point for my colleagues. This is important. It is the right thing to do. It is what government is here for—to help people who are literally out of luck because of no fault of their own but the economy. It is what we are supposed to do as far as the right type of social programs to protect people during tough economic times. But there is a tradeoff that helps our economy. This money goes directly back into our economy. Every dollar we pay out in unemployment insurance benefits will come back and have a multiplier effect of more money than we give in benefits in helping our economy grow. So this is the right remedy to help our economy. It is the right thing to do for the 1.9 million Americans who otherwise would lose their benefits by the end of the year.

We have a chance in just a few minutes to move this bill forward so it can be reconciled with the House quickly, and then we can assure the people of our community that, indeed, we responded and provided the appropriate type of relief for those who cannot find employment today.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

AFGHANISTAN TROOP REQUEST

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I believe it is now time for President Obama to move forward with General McChrystal's plan for executing the war in Afghanistan and to fully support his troop request.

The President has correctly called Afghanistan a "war of necessity." The counterinsurgency strategy that he announced last March is a good one, and it has been widely accepted. Having read General McChrystal's August report, I believe it may represent our only chance to successfully implement the March strategy, and it will require the forces that General McChrystal has recommended.

There is no reason to delay the decision regarding a troop increase until after the Afghan election, a point that I will talk about in a moment. Our national security is at stake regardless of the government in Kabul. The outcome of the Afghan runoff election on November 7 will not change our mission there. Whether Abdullah or Karzai wins, our mission will be the same, and time is not on our side. General McChrystal's August report said we have only 1 year. It is now down to 10 months, and it will take time to get troops in-country.

I want the President to know and the American people to know that Republicans will support the President if he follows through on his strategy and provides General McChrystal with the resources he needs. But this must be done in a timely fashion. The strategy can only succeed if it is implemented within the next 10 months and with the resources that have been recommended.

The stakes are high in Afghanistan. When President Obama announced his strategy last March, he said:

If the Afghan government falls to the Taliban or allows al-Qaida to go unchallenged, that country will again be a base for terrorists who want to kill as many of our people as they possibly can.

Mr. President, he was right. The Afghan people are watching. When I was in Afghanistan this past April and visited with tribal elders in Kandahar, for example, it was very clear the Afghan people were looking to the United States for a commitment to their security. If we can't provide that security to them, they will be forced to make accommodations with the Taliban.

Pakistan is also under threat, as Secretary Clinton recently pointed out. She said:

The extremists in Pakistan, whatever their titles or whatever their affiliation, are increasingly threatening the authority of the state.

We all know if nuclear-armed Pakistan were to fall into extremists' hands, the world would face a monumental crisis. Moreover, if Pakistan senses a lack of commitment on our part, how long will it be until it seeks accommodation with al-Qaida and affiliated terrorist groups?

For these reasons, we must not short-change the mission in Afghanistan. General McChrystal was very clear about the need for more troops. In his assessment he said the following:

ISAF, [the International Security Assistance Force]—

Of which the United States is a part—requires an increase in the total coalition force capability and end strength.

During an August speech to the Veterans of Foreign Wars, President Obama made this pledge to our Armed Forces:

I will give you a clear mission, defined goals, and the equipment and support you need to get the job done. That is my commitment to you.

Of course, the President can now demonstrate that commitment by following the advice of his general and providing the resources that have been requested.

What exactly is General McChrystal's plan? Well, I think his assessment demonstrates both a thorough understanding of the Afghan people and the enemy we are fighting. He described the situation as:

Three regional insurgencies [that] have intersected with a dynamic blend of local power struggles in a country damaged by 30 years of conflict.

Not an easy situation, obviously, and he described the enemy as follows:

The conflict in Afghanistan can be viewed as a set of related insurgencies, each of which is a complex system with multiple actors and a vast set of interconnecting relationships among those actors. The most important implication of this view is that no element of the conflict can be viewed in isolation.

In other words, we can't defeat al-Qaida without also addressing its support networks—the Taliban and the so-called Haqqani groups. These are the groups that work with al-Qaida, protect it, and give it a place to hide when we attempt to deal with al-Qaida.

In order to effectively counter this enemy, General McChrystal proposed a comprehensive plan that would effectively implement the President's strategy—improve the performance of the Afghan security forces, prioritize responsible and accountable governance, gain the initiative to reverse the insurgency's momentum, and focus our resources on areas where vulnerable populations are the most threatened.

One of the key principles of General McChrystal's plan is increasing Afghan ownership of its own security. He said in his assessment:

ISAF, with the Afghan National Security Force, must shift its approach to bring security and normalcy to the people and shield them from insurgent violence, corruption, and coercion, ultimately enabling the Afghan government to gain the trust and confidence of the people while reducing the influence of insurgents.

Further, General McChrystal describes this step as necessary to fix what he calls the "crisis of confidence" in the Afghan Government and coalition forces.

General McChrystal has also said that more effective integration and partnership between Afghan and coalition forces will enable a more rapid expansion of the Afghan security force's capacity and responsibility for security. The same method was implemented in Iraq, resulting in a dramatic increase in the quality of Iraqi security forces.

So those who say we should only train more Afghan troops and police present a false choice. General McChrystal proposes a total counterinsurgency strategy with both more Afghan police and military forces; but until they are trained sufficiently to do the job, an adequate and sufficient group of U.S. and NATO forces to both train the Afghan forces and provide the security that is necessary during that interim period of time.

General McChrystal stated in his assessment:

Ideally, the Afghan National Security Forces must lead this fight, but they will not have enough capacity in the near term given the insurgency's growth rate. In the interim, coalition forces must provide a bridge capability to protect critical segments of the population. The status quo will lead to failure if we wait for the ANSF to grow.

That is to say, the National Security Forces of Afghanistan.

So, again, to simply argue we should train more NATO and U.S. security forces in the interim is a false choice. We need to do both. But in order to do the former, we must do the latter; that is to say, we have to increase our own troop strength in order to have the ability to both hold the line and train the Afghan forces who will ultimately be able to provide security for that country.

Now to the matter of time. General McChrystal said in his assessment:

Time matters; we must act now to reverse the negative trends and demonstrate progress.

One of the key points the general made in his assessment was this: He said:

I believe the short-term fight will be decisive. Failure to gain the initiative and reverse insurgent momentum in the near term (next 12 months)—while Afghan security capacity matures—risks an outcome where defeating the insurgency is no longer possible.

As he said, time is of the essence. By the way, this 12-month clock started ticking in August when he submitted his report. So at this point, 10 months remain on the general's stopwatch to turn the tide of this war.

Even if the President makes the right call without further delay and gives General McChrystal the resources he needs to prosecute the strategy the President ordered in March, it will take months before additional troops are available for the mission.

Unlike Iraq where we did have at least a nominal infrastructure in place, in Afghanistan there are few roads and fewer other amenities and facilities with which to support the troops. All of that takes additional time to create.

The troop surge in Iraq didn't turn the tide of that war until 6 months after President Bush announced it. As I said, that was on terrain significantly easier to navigate than Afghanistan's mountainous border region where many of our soldiers are fighting today.

Coalition forces are losing ground to the Taliban with current troop numbers. According to General McChrystal:

Many indicators suggest the overall situation is deteriorating, despite considerable effort by ISAF.

So I submit that President Obama should delay no longer a decision to deploy troops that are necessary within this 12-month timeframe set out by General McChrystal in order to retake the momentum of this war.

Finally, I mentioned earlier the Afghan election should not delay the President's decision. I disagree with the argument some have made that there should be some sort of test to determine whether the Afghan Government will be a reliable partner before we decide to commit additional troops.

The very reason U.S. troops are fighting in Afghanistan is because there is no strong government to maintain security and fight corruption there. The point is to make it more reliable, to influence it to be less corrupt, and to protect the Afghan people so they will reject Taliban control and support their government.

We need to help foster a situation in which the Afghan Government can grow into an institution that can provide for its people. That is what a successful exit strategy will look like. We should not curtail our effort in Afghanistan because of a less-than-ideal political situation today.

President Karzai noted last week:

The [Afghan] institutions are just young toddlers in this democracy that resembles a toddler. It walks and falls. We have to understand that, and we have to accept the Afghan elections in the context of the Afghan situation and the poverty and lack of means in this country.

I add to that that President Karzai and his administration need to be more forceful in helping to bring those institutions about, to ensure that the election is not fraudulent and to ensure that his government is not corrupt and to do what is necessary to gain the trust of the Afghan people.

But are we likely to have more influence in achieving that result by deciding that we can't commit the troops necessary to carry out the recommendations of General McChrystal, all of which will probably push the Afghans further toward the Taliban or by making the point that we are going to help establish the kind of government that is reliable and we are going to do that by engaging in this counterinsurgency strategy with everything that it takes, including the additional troops that are required, and thereby have the kind of influence over the Afghan Government that will bring it into a more reliable situation and enable them to rely on the security we provide rather than making accommodation with the Taliban?

General McChrystal stated in his assessment that one of the key sources of the Taliban's strength is the perception by Afghans that a victory by the Taliban is inevitable. We need to make sure it is not. How can the United States expect to influence matters in Afghanistan if we are viewed as looking for a way out and not putting in the troops General McChrystal has requested?

Very importantly, this same question applies to Pakistan. We ask Pakistan to help us fight the Taliban and al-Qaida and other terrorist groups who are active in Afghanistan. But if we are viewed as an unreliable partner because we are not willing to commit sufficient troops, the people of Afghanistan and Pakistan will hedge their bet with the terrorists and their supporters. That is what has happened there in the past.

When I went there last April and talked to Ambassador Holbrooke before I went, I said: Mr. Ambassador, what message would you like us to try to convey?

He said: Help them understand we are there for the long run. We are not going to cut and run; we are going to stay with them and help them and do whatever is necessary for them to gain control of their country.

I conveyed that message, and I believed it, and I want to believe it. But if we do not make the decisions to carry out this strategy the President announced in March, then the Pakistanis are going to be asking the same questions we did a few months ago: Will you be with us? Will you stand with us or are we going to have to make accommodations with people neither you nor we like very much? One individual said: Why would they make enemies with the people they are stuck with long after we have left? In other words, they don't live in a very good neighborhood. I think that is what General McChrystal's request is about—proof that we are committed to seeing this fight through against the common enemy.

Interestingly, we faced a similar situation in Iraq. If we had opted against the surge in 2007, at a time when Iraq's central government was extremely weak and unable to protect its citizens from the insurgency there, the Iraqi people most likely would not have been able to eventually take ownership of their own security. But they did.

Similarly, if President Obama were not to provide the additional troops General McChrystal needs, I believe we risk allowing Afghanistan to become the country it was on September 10, 2001—a result that none of us want.

In Iraq, the surge created the space for Prime Minister Maliki to take greater control and reduce corruption in the Iraqi Government, and a troop surge in Afghanistan would allow President Karzai—or a new President Abdullah if he were to win—to do the same.

A stable and legitimate government in Kabul is critical to the security of Afghanistan. But the United States cannot hinge its strategy on the current reliability of the Afghan Government, and the President should not wait until after the election to announce his troop decision. To do so would suggest that the United States doesn't have a core national interest of its own in Afghanistan, one based on our security. Yes, we aim to help establish the rule of law in Afghanistan, but our core national interest in that nation does not change based on who is elected in their November 7 runoff.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I believe General McChrystal's assessment really rises above the political fray. It offers an objective description of what is happening on the ground and what resources are needed to turn the tide of this war. This report may represent our only chance to successfully implement the President's March strategy—as I said, a strategy with which I think we all agree—and it will require the forces General McChrystal has recommended.

Regardless of the current status of the Afghan Government, we must foster a situation in which it can grow into a government that can provide basic services, and that will require, first of all, providing security for its people. Our influence over this process will be far greater if we make it clear that we are there to stay until our goals are achieved.

It has been 2 months since General McChrystal sent his assessment to Washington. I respectfully submit my recommendation to the President that he approve this full troop request and that he do so as soon as possible. If he does, as I said, I believe Republicans will be very supportive of his policy.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KAUFMAN). The clerk will call the roll. The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, what is before the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is in morning business.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS EXTENSION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in about 50 minutes the Senate will be called upon to vote on a motion to invoke cloture on a very important piece of legislation extending unemployment benefits for American workers.

Another 7,000 jobless Americans will lose their unemployment insurance today, just as 7,000 did yesterday and 7,000 more will tomorrow. The Republicans have held up this matter for approximately 3 weeks. What does that mean? It means that the first week, 49,000 Americans were people whose unemployment insurance ran out, and they had nowhere to turn. In 2 weeks—the math is simple—it was 98,000 Americans from all over America, including the State of Delaware and the State of Nevada. In 3 weeks, it was 147,000 people, just the same. These are people who are desperate. To say I am disappointed in the way Republicans have shown a complete lack of regard for the people behind those staggering numbers is an understatement. Approximately 150,000 people have been hurt as a result of the intransigence of the Republicans in the past weeks.

The Presiding Officer and the Senator speaking are from States that have small towns and cities; 150,000 is a huge city by Nevada standards. A city of 150,000—that is what has happened these last 3 weeks. That is 150,000 people without anywhere to turn. Their government is not helping them. They have likely begged and borrowed from family as much as they could. Their savings are gone.

We know that when the economy recovers, the unemployment rate is one of the last numbers to rebound. That is what economists call a lagging indicator. That is just the way it is and has always been. So even as the economy begins to turn around, jobs will turn around slower.

That fact, incidentally, is all the more reason for us to fix our economy faster, to stop putting off reforming a broken health insurance system that bankrupts so many families. In America today, people are at the courthouse filing bankruptcy. Last year in America, 750,000 people filed bankruptcy because of medical costs.

How many people do you think filed for bankruptcy in France, Germany, Japan, Switzerland, England, Canada? How many filed for bankruptcy as a result of health care costs? Zero. People say: Oh, socialized medicine. France, Germany, and Japan have private insurance.

Our health care system bankrupts many families. We need to do a lot of things to get us out of this hole we are in. The sooner we do these things, the sooner jobs will come back. But they are not back yet. The people of Nevada and others across the Nation are hurting. Unemployment is at a 26-year high in our country and at an alltime high in Nevada. We became a State in 1864. It is the highest unemployment rate we have ever had.

These good, hard-working people lost their jobs most of the time through no fault of their own, and many lost their health care along with it. They are having trouble finding new jobs, and so they are burning through whatever savings they have, if they have any, if they put away for their old age or children.

Some of these unemployed Americans are beginning their careers, some were at the prime of their careers, and some are scrambling to finish, with dignity, what they earned over decades of hard, honest work.

This is the Democrats' simple proposal. It is not very complicated at all: Let's support those families who have been the victims of this recession. They need to put food on the table, send their children to school, and pay the ever-rising medical bills.

If you want to do something that will help jump-start the economy, that will stimulate the economy, how about giving these people who are out of work and have been out of work for an extended period of time a check? What are they going to do with it? They are going to spend it. Why? Because they have to.

We are not asking for much, and we have the money to help them. Over the years, workers have contributed a little bit each paycheck to fund a safety net in the event they lost their jobs. It was insurance against unemployment. That is what it is called—unemployment insurance. That is exactly what has happened. Now they want to take that money—money set aside for this purpose—to keep them afloat until they land the next job.

We have a proposal—a paid-for proposal, one that does not add a dime to the deficit—to extend to workers their unemployment insurance by up to 14 weeks and up to 20 weeks in States such as Nevada that have been hit the hardest. We have the power and the ability to do it. That is what we should do. It is the right thing to do.

The Republican response to that idea might sound familiar. It is a word we have heard from them more and more in recent days. The Republican response in helping the unemployed is two letters: No. Republican Senators from Louisiana, Alabama, Arizona, and Kentucky are among those saying no to helping unemployed citizens in Louisiana, Alabama, Arizona, and Kentucky. I doubt that is the kind of legislating their constituents had in mind when they sent them to the U.S. Capitol and asked them to be their voice in Congress.

When we first brought up this bill 3 weeks ago, Republicans decided they would rather fight a partisan fight, as they have been doing now, than help unemployed men and women in their own States. This unemployment is not targeted to just a few States. The Republicans decided to make a political statement by demanding completely irrelevant amendments, amendments not germane, amendments that have little, if anything, to do with unemployment or even the economy, generally, and they decided the political statement was more important than helping constituents afford to pay bills. That is wrong. It is an outrage.

That day when we started this legislation, when we first brought it to the Senate floor to help unemployed Americans, Republicans said no. The sad part about it, they are still saying no. I hope, after all we have been through and when that vote comes at 6 o'clock, we will have some brave souls step across the aisle and help us get this done.

When we started this process 3 weeks ago, they said no. The next morning, 7,000 people woke up without the unemployment insurance on which they had been counting. The next week we tried again. By now, we have 49,000 people who have lost their unemployment benefits. Once again, Republicans said no. Again, 7,000 Americans lost the help they needed to get by. Then, last week, we tried again. Once again, the Republicans said no. Again, we had a week of 7,000 people losing their work benefits.

In the days since Republicans first said no to helping unemployed Americans, we have about 150,000 who have lost the relief they desperately need. Today, while Republicans continue to waste time, to stall so we cannot get things done here, another 7,000 will be added to the approximately 150,000 who have already lost their unemployment insurance. If we do not act, that number, by the end of the year, will be 2 million. I wonder how much higher does that number have to climb before Republicans put people ahead of their partisan excuses.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 7 minutes on the Republican time of the time allotted after 5:30 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUDAN POLICY

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I wish to draw the attention of the body today to a policy initiative that was put forward by the Obama administration last week. It is on a topic a lot of people have been involved in for a long period of time. It involves Sudan, Darfur, and the genocide taking place in Sudan. It now involves new policy steps the administration is proposing to take to build a relationship and overtures to the Sudanese Government.

This is engagement to the extreme because President Bashir of Sudan is an indicted war criminal whose government is conducting a genocide, as declared by the Congress of the United States and the administration. For the first time in the history of America, we would be engaging an individual who is both an indicted war criminal, being pursued by the International Criminal Court, and also who has conducted a genocide in Darfur. We are talking about: OK. We need to start maybe engaging, and now there have been visas issued to top members of President Bashir's inner circle to come into the United States and discussion of a carrot-and-stick approach to Sudan, when he is running a genocide in Darfur and is an indicted war criminal. This is atrocious on its face. It is engagement to the extreme. It is wrong, and it would be harmful to long-term U.S. interests.

What happens the next time an individual is involved in genocide? Do we say: If you start behaving a little less worse on your genocide, we will start to give you some carrots to help you out. What about the next indicted war criminal, do we say: If you are a little less bad, if you only kill 500 a day instead of 1,000, we are going to start offering you carrots instead of sticks in this approach. This undermines the moral authority of the United States. It is the wrong thing to do.

I wish to give a couple historical examples.

Toward the end of World War II, Heinrich Himmler, who was No. 2 in charge—but after Hitler committed suicide was No. 1 in charge—of Nazi Germany reached out to the Allied commander, General Eisenhower, and wanted to start negotiating with him: If he could be allowed to live, they might negotiate some sort of settlement. Eisenhower completely ignored it and treated him like the war criminal he was. Can you imagine if we would have started negotiating with Himmler at that time?

Let me give some more recent examples. What about Serbian leader Karadzic, the so-called "Butcher of Bosnia," accused of slaughtering hundreds of thousands of innocent people? The State Department did not say: If you are a little less bad and don't kill quite as many people, we will start negotiating with you. They didn't say that. They put a $5 million reward out to anybody who gave us information leading to his capture, and he currently resides in a prison in The Hague.

What about Charles Taylor, the "Butcher of Liberia," who ran on an election slogan—listen to this: "He killed my pa, he killed my ma, but I will vote for him." That was his election slogan. Taylor was directly involved in coordinating and supporting unthinkable atrocities over many years and, after ceding power, was indicted for war crimes and crimes against humanity.

Here is an indicted war criminal. Did we say to him: OK. Mr. Taylor, if you start not killing as many people, we will negotiate with you? Of course not. What the Congress did was offered and passed legislation giving a $2 million reward for Taylor's capture, and he now sits in a prison in The Hague.

It would be unthinkable for us, in those circumstances, to say: OK. We will start negotiating with these indicted war criminals, butchers of their own people, and we are going to start working with you because you are going to act a little less bad. Yet that is what we are talking about with President Bashir, an indicted war criminal, conducting a genocide in Darfur that we have declared.

We have had hundreds of thousands of people across America going to rallies to save Darfur, and now we are talking about a carrot-and-stick approach with him?

I say no. I say we cannot do this, and if we do this in this circumstance, what about future genocidal regimes? What about future indicted war criminals? Is there any standard upon which the United States can or will stand at those points in time or could we, at that point in time, if we do this in this particular case?

I am all for getting some form of movement on the north-south agreement so the south can vote next year and will probably vote to secede and form its own country in the south. I think that is prudent and wise, after many years of civil war and the negotiations that took place to get a north-south agreement. But I do not at all think you can trade that for us negotiating with this indicted war criminal.

I urge my colleagues not to support this effort on behalf of the administration to engage a genocidal regime in Khartoum.

I appreciate my colleagues' attention. I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, what is the pending business before the Senate?

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION EXTENSION ACT OF 2009—MOTION TO PROCEED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will be 30 minutes of debate prior to a vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to H.R. 3548, with the time equally divided and controlled between the leaders or their designees.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, the unemployment rate is now 9.8 percent. Before long economists expect it to top 10 percent. That means nearly 15 million Americans have lost their jobs—15 million. That is 15 million people looking for work. About 5 million people have been looking for work for more than 6 months. There are about 3 million job openings. That is 15 million people chasing 3 million jobs.

We are in what folks call the "Great Recession." Real people are facing real hardships every day. On September 15 of this year, the Finance Committee held a hearing on unemployment insurance benefits and where we would go from there. Senators discussed the effects of the current condition on beneficiaries, the business community, and the State unemployment systems. We considered proposals to support unemployed workers through the continuing recession.

A recent edition of the Federal Reserve's Beige Book reported that the economy is still stabilizing. Unfortunately, the labor market still remains weak. Companies are being cautious about adding permanent staff. Instead, they are asking more from their existing staff.

We need to continue our work to create jobs, and we also need to help our neighbors who are looking for work. That is what we did in the Recovery Act. We need to act on behalf of unemployed Americans and their communities. In helping our unemployed neighbors, we also can help to keep open the neighborhood grocery store and the neighborhood gas station. That is how unemployment insurance benefits not just people who are unemployed but helps communities.

In helping our unemployed neighbors, we also help to keep houses out of foreclosure. In helping our unemployed neighbors, we also help our economy and ourselves.

The House of Representatives passed a bill to give an additional 13 weeks of benefits to unemployed people in States with unemployment rates of 8½ percent or more. That is what the House did. I commend our colleagues in the House for their rapid response. But Leader REID and I want to make sure all Americans who have exhausted their benefits during these tough times get help.

Today we are joined by Senator REED of Rhode Island, Senator SHAHEEN, Senator DODD, and a total of 38 Senators in all in offering an amendment to the House bill. Our amendment would give 14 additional weeks of benefits to unemployed people who exhaust their benefits no matter what State they live in—14 additional weeks of benefits for everyone. Our amendment would also give 6 additional weeks of benefits on top of that to unemployed people who exhaust their benefits in States with 8½ percent unemployment or more. So 14 weeks to all States, and then an additional 6 weeks in those States where unemployment is 8½ percent or more.

The total cost of our package is $2.4 billion and paid for with an extension of the Federal unemployment tax, or FUTA, until June 30, 2011.

Today we have a chance to lend support to unemployed Americans. In so doing, we have a chance to help our economy and ourselves. But first we have to proceed to the bill. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation and vote for the motion to invoke cloture.

Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Hampshire, Mrs. SHAHEEN, who is one of the main cosponsors of the amendment. She is the real strong advocate of getting this legislation passed and a strong advocate for the people of her State, and I deeply appreciate her work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I thank Senator BAUCUS for his very kind remarks and for his leadership to do something to help those workers who are unemployed across this country who are losing their benefits and don't know where to turn.

As Senator BAUCUS has said, the Senate is about to vote on a motion to advance the Unemployment Compensation Extension Act. I am disappointed that we still haven't been able to pass this extension, but this evening we can vote to overcome a procedural hurdle and take an important step forward.

As Senator BAUCUS has said, this is critical legislation that will help nearly 2 million jobless Americans who are about to have the safety net pulled out from under them. The bill provides 14 additional weeks of unemployment insurance to jobless workers in all 50 States, and in those States where unemployment is the highest, they would receive an additional 6 weeks.

For 3 weeks, this critical legislation has been delayed for nothing more than political reasons. In that time, more than 100,000 Americans have exhausted their unemployment benefits. The American people should be outraged about these delays. I hope today those in opposition will end their obstruction, will stop the political games, and will help us pass this bill to stimulate our economy and help those Americans who, through no fault of their own, can't find a job.

I am confident that when we finally get to the vote, this extension will garner the broad bipartisan support it deserves. That is because unemployment isn't a New England problem or a Montana problem or a southern problem. It isn't a Republican, an Independent, or a Democratic problem. It is a hardship that hits every community in every State in every part of our country.

I recently visited an unemployment office in Manchester, NH, and I heard from people who, despite their best efforts, are unable to find a job. They want to get back to work, but they face one of the worst job markets since the Great Depression. I want to share this afternoon a couple of stories I heard from unemployed workers and those who have called my office pleading for help.

Carry-Ann is a 39-year-old single mother from Concord. She wrote that she has been out of a job for more than a year, and she has been relying on unemployment to support her two teenagers and to pay the mortgage. Carry-Ann qualified for a job training program, and she has been training for a career in health care.

That is appropriate, given the other debate that is going on in this body.

She has been training for that career in health care because she knows that is a sector that needs workers. But if her unemployment runs out, she wrote, she will lose her home and she will have to relocate, which means she would not be able to finish her job training program and will lose the prospects of getting a good new job.

Carry-Ann isn't asking for a handout. She is trying to gain self-sufficiency for herself and for her family by getting educated and gaining the skills she needs to build a career. But she will be unable to do so unless we pass this extension.

Richard is a 43-year-old from Somersworth, NH, one town over from where I live in the southern part of the State. He explained that he has been looking for work for over a year. He has been using his unemployment benefits to support his family. Richard used to have a management job, and at interviews he has been told time after time that he is overqualified and he would not be considered. Employers think he will leave their job as soon as better opportunities open.

But Richard has a family to support today and his benefits are going to run out soon. He is like many Americans looking for work right now. If we do nothing, he could lose his credit, his car, and his home.

Extending unemployment benefits will help Richard and Carry-Ann and their families and tens of thousands of others like them across this country. It will help them weather this storm.

As I have said many times, when we extend unemployment, we are not just helping jobless workers, we are also helping the businesses that provide the goods and services that unemployed workers need. People collecting unemployment spend their benefits immediately on necessities to keep their families going, which means these dollars get into communities almost as soon as the check arrives.

Economists say, dollar for dollar, extending unemployment benefits is one of the most cost-effective actions we can take to stimulate the economy. Passing this extension of unemployment benefits is the right choice for unemployed workers and for our communities.

Mr. President, this extension is long overdue. We owe it to those Americans who are out of work to pass this extension.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, if Senator SHAHEEN wishes to take more time, I am more than willing to extend it to her.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. I have finished, but I thank my colleague very much, and I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank the Senator very much.

I say to my colleagues that now is a good time to speak on extending unemployment insurance, now that we are on the motion to proceed. We will vote fairly quickly, but if Senators do want to come over to express their views, now is the time to do so.

Pending the arrival of Senators, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time during the quorum call be equally divided between both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask the Presiding Officer, how much time is remaining on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 7 minutes for each side.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota as much time as he wishes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Montana.

The issue before us is very simple. When you have a severe economic downturn of the type we have had, a very deep recession, that is when you try to employ the economic stabilizers that help people who lose their jobs—unemployment insurance. The extension of unemployment insurance has almost always been nearly automatic because everyone understands the urgency of doing it. When many additional people have been unemployed for lengthy periods of time, you try to reach out and help.

The cloture vote tonight is on a motion to proceed, and it so demonstrates the dysfunction of the Senate these days. The motion to proceed is filibustered by the other side when we are trying to help some folks who have lost their jobs. Many have lost hope during a steep economic decline. We can't even get cooperation on a motion to proceed to try to address the extension of unemployment benefits. It is pretty unbelievable to me.

Last fall, I watched some of the same folks who were objecting to that rush to the starting line to see if we couldn't give hundreds of billions of dollars to the biggest financial firms in the country that ran this economy into the ditch—let's give them a lot of money. But you know what, not when it comes to helping the folks at the bottom, those who have lost their jobs.

By the way, last month 263,000 Americans lost their jobs; last month—263,000. Just pick one out of 263,000 and think of somebody coming home from work and saying: Honey, I have lost my job; to say to their husband or wife: I have lost my job. It wasn't because I did a bad job, it was because they cut back at the plant or the office, so now I am unemployed. It was not their fault. The question is, What do we do when this happens? Normally when this happens, we extend unemployment benefits to those who are facing very difficult times.

This is the steepest, deepest economic decline since the 1930s. This country has been in very serious economic trouble for some long while now. It nearly fell off a cliff last October. So this action now should be almost automatic. But nothing, even common sense, is automatic around here because we are now struggling, at the end of today, a Tuesday, to get a cloture vote on a motion to proceed to do something that everybody knows we have a responsibility to do. It is almost unbelievable.

I want to say how frustrating it is that we do not get any cooperation on anything to move forward things that are of an urgent nature. I suppose this is not urgent, perhaps, unless you are unemployed and trying to figure out: How do we get the money to eat? How do we get the money to pay rent? How do we get the money to provide the funding for the kids to go to school? It is probably not urgent for people who are not in that situation, but if you are in that situation during a very severe economic downturn, this is urgent. We need to extend these benefits.

My colleague from Montana and his committee have worked on this and brought it to the floor. It would have been nice if they had gotten just a little cooperation so we would not have to go through this, file a cloture motion, wait 2 days for it to ripen, then 30 hours postcloture. What is the deal? I don't understand at all. Dig your heels in when it comes to trying to help the folks who need help the most and say the sky is the limit when it comes time to help those who have the most? That turns logic on its head, in my judgment.

My hope is that at 6 o'clock tonight when we vote, we will have the 60 votes. We should never have been put in the position to have to try to break a filibuster on a motion to proceed. We are not even on the bill; it is a motion to proceed to the bill. What an unbelievable lack of cooperation on something that is so essential during a steep economic downturn, to help those whose jobs have been washed away, who desperately need help for themselves and their families. That is what we are trying to do.

I hope that perhaps following the disposition of this—and I hope we will get this done—we will get some additional cooperation on things that really matter.

I appreciate the time given me by the Senator from Montana.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask consent that the time be equally charged to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. SHAHEEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, pursuant to rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to Calendar No. 174, H.R. 3548, the Unemployment Compensation Extension Act of 2009.

Harry Reid, Patty Murray, Mark Udall, Roland W. Burris, Mark Begich, Byron L. Dorgan, Frank R. Lautenberg, Amy Klobuchar, Bill Nelson, Jack Reed, Carl Levin, Jeff Bingaman, Bernard Sanders, Sherrod Brown, Sheldon Whitehouse, Barbara Boxer, Kirsten E. Gillibrand, Richard J. Durbin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call is waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the motion to proceed to H.R. 3548, the Unemployment Compensation Extension Act of 2009, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are mandatory under the rule. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

PENSION FUNDING

Mr. CASEY. Madam President, we are in the midst of a terrible economic recession. Over the course of the last year, we have lost millions of jobs. In Pennsylvania, for example, by comparison, the unemployment rate percentage is lower than a lot of States, but in many parts of our State it is at a historic high, or at least a 15-year high. What that means in Pennsylvania is that we have just about a half a million people out of work, even though some States have a much higher percent in their unemployment rate. So we have a half million people out of work.

The fact that we just had this vote on unemployment insurance is vitally important. It helps us meet a real need across the country. So we have an economic crisis. People are living through the loss of a job, the loss of a home, or both—in some ways, the loss of their hopes and their dreams. Unfortunately, even as we get through this, even as we begin to recover, and even as we are dealing with a longer term challenge to our economy, which is health care—which is one of the reasons I think we have to pass a bill this year—there are other threats we have to bear in mind. One of them involves not just businesses but, by extension, workers and families. I speak of the funding of pension plans.

A lot of businesses across the country—a lot of workers have come to Washington to remind us that this pension issue is a looming problem for a lot of businesses. I happen to be a member of the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee, and that is one of the issues we must deal with, and I think we will be dealing with, in the near term.

Millions of Americans, not just throughout our history our recent history but especially now, rely upon any kind of retirement vehicle, and one of those, of course, is a good pension plan. We need to give people in the twilight of their life the kind of security that comes with a pension plan. We also have to make sure workers have that same peace of mind as they make their way through this very difficult economy.

In 2006, the Pension Protection Act was passed by Congress. The main purpose of that act was to strengthen pension plans by implementing tougher funding rules. Most of the rules under the act took effect in 2008, and at that time the stock market was in turmoil. The combination of stronger pension funding rules in a chaotic stock market caused almost all pension plans to sustain a net loss, in essence.

I wish to turn to one chart that depicts that. One study released by Mercer stated that the combined loss for pension plans totaled $469 billion for 2008. We can see the differential from 2007 where there was an overfunding of some $60 billion. So in 2007, $60 billion up; the next year lost over $400 billion, down; to be exact, $469 billion in terms of where we were in 2007 versus where we were at the end of 2008. Based upon this loss, pension plans have a funding deficit, a differential of $409 billion—$409 billion in 2008. In 2009, the pension funding deficit is expected to increase yet again despite recent recoveries in the stock market.

We have to do what we must to strengthen our economy and to give our workers and their families and our businesses some peace of mind. That might be the best way to describe it. So this is more than just a looming crisis, more than just a problem in the near term, it is a problem we have to deal with right now, in the next couple of months.

Recently, the House Ways and Means Committee held a hearing that focused on pension funding relief. They gave an example at the hearing. NCR Corporation, a 125-year-old global technology company, testimony at this hearing provided a specific example of how company pension plans have been affected. NCR, this global technology company, had a pension plan that was 110 percent funded as of January 1, 2008.

So at the beginning of 2008, they were funded at 110 percent. They were in good shape, for the most part. The funding status, as those in the business know, is based on the amount of assets compared to the amount of liabilities. By January 1, 2009, just 1 year later, this same company, due to unprecedented losses in the market, had its funding percentage drop to 75 percent. So in 1 year, this company goes from 110 up of funding to 75 percent, a huge loss.

This is what it means in terms of dollars. The percentages only tell part of the story. Prior to the market loss, this company, NCR Corporation, expected to make payments totaling $200 million over a 7-year period. That is what they could see down the road: $200 million over that period. Instead, that payment has increased to $1.5 billion—$1.5 billion looking out ahead of them instead of $200 million. So $200 million becomes $1.5 billion, and that is what we are going to see unless Congress provides some relief.

We have heard from countless companies across Pennsylvania and across the country that are in the same situation as this one example, the NCR company. The companies are not requesting a bailout. Let me say that again: They are not requesting a bailout. The companies are not requesting the American taxpayer to assist directly. The companies are simply asking Congress to extend the time period of recognizing the losses incurred during the market downturn.

In 2009—I will point to another study—Watson Wyatt reported that there would be $32 billion in payments to fund pension plans in America. Without any relief from Congress in 2010, that amount will increase to over $90 billion and increase to $146 billion in 2011. So we go from, in 2009, $32 billion, to 2010, and it keeps going up until we get to 2011, just 2 years from now, $146 billion to pension plans in America.

American companies that are already struggling to break even today will have to decide between funding their pension plans and cutting jobs. In order to avoid losing more jobs, at a time when the national unemployment rate is 9.8 percent, Congress should act swiftly to extend the amortization period for recognizing certain losses in pension plan assets, including other temporary provisions that will provide funding relief. Any relief should apply to single- and multiemployer pension plans.

As companies recover from the economic recession, we should not discourage economic growth by requiring a pension payment that will require companies to cut jobs. Instead, Congress should provide targeted relief—targeted relief—that will enable companies to spread out the losses over an extended period of time, which will allow capital to be invested in activities that will promote growth.

Ultimately, the intention of any pension funding relief legislation is to ensure the survival of the pension plan system. The American people have a right to expect that pension plans be stable and secure for their future. In Congress, we should work to implement any legislation that provides a healthy pension system just in the same way we provide security with a reformed health care system. In exchange for ensuring a good pension, a secure pension, and a better health care system—that is what we are saying to the American workers and to American businesses—it is important that we be very honest with people, with our workers.

We are going to say to our workers: We want you to compete in a world economy; we want you to go out and get more education; we want you to enhance your skill level; we want you to have a broader-based skill level so that when the economy takes a turn or market forces lead to a change in the industry that you are employed in or lead to a change in our economy, you will have the skill and the knowledge and the training and the education to be able to adjust.

So we encourage people all the time to get more education. We encourage people all the time to enhance their skill level. But we will be more successful in achieving that goal and we will be more honest with workers if we can say to them: You don't have to worry as much as you used to about your pension or about health care.

That should be a large part of the bargain, a large part of the agreement we make with our workers and our businesses because, if we are going to compete in a world economy, if we are going to have a highly skilled workforce that does that for us over time, we cannot say to people: Go out and improve your skills, go out and get more education, but we are not sure we can help you with your retirement security or your health care security. We can't ask them to do three things at one time. We can't ask them to go to work every day and worry about whether they are going to have health care coverage or worry about whether their kids are going to be covered or worry about whether there is going to be a preexisting condition that will bar them from treatment or coverage.

We can't allow a situation to persist where we say to them: Go to work every day and continue to improve your skills and maybe get more education, but we are not sure we can help you on health care and, by the way, your pension plan might be at risk in the future; it may not be there for you when you retire.

We have to do something in a very strategic and focused way to take away some of that worry on health care and on pension and retirement security. If we do that, if we lessen that anxiety for people, I believe we are going to have a much more successful strategy as it relates to telling people and encouraging our workers to get more education, to get a heightened degree of training. If we do that, we are going to have a much stronger long-term economy. But we can't ask people to do it all themselves—to bear the burden of health care, to bear the burden of retirement security, and to bear the full burden of their education, their training, and their skill development.

So that is why this pension issue, even in the midst of a health care debate, is so critically important.

Madam President, I yield the floor and note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UDALL of Colorado). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VOTE EXPLANATION—DOD AUTHORIZATION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss my decision to vote no for the fiscal year 2010 National Defense Authorization Act.

Throughout my career I have always been a staunch supporter of our men and women that serve our Nation. Their courage in the face of danger to preserve our freedom is inspiring. And my vote on the Defense authorization bill does not change that belief at all. In fact, I was pleased to include legislation in this year's bill that will require the Secretary of Defense to review and establish a long-term plan to sustain the solid rocket motor industrial base. This review will be vital to ensure we maintain a robust industrial base and our ultimate strategic defense for decades.

I have always been impressed with the great working relationship I have enjoyed with my esteemed colleagues on the Armed Services Committee and their professional staffs. My vote by no means diminishes my respect for the Armed Forces.

Unfortunately, the congressional majority has decided to needlessly inject controversy into what should have been a bipartisan effort to fund and support our troops in a time of war. I am, of course, speaking of the decision to attach the unrelated hate crimes provisions to this legislation. For one reason or another, the Democrats have once again decided that, even with their overwhelming majorities in the House and Senate, the Federal hate crimes legislation cannot be debated and passed on its own merits and that, instead, this divisive legislation should become part and parcel with our efforts to provide our military with much-needed resources.

I have long been opposed to this approach with regard to hate crimes. Make no mistake, none of us are indifferent to the problems associated with violence motivated by prejudice and violence. However, I believe that the approach provided for in this bill would needlessly expand the powers of the Federal Government at the expense of the States. Worst of all, it would do so without a demonstrated need. Indeed, a few months back, I asked the Attorney General—who supports this legislation, by the way, in a hearing whether there was any evidence of a trend that these crimes were going unpunished at the State level. He stated without reservation that there was no such evidence and that, in fact, the States were, by and large, doing a fine job in this area. If that is the case, what is the purpose of this legislation? Why are we going to expand the law enforcement powers of the Federal Government into what are essentially State crimes when these crimes are already being handled adequately by the States? I have yet to hear a decent answer to that question.

Now, some of us may be tempted simply to vote for the Defense authorization bill with the hate crimes provisions attached simply because the balance of the bill is good and worthy of support. Well, I worry that if we go along with this now, what will they add to so-called “must pass” bills in the future? I believe that when it comes to funding our troops, we should do our best to speak in a unified voice. By taking this path, it seems that the majority would rather make a political statement than offer the military our bipartisan support. For that, I am greatly disappointed.

OBJECTION TO S. 1782

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I would like to alert my colleagues that I intend to object to any unanimous consent agreement for the consideration of S. 1782, the Federal Judiciary Administrative Improvements Act of 2009. This legislation will increase the Federal outlays for the judicial branch and does not have an offset to the spending increases.

In particular, I object to two provisions in S. 1782. First, this legislation will increase Federal expenditures by allowing senior executives in the Federal courts, the Federal Judicial Center, and the Sentencing Commission to carry over more annual leave days from 1 year to another. The bill would change the current allowance, 240 hours—30 days—to 720 hours—90 days. This provision is a limited benefit to a number of senior executives and will cost Federal taxpayers millions of dollars.

Second, the legislation includes a provision increasing the salaries of the four division directors at the Federal Judicial Center. This provision would increase the salary from Executive Schedule V—$139,600—to Executive Schedule IV—$149,000. While this is only a slight increase to the spending outlays, it is the wrong message to send the American taxpayers when nearly 10 percent of the workforce is unemployed.

Americans across the country are tightening their belts and finding ways to save money. Social Security beneficiaries are fighting to stretch their dollars because they will not see a cost-of-living increase for 2010 for the first time in nearly three decades. To expand benefits in the judicial branch for a chosen group of senior executives is the wrong thing to do when everyone is making sacrifices and millions of Americans are looking for work.

If the Senate majority insists on offering S. 1782 for consideration notwithstanding my objection, at the very least, I will insist on offering S. 657, the Sunshine in the Courtroom Act as an amendment and request a rollcall vote. Unless this amendment is afforded a vote, I will continue to object to any unanimous consent agreement regarding S. 1782. In this time of financial uncertainty, we should not be providing senior executives in the judiciary increased benefits absent legislation that will bring some sunshine to the courts by allowing media coverage of court proceedings.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO NORTH CAROLINA WWII VETERANS

• Mrs. HAGAN. Mr. President, I am proud to recognize a group of 102 World War II veterans from the Triad region of North Carolina who are traveling to Washington, DC, on October 28 to visit the memorials and monuments that recognize the sacrifices of our Nation's invaluable servicemembers.

The Triad Flight of Honor sponsored this trip to the Nation's Capital for surviving World War II veterans in the Triad area. Our veterans will visit the World War II, Korean, Vietnam, and Iwo Jima Memorials.

This will be the second Triad Flight of Honor trip. The organization flew their inaugural group of veterans to Washington, DC, on October 3, 2009. I had the honor of visiting with that group of veterans when they returned to Greensboro, NC. I was joined by my father-in-law, MG (Ret) Charles T. Hagan, Jr., U.S. Marine Corps Reserve, a World War II veteran, just before he died. Two more Triad flights for the spring of 2010 have already been scheduled, and hundreds of veterans in the area are hoping to participate.

World War II was the defining period for a generation that bravely answered the call to serve our country. Young men and women, driven to protect America, enlisted in droves. Unfortunately, too many of those brave servicemembers met an untimely death on the battlefields of Europe and the South Pacific. More than 400,000 American servicemembers were slain during the course of the long war, and over 60 million people worldwide were killed, including 40 million civilians. The Allied Forces' ultimate victory is a testament to the brave soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines who put their lives on the line to fight for liberty and freedom.

This week, 102 Triad veterans will see the memorials dedicated to their service. I thank the Triad Flight of Honor for making these trips a reality.

I ask the Senate to join me in honoring these brave veterans who are true North Carolina heroes.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. JAMES MICHAEL SMITH

• Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, today I recognize Dr. James Michael Smith on his inauguration as the 16th President of Northern State University in Aberdeen, SD. Dr. Smith comes to Northern State from Bowling Green State University where he had served as vice president for economic development. He is a veteran organizational leader, with experience leading educational institutions at both the K-12 and postsecondary levels. Prior to joining the senior administrative team at BGSU, Dr. Smith was dean of the School of Education at Indiana University South Bend. Dr. Smith also served in administrative capacities at West Texas A&M and Butler University. He will begin his tenure with the knowledge that Northern State University has been named for the third year in a row to the U.S. News and World Report's Top Public Undergraduate Institutions in the Midwest. Dr. Smith has said NSU is “excited to once again be named to this prestigious list, and will continue to build momentum at Northern State by focusing on new programs, expanded technology and increased graduate offerings.” Everyone in the region is excited to help him join in these goals.

At the investiture of Dr. Smith, history will literally be at his fingertips. The pen used in this ceremony will be the same one used to swear in the 15 Northern presidents before him. It was used to sign the bill that created the Northern Normal and Industrial School in 1901 and it went up in the space shuttle Discovery in 1991.

I would like to offer Dr. James Smith the very best as he begins his tenure with one of South Dakota's finest institutions of higher learning.●

REPORT RELATIVE TO THE CONTINUATION OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY RELATIVE TO THE ACTIONS AND POLICIES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF SUDAN AS DECLARED IN EXECUTIVE ORDER 13067 OF NOVEMBER 3, 1997—PM 37

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1622(d)) provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent to the Federal Register for publication the enclosed notice stating that the Sudan emergency is to continue in effect beyond November 3, 2009.

The crisis constituted by the actions and policies of the Government of Sudan that led to the declaration of a national emergency in Executive Order 13067 of November 3, 1997, and the expansion of that emergency in Executive Order 13400 of April 26, 2006, and with respect to which additional steps were taken in Executive Order 13412 of October 13, 2006, has not been resolved. These actions and policies are hostile to U.S. interests and pose a continuing unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States. Therefore, I have determined that it is necessary to continue the national emergency declared with respect to Sudan and maintain in force the sanctions against Sudan to respond to this threat.

BARACK OBAMA.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 27, 2009.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

At 11:03 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 1471. An act to expand the boundary of the Jimmy Carter National Historic Site in the State of Georgia, to redesignate the unit as a National Historical Park, and for other purposes.

H.R. 1641. An act to amend the National Trails System Act to provide for a study of the Cascadia Marine Trail.

H.R. 2806. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the boundary of the Stephen Mather Wilderness and the North Cascades National Park in order to allow the rebuilding of a road outside of the floodplain while ensuring that there is no net loss of acreage to the Park or the Wilderness, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

At 6:44 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mrs. Cole, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

H.R. 1209. An act to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins in recognition of the celebration of the establishment of the Medal of Honor in 1861, America's highest award for valor in action against an enemy force which can be bestowed upon an individual serving in the Armed Services of the United States, to honor the American military men and women who have been recipients of the Medal of Honor, and to promote awareness of what the Medal of Honor represents and how ordinary Americans, through courage, sacrifice, selfless service and patriotism, can challenge fate and change the course of history.

H.J. Res. 26. A joint resolution proclaiming Casimir Pulaski to be an honorary citizen of the United States posthumously.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bills were read the first and the second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 1641. An act to amend the National Trails System Act to provide for a study of the Cascadia Marine Trail; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

H.R. 2806. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the boundary of the Stephen Mather Wilderness and the North Cascades National Park in order to allow the rebuilding of a road outside of the floodplain while ensuring that there is no net loss of acreage to the Park or the Wilderness, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read the second time, and placed on the calendar:

S. 1927. A bill to establish a moratorium on credit card interest rate increases, and for other purposes.

S. 653

At the request of Mr. CARDIN, the name of the Senator from California (Mrs. BOXER) was added as a cosponsor of S. 653, a bill to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins in commemoration of the bicentennial of the writing of the Star-Spangled Banner, and for other purposes.

S. 1002

At the request of Mr. CASEY, the name of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DURBIN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1002, a bill to provide for the acquisition, construction, renovation, and improvement of child care facilities, and for other purposes.

S. 1055

At the request of Mrs. BOXER, the names of the Senator from New York (Mrs. GILLIBRAND), the Senator from Washington (Mrs. MURRAY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KERRY), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. BEGICH) and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) were added as cosponsors of S. 1055, a bill to grant the congressional gold medal, collectively, to the 100th Infantry Battalion and the 442nd Regimental Combat Team, United States Army, in recognition of their dedicated service during World War II.

S. 1147

At the request of Mr. KOHL, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KERRY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1147, a bill to prevent tobacco smuggling, to ensure the collection of all tobacco taxes, and for other purposes.

S. 1273

At the request of Mr. DORGAN, the names of the Senator from California (Mrs. BOXER) and the Senator from New York (Mr. SCHUMER) were added as cosponsors of S. 1273, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for the establishment of permanent national surveillance systems for multiple sclerosis, Parkinson's disease, and other neurological diseases and disorders.

S. 1301

At the request of Mr. MENENDEZ, the name of the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1301, a bill to direct the Attorney General to make an annual grant to the A Child Is Missing Alert and Recovery Center to assist law enforcement agencies in the rapid recovery of missing children, and for other purposes.

S. 1400

At the request of Ms. STABENOW, the name of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. ENSIGN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1400, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to make permanent the depreciation classification of motorsports entertainment complexes.

S. 1410

At the request of Mrs. GILLIBRAND, her name was added as a cosponsor of S. 1410, a bill to establish expanded learning time initiatives, and for other purposes.

S. 1411

At the request of Mrs. GILLIBRAND, her name was added as a cosponsor of

S. 1411, a bill to amend title V of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to encourage and support parent, family, and community involvement in schools, to provide needed integrated services and comprehensive supports to children, and to ensure that schools are centers of communities, for the ultimate goal of assisting students to stay in school, become successful learners, and improve academic achievement.

S. 1422

At the request of Mrs. MURRAY, the name of the Senator from Florida (Mr. LEMIEUX) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1422, a bill to amend the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 to clarify the eligibility requirements with respect to airline flight crews.

S. 1423

At the request of Mrs. BOXER, the name of the Senator from Washington (Mrs. MURRAY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1423, a bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to require coverage under the Medicaid Program for freestanding birth center services.

S. 1425

At the request of Mr. DURBIN, the name of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1425, a bill to increase the United States financial and programmatic contributions to promote economic opportunities for women in developing countries.

S. 1442

At the request of Mr. BINGAMAN, the name of the Senator from California (Mrs. BOXER) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1442, a bill to amend the Public Lands Corps Act of 1993 to expand the authorization of the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, and the Interior to provide service-learning opportunities on public lands, establish a grant program for Indian Youth Service Corps, help restore the Nation's natural, cultural, historic, archaeological, recreational, and scenic resources, train a new generation of public land managers and enthusiasts, and promote the value of public service.

S. 1518

At the request of Mr. BURR, the name of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. BEGICH) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1518, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to furnish hospital care, medical services, and nursing home care to veterans who were stationed at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina, while the water was contaminated at Camp Lejeune.

S. 1535

At the request of Mrs. FEINSTEIN, the name of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1535, a bill to amend the Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956 to establish additional prohibitions on shooting wildlife from aircraft, and for other purposes.

S. 1536

At the request of Mr. SCHUMER, the name of the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROCKEFELLER) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1536, a bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to reduce the amount of Federal highway funding available to States that do not enact a law prohibiting an individual from writing, sending, or reading text messages while operating a motor vehicle.

S. 1576

At the request of Mrs. SHAHEEN, the name of the Senator from Minnesota (Ms. KLOBUCHAR) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1576, a bill to require the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a carbon incentives program to achieve supplemental greenhouse gas emission reductions on private forest land of the United States, and for other purposes.

S. 1606

At the request of Mr. WHITEHOUSE, the name of the Senator from Louisiana (Ms. LANDRIEU) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1606, a bill to require foreign manufacturers of products imported into the United States to establish registered agents in the United States who are authorized to accept service of process against such manufacturers, and for other purposes.

S. 1610

At the request of Ms. CANTWELL, the name of the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROCKEFELLER) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1610, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to repeal the shipping investment withdrawal rules in section 955 and to provide an incentive to reinvest foreign shipping earnings in the United States.

S. 1612

At the request of Mrs. LINCOLN, the name of the Senator from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1612, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to improve the operation of employee stock ownership plans, and for other purposes.

S. 1619

At the request of Mr. DODD, the name of the Senator from Louisiana (Ms. LANDRIEU) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1619, a bill to establish the Office of Sustainable Housing and Communities, to establish the Interagency Council on Sustainable Communities, to establish a comprehensive planning grant program, to establish a sustainability challenge grant program, and for other purposes.

S. 1628

At the request of Mr. UDALL of Colorado, the name of the Senator from Minnesota (Ms. KLOBUCHAR) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1628, a bill to amend title VII of the Public Health Service Act to increase the number of physicians who practice in underserved rural communities.

S. 1685

At the request of Mr. SANDERS, the name of the Senator from New York

(Mrs. GILLIBRAND) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1685, a bill to provide an emergency benefit of $250 to seniors, veterans, and persons with disabilities in 2010 to compensate for the lack of a cost-of-living adjustment for such year, and for other purposes.

S. 1780

At the request of Mrs. LINCOLN, the names of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) and the Senator from Louisiana (Ms. LANDRIEU) were added as cosponsors of S. 1780, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to deem certain service in the reserve components as active service for purposes of laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs.

S. 1789

At the request of Mr. DURBIN, the name of the Senator from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1789, a bill to restore fairness to Federal cocaine sentencing.

S. 1821

At the request of Mr. KOHL, the name of the Senator from Florida (Mr. NELSON) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1821, a bill to protect seniors in the United States from elder abuse by establishing specialized elder abuse prosecution and research programs and activities to aid victims of elder abuse, to provide training to prosecutors and other law enforcement related to elder abuse prevention and protection, to establish programs that provide for emergency crisis response teams to combat elder abuse, and for other purposes.

S. 1825

At the request of Mr. LIEBERMAN, the name of the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1825, a bill to extend the authority for relocation expenses test programs for Federal employees, and for other purposes.

S. 1832

At the request of Ms. LANDRIEU, the name of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1832, a bill to increase loan limits for small business concerns, provide for low interest refinancing for small business concerns, and for other purposes.

S. 1834

At the request of Mr. AKAKA, the name of the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. FEINGOLD) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1834, a bill to amend the Animal Welfare Act to ensure that all dogs and cats used by research facilities are obtained legally.

S. RES. 312

At the request of Mr. DURBIN, the names of the Senator from California (Mrs. FEINSTEIN), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. LAUTENBERG) and the Senator from California (Mrs. BOXER) were added as cosponsors of S. Res. 312, a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate on empowering and strengthening the United States Agency for International Development (USAID).

S. RES. 316

At the request of Mr. MENENDEZ, the name of the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. REED) was added as a cosponsor of S. Res. 316, a resolution calling upon the President to ensure that the foreign policy of the United States reflects appropriate understanding and sensitivity concerning issues related to human rights, ethnic cleansing, and genocide documented in the United States record relating to the Armenian Genocide, and for other purposes.

S. RES. 317

At the request of Ms. KLOBUCHAR, the names of the Senator from California (Mrs. BOXER) and the Senator from North Carolina (Mrs. HAGAN) were added as cosponsors of S. Res. 317, a resolution supporting the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month and expressing the sense of the Senate that Congress should continue to raise awareness of domestic violence in the United States and its devastating effects on families and communities, and support programs designed to end domestic violence.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. AKAKA:

S. 1931. A bill to enhance the ability of Congress to oversee matters pertaining to nuclear nonproliferation identified in the findings and recommendations of the December 2008 Report of the Commission on the Prevention of Weapons of Mass Destruction Proliferation and Terrorism, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Strengthening the Oversight of Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 2009. This legislation will enhance the ability of Congress to oversee nuclear nonproliferation shortcomings that were identified in the Commission on the Prevention of Weapons of Mass Destruction, WMD, Proliferation and Terrorism's Commission December 2008 report.

Just last month, President Obama chaired a session of the United Nations Security Council, where the Security Council unanimously cosponsored and adopted Resolution 1887, which seeks to "create the conditions for a world without nuclear weapons . . . in a way that promotes international stability." Among other actions, the Security Council called on Nations to minimize the use of highly enriched uranium, strengthen export controls on sensitive nuclear technologies, improve nuclear security practices and standards, strengthen efforts to counter the threat of nuclear terrorism, and support the International Atomic Energy Agency's, IAEA, ability to verify the uses of nuclear materials and facilities.

The proliferation of WMD is among the greatest threats facing national and international security. We need to commit ourselves to strengthening our nuclear nonproliferation efforts and to take the actions supported by the United Nations Security Council and the Commission.

The bill I am introducing today would require an annual report by the President's Coordinator for WMD Proliferation and Terrorism to address the Commission's findings regarding United States nuclear nonproliferation efforts. The report will provide an assessment of IAEA capabilities to detect possible military diversions of nuclear materials; will address actions taken to upgrade the physical security of civilian nuclear facilities in the United States; will identify the measures taken to minimize the use of weapons usable highly enriched uranium; will document the steps taken to implement the Energy Development Program under the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978; will compare the security standards at civilian nuclear facilities to those at military facilities; and will detail what the U.S. is spending to promote civilian nuclear energy abroad.

The challenges of nuclear proliferation are global in nature and require sustained international collaboration. This bill would further our international efforts by requiring an additional report on the progress of United States Government cooperative efforts with the Director General of IAEA to examine how IAEA could better meet its nuclear safeguard goals; promote the transparency of foreign visitors to safeguarded sites; acquire and implement near-real-time surveillance at sensitive sites; use fees to fund inspections; and require advance notice and analysis of transfers of dual-use nuclear technologies.

I have long been a proponent of improving our nonproliferation efforts. Last month, I introduced the Energy Development Program Implementation Act, S. 1675, to support non-nuclear, alternative energy development in developing countries. In addition to this, I called for the Government Accountability Office to examine proliferation risks in IAEA's Technical Cooperation Program and chaired numerous hearings on improving our Nation's nonproliferation capabilities. We should remember that nuclear technology that can be used for peaceful uses may in some cases be used to support dangerous, clandestine programs.

I believe that promoting greater international cooperation toward nonproliferation is crucial. This bill would make the U.S. an even stronger partner in these efforts and enhance the ability of Congress to help tackle the dangers of nuclear proliferation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1931

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Strengthening the Oversight of Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 2009".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) APPROPRIATE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—The term "appropriate congressional committees" means—

(A) the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, the Committee on Armed Services, the Select Committee on Intelligence, and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate; and

(B) the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, the Committee on Armed Services, the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives.

(2) COMMISSION.—The term "Commission" means the Commission on the Prevention of Weapons of Mass Destruction Proliferation and Terrorism established by section 1851 of the Implementing Recommendation of the 9/11 Commission Act of 2007 (Public Law 110-53; 121 Stat. 501).

(3) COORDINATOR.—The term "Coordinator" means the President's Coordinator for the Prevention of Weapons of Mass Destruction Proliferation and Terrorism established by section 1841(b)(1) of the Implementing Recommendation of the 9/11 Commission Act of 2007 (50 U.S.C. 2931(b)(1)).

(4) DEPUTY COORDINATOR.—The term "Deputy Coordinator" means the Deputy United States Coordinator for the Prevention of Weapons of Mass Destruction Proliferation and Terrorism established under section 1841(b)(2) of the Implementing Recommendation of the 9/11 Commission Act of 2007 (50 U.S.C. 2931(b)(2)).

(5) HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM.—The term "highly enriched uranium" means uranium that contains at least 20 percent of the uranium isotope 235.

(6) IAEA.—The term "IAEA" means the International Atomic Energy Agency.

(7) SPECIAL NUCLEAR MATERIAL.—The term "special nuclear material" has the meaning given the term in section 11(aa) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2014(aa)).

SEC. 3. REPORT ON UNITED STATES NUCLEAR NONPROLIFERATION EFFORTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, the Coordinator shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees an unclassified report, with classified annexes as necessary, on the findings and recommendations of the Commission described in subsection (b).

(b) CONTENT.—The report required under subsection (a) shall include the following:

(1) A description of the financial incentives the United States Government used during the previous year to promote civilian nuclear energy abroad, including the types, amounts, and recipients of such financial incentives.

(2) A description of the actions the United States Government has taken for improving the secure civilian storage of, and minimizing the use and export of, weapons usable highly enriched uranium during the previous year, and the amount the United States Government spends annually to fuel United States civilian reactors that use highly enriched uranium.

(3) A description of the actions that have been taken by the United States Government to implement title V of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978 (22 U.S.C. 3261 et seq.) during the previous year and any obstacles pertaining to its implementation with recommended actions.

(4)(A) A description of the steps the United States Government has taken during the previous year to upgrade the physical security of civilian nuclear facilities in the United States that store or handle special nuclear material.

(B) A comparison of the current physical security standards used at civilian nuclear facilities in the United States that store or handle special nuclear material to those standards used by the United States Armed Forces to secure such materials.

(5) A United States Government assessment of the capabilities of the IAEA, completed in consultation with all relevant United States Government agencies, including the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, including—

(A) the ability of IAEA to meet its own timely detection inspection goals;

(B) the ability of IAEA to afford timely detection of possible military diversions and whether or not the IAEA has met its own timely detection inspection goals; and

(C) recommendations for whether and how the IAEA should update its definitions of how much special nuclear material is needed to create a nuclear bomb and how long it takes to convert such special nuclear material into nuclear bombs.

(c) ABSENCE OF THE COORDINATOR AND THE DEPUTY COORDINATOR.—The President shall submit the report required under this section if neither the Coordinator nor the Deputy Coordinator have been appointed pursuant to section 1841(b)(3) of the Implementing Recommendation of the 9/11 Commission Act of 2007 (50 U.S.C. 2931(b)(3)).

SEC. 4. REPORT ON UNITED STATES WORK WITH IAEA ON NUCLEAR NONPROLIFERATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Coordinator shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees an unclassified report, with classified annexes as necessary, on the findings and recommendations of the Commission under subsection (b).

(b) CONTENT.—The report required under subsection (a) shall include details about the progress of the work of the United States Government with the IAEA Director General to—

(1) establish a safeguards user fee, whereby countries with inspected facilities would be assessed a fee to help cover the costs of IAEA inspections;

(2) assess whether the IAEA can meet its own inspection goals, whether those goals afford timely detection to account for a bomb's worth of special nuclear material, whether there are situations in which achieving those goals is not possible, and what corrective actions, if any, might help the IAEA to achieve its inspection goals;

(3) promote transparency at suspect sites and to encourage IAEA member states to maintain a registry, made available to other IAEA members upon request, of all foreign visitors at safeguarded sites;

(4) provide for the acquisition and implementation of near-real-time surveillance equipment in the use of safeguards, including at sites where nuclear fuel rods are located; and

(5) require that the transfer of all items on the Nuclear Suppliers Group dual-use and trigger lists be reported to the IAEA in advance and develop a system to process and analyze the information.

(C) ABSENCE OF THE COORDINATOR AND THE DEPUTY COORDINATOR.—The President shall submit the report required under this section if neither the Coordinator nor the Deputy Coordinator have been appointed pursuant to section 1841(b)(3) of the Implementing Recommendation of the 9/11 Commission Act of 2007 (50 U.S.C. 2931(b)(3)).

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the reporting requirements under sections 3 and 4 for fiscal year 2010 and each subsequent year thereafter.

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself and Mr. BENNET):

S. 1932. A bill to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to allow members of the Armed Forces who served on active duty on or after September 11, 2001, to be eligible to participate in the Troops-to-Teachers Program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to be joined by Senator MICHAEL BENNET in introducing the Post-9/11 Troops to Teachers Enhancement Act. This legislation would allow more veterans and school districts to participate in the Troops to Teachers program. In addition to expanding the program, the proposed bill would create an advisory board that would be charged with improving awareness and participation of the program, ensuring that the program meets the needs of our schools and veterans. I hope that my colleagues in the Senate will also support this important piece of legislation.

In 1994, Congress authorized the Department of Defense, DOD, to oversee a new national program, Troops to Teachers, which was designed as a Transition assistance program for retiring or separating members of the military to obtain their teaching credentials and place these teachers in schools throughout the country. The program was reauthorized by Congress in 1999. That reauthorization transferred responsibility for oversight and funding from the DOD to the Department of Education and authorized $10,000 bonuses to participants who agreed to teach in “high-need” schools. Troops to Teachers was later incorporated and reauthorized under the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001. Since its inception, over 11,000 teachers have been hired by school districts across the Nation, of which many are non-traditional first-time teachers.

Teaching is among the most honorable professions in our society. I believe we should encourage military veterans to enter the teaching profession and that this bipartisan bill would further enhance the Troops-to-Teachers program. Simply put, the proposed legislation would reduce the years of military service requirements from 6 to 4, extend the eligibility to all schools that receive Title I funds, and create an advisory board that would coordinate and make recommendations to Congress in regards to the program.

Current eligibility guidelines for the Troops to Teachers require that members of the military have 6 years of service and that members of the guard and reserve have 10 years of service with a commitment to serve an additional 3 years. The requirement of 6 years active duty is leaving many single enlistment contract 4 year veterans and/or Guard members out of consideration. Lowering the required years of service would expand eligibility and create a larger pool of potential teachers for this program.

Under the current Troops to Teachers program, participants who agree to teach for 3 years in a “high need” schools are eligible to receive a $5000 stipend to offset the cost of teacher certification. The proposed legislation would extend the eligibility for the stipend to any eligible teacher who agrees to teach 3 years in a school that is in a district receiving Title I funds. The proposed bill would retain the optional bonus of $10,000 which is available to individuals who take jobs in low-income schools. This legislation would result in a 49 percent in the number of eligible schools for the program. For my home State of Arizona, over 600 additional schools would become eligible to participate in the program.

A recent GAO Report revealed that although Troops to Teachers is a successful program, it suffers from a lack of coordination and oversight. To remedy this concern, the proposed legislation would create an advisory board that consists of a representative from the Department of Defense, the Department of Education, and representatives from state offices and veteran’s service organizations to make recommendations on ways to improve and expand the program.

Our veterans make excellent candidates to impart the virtues of serving to a cause to the next generation and instill the value of learning as a means to self-improvement and much nobler ends. Their unique experiences bring a more diverse teaching environment to our children and grandchildren.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. WHITEHOUSE, and Mr. UDALL of New Mexico):

S. 1933. A bill to establish an integrated Federal program that protects, restores, and conserves natural resources by responding to the threats and effects of climate change, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Natural Resources Climate Adaptation Act. I am pleased that Senators WHITEHOUSE, BAUCUS, and TOM UDALL have joined me as original cosponsors.

The science is clear that climate change is happening and numerous scientific reports as well as the everyday experience of many Americans—demonstrate that the impacts have already begun to affect ecosystems across the country. This bill recognizes that quick action is needed to insure the long-term viability of ecosystems on which our communities as well as our fish and wildlife depend. It will support and enable Federal and State agencies and other interested parties to address the negative impacts of climate change on our natural resources in the most effective possible ways.

We know that healthy, functioning ecosystems are vital to human health, economic viability, and fish and wildlife populations. I believe that we are at a critical juncture in protecting our valuable natural resources. In solving the climate change problem we must ensure the well-being of our natural world if we are to have a thriving economy and a healthy environment. This is the reason I am introducing this bill.

This is not a problem that is hypothetical. Climate change impacts are irrevocably affecting our natural world and the health of our communities today, and these impacts will increase. We must act now.

We often forget that healthy ecosystems are essential to human as well as wildlife needs. They are necessary to provide us, for example, with a clean and abundant drinking water supply, clean air to breathe, and a well-functioning economy in addition to habitat for a diversity of fish, wildlife, and plant species. Not to mention a place to take our children fishing, and to enjoy the personal inspiration of the natural world.

My home State of New Mexico is a dry State and the challenges associated with climate change are already impacting our land and our water supplies. There are already many competing demands for our limited water resources which will only be heightened by the effects of climate change. Existing threats to our public lands such as wildfires and deforestation may become more prevalent. New Mexico’s Bandelier National Park has recently been identified as one of the “25 National Parks in Peril” due to climate change related impacts and other treasures within our State may also be in jeopardy of degradation if actions are not taken to protect them.

Our landowners, ranchers, water managers, and State officials are working to evaluate and mitigate the current and expected impacts of a warming climate on our State’s natural resources and water supply. For instance, in 2005 the New Mexico Climate Change Council and Advisory Group prepared a report summarizing the potential impacts of climate change in New Mexico and the State Engineer's office prepared an additional report on the impacts of climate change on the water supply and water management strategies. These reports are being used to guide State officials in addressing these issues. In addition, New Mexico has joined other western States to form the Western Regional Climate Initiative to coordinate efforts at reducing greenhouse gases.

The legislation introduced today seeks to complement existing natural resources-related programs in New Mexico and other States across the country. This legislation supports and facilitates the development and dissemination of scientific research on climate change between Federal agencies, States, Indian tribes and interested stakeholders. This ongoing research will in turn play a significant role in guiding these entities in the management of our natural resources.

This bill also establishes several forums to encourage effective coordination and communication in creating a Federal strategy and subsequent Federal and State adaptation plans that will help natural resources adjust to a changing climate. Finally, the Act provides additional funding for existing Federal and State wildlife conservation programs to be used exclusively for adaptation-related activities.

The Natural Resources Climate Adaptation Act follows on the good work of several of my colleagues in both the House and the Senate. Chairman RAHALL and Subcommittee Chairman GRIJALVA have developed legislation in this area, and their own adaptation bill, H.R. 2192, was incorporated into the broader cap-and-trade legislation that passed the House of Representatives earlier this year.

Senators KERRY and BOXER have adopted provisions similar to this bill in their climate legislation at the request of two leaders on the Environment and Public Works Committee: Senators BAUCUS and WHITEHOUSE. The legislation I am introducing today is complementary to the work that has already been done. My cosponsors and I share the same goal of making sure natural resources adaptation is included in any climate change legislation that comes before the Senate.

Many Americans already recognize the critical need for this legislation. A coalition of over 600 diverse groups has written to Congress describing the current and potential negative impacts of climate change on our natural resources and urging us to include language in any climate bill to address those impacts. By way of example, the groups in this coalition include environmental organizations, local Rod & Gun Clubs, fisheries coalitions, scientific research groups, and religious groups.

If we fail to act to address the impacts of climate change on our American landscape, the negative effects will be felt by all of us. I am committed to working through this legislation and other means to ensure that we do what is necessary to protect our precious natural resources from one of the greatest challenges ever faced.

I would like to thank Senators BAUCUS, WHITEHOUSE, and TOM UDALL for their leadership on this issue and their cosponsorship of this bill. I look forward to working with them and our colleagues to pass legislation to carry out this important purpose.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1933

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Natural Resources Climate Adaptation Act".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to integrate Federal agency activities to respond to ongoing and expected impacts of climate change (including, if applicable, ocean acidification, drought, invasive species, flooding, and wildfire) by protecting, restoring, and conserving the natural resources and associated ecosystem services of the United States; and

(2) to provide financial support and incentives for authorized programs, strategies, and activities to protect, restore, and conserve natural resources and associated ecosystem services in response to threats and effects of climate change.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the Natural Resources Adaptation Science Advisory Board established by section 4(e)(1).

(2) COASTAL STATE.—The term "coastal State" has the meaning given the term "coastal state" in section 304 of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1453).

(3) CORRIDORS.—The term "corridors" means areas that—

(A) provide connectivity, over different time scales, of habitats or potential habitats; and

(B) facilitate terrestrial, marine, estuarine, and freshwater fish, wildlife, or plant movement necessary for migration, gene flow, or dispersal, to respond to the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change.

(4) ECOSYSTEM SERVICES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term "ecosystem services" means the provision, by a healthy ecosystem, of natural resources to improve human health and livelihood.

(B) INCLUSIONS.—The term "ecosystem services" includes—

(i) a clean and abundant water supply;

(ii) carbon storage;

(iii) biodiversity;

(iv) pollination services;

(v) wildlife habitat;

(vi) recreation; and

(vii) a scenic or historic landscape.

(5) HABITAT.—The term "habitat" means the physical, chemical, and biological properties that fish, wildlife, or plants use for growth, reproduction, survival, food, water, or cover.

(6) INDIAN TRIBE.—The term "Indian tribe" has the meaning given the term in section 4 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b).

(7) NATURAL RESOURCES.—The term "natural resources" means land, wildlife, fish, air, water, estuaries, plants, habitats, and ecosystems.

(8) NATURAL RESOURCES ADAPTATION.—The term "natural resources adaptation" means the protection, restoration, and conservation of natural resources so that natural resources become more resilient, adapt to, and withstand the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change.

(9) PANEL.—The term "Panel" means the Natural Resources Climate Change Adaptation Panel established under section 5(a).

(10) PLAN.—The term "plan" means a natural resources adaptation plan completed under section 7(a)(1).

(11) PROGRAM.—The term "program" means the National Fish and Wildlife Habitat and Corridors Information Program established by the Secretary under section 4(d)(1).

(12) RESILIENCE; RESILIENT.—The terms "resilience" and "resilient" mean—

(A) the ability to resist or recover from disturbance; and

(B) the ability to preserve diversity, productivity, and sustainability.

(13) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(14) STATE.—The term "State" means—

(A) a State of the United States;

(B) the District of Columbia;

(C) American Samoa;

(D) Guam;

(E) the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands;

(F) the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico; and

(G) the United States Virgin Islands.

(15) STATE PLAN.—The term "State plan" means a State natural resources adaptation plan prepared by a State under section 8(a).

(16) STRATEGY.—The term "Strategy" means the Natural Resources Climate Change Adaptation Strategy developed under section 6(a).

SEC. 4. NATURAL RESOURCES ADAPTATION SCIENCE AND INFORMATION.

(a) COORDINATION.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary and the Secretary of Commerce (acting through the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration) (referred to in this section as the "Secretaries"), working with all other relevant Federal agencies, shall establish procedures for coordinating among Federal agencies the development and dissemination of science and information necessary to address the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change on natural resources.

(b) DEVELOPMENT AND DISSEMINATION OF SCIENCE.—The Secretaries shall—

(1) conduct and sponsor research, and facilitate the coordination of research among Federal agencies, to develop scientific strategies and mechanisms for natural resources adaptation;

(2) make available to Federal agencies, and other interested governmental or private entities, technical assistance to address the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change on natural resources; and

(3) assist Federal agencies in the development of natural resources adaptation plans required by section 7.

(c) SURVEY.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 5 years thereafter, the Secretaries and the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue a climate change impact survey, in coordination with other relevant Federal agencies, that—

(1) identifies natural resources considered likely to be adversely affected by climate change;

(2) includes baseline monitoring and ongoing trend analysis; and

(3) in consultation with States and Indian tribes and with input from stakeholders, identifies and prioritizes necessary monitoring and research that is most relevant to the needs of Federal natural resource managers to address the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change and natural resources adaptation.

(d) WILDLIFE HABITAT AND CORRIDORS INFORMATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary, in cooperation with the States, Indian tribes, and other Federal land managers, shall establish a program to be known as the “National Fish and Wildlife Habitat and Corridors Information Program”.

(2) PURPOSES.—The purposes of the program are—

(A) to develop with States and Indian tribes a comprehensive national geographic information system database of maps, models, data, surveys, informational products, and other geospatial information regarding fish and wildlife habitat and corridors that—

(i) is based on consistent protocols;

(ii) takes into account regional differences; and

(iii) uses available geographical information system databases and other tools, including the National Biological Information Infrastructure maintained by the Secretary and nongovernmental organizations; and

(B) to facilitate the use of the database described in subparagraph (A) by Federal, State, local, and tribal decisionmakers to incorporate qualitative information on fish and wildlife habitats and corridors at the earliest practicable stage for use in—

(i) prioritizing and targeting natural resources adaptation strategies and activities, including strategies and activities that enhance the ability of species to respond to shifting habitat; and

(ii) avoiding, minimizing, and mitigating the impacts on fish and wildlife habitat and corridors when locating energy development, water, transmission, transportation, and other land use projects;

(3) FINANCIAL AND OTHER SUPPORT.—The Secretary may provide support to the States and Indian tribes, including financial and technical assistance, for activities that support the development and implementation of the program.

(4) CONSULTATION.—In consultation with States and Indian tribes, the Secretary shall make recommendations on the manner by which the information collected and managed under the program may be incorporated into relevant Federal and State plans that affect fish and wildlife, including—

(A) land management plans;

(B) State comprehensive wildlife conservation strategies; and

(C) applicable conservation plans of Indian tribes.

(e) NATURAL RESOURCES ADAPTATION SCIENCE ADVISORY BOARD.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretaries and the Secretary of Agriculture shall—

(A) not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, establish and appoint the members of a Natural Resources Adaptation Science Advisory Board; and

(B) on an ongoing basis, coordinate the activities of the Board.

(2) MEMBERSHIP.—The Board shall be composed of not fewer than 10 and not more than 20 members—

(A) who have expertise in fish, wildlife, plant, aquatic, coastal and marine biology, ecology, hydrology, climate change effects, or other relevant scientific disciplines;

(B) who represent a balanced membership among Federal, State, tribal, and local representatives, and diverse interests, including institutions of higher education and relevant nongovernmental organizations and conservation organizations; and

(C) at least ½ of whom are recommended by the President of the National Academy of Sciences.

(3) DUTIES.—The Board shall—

(A) advise all relevant Federal agencies on the state of the science regarding—

(i) the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change; and

(ii) scientific strategies and mechanisms for natural resources adaptation; and

(B) identify and recommend priorities for ongoing research needs on the issues described in subparagraph (A).

(4) AVAILABILITY TO THE PUBLIC.—The advice and recommendations of the Board shall be made available to the public.

(f) NATIONAL CLIMATE CHANGE AND WILDLIFE SCIENCE CENTER.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish the National Climate Change and Wildlife Center within the United States Geological Survey.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—In collaboration with Federal and State natural resources agencies and departments, Indian tribes, institutions of higher education, and other partner organizations, the Center shall—

(A) assess and synthesize current physical and biological knowledge relating to the impacts of climate change on fish, wildlife, plants, and associated habitat;

(B) prioritize scientific gaps in the knowledge in order to forecast the ecological impacts of climate change on fish, wildlife, and plants at the ecosystem, habitat, community, population, and species levels;

(C) develop and improve tools to forecast, adaptively manage, and monitor the impacts of climate change on fish, wildlife, plants, and associated habitats, including predictive models, and risk assessments; and

(D) develop capacities for synthesizing data and for sharing standardized data and methodology.

SEC. 5. NATURAL RESOURCES CLIMATE CHANGE ADAPTATION PANEL.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall establish a Natural Resources Climate Change Adaptation Panel.

(b) DUTIES.—The Panel shall—

(1) develop the Strategy; and

(2) serve as a forum for interagency consultation on the implementation of the Strategy.

(c) MEMBERSHIP.—The Panel shall be composed of—

(1) the Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration;

(2) the Chief of the Forest Service;

(3) the Director of the National Park Service;

(4) the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service;

(5) the Director of the Bureau of Land Management;

(6) the Director of the United States Geological Survey;

(7) the Commissioner of Reclamation;

(8) the Director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs;

(9) the Director of the Minerals Management Service;

(10) the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(11) the Administrator of the Federal Emergency Management Agency;

(12) the Chief of Engineers; and

(13) the heads of other Federal agencies, as determined by the President.

(d) CHAIRPERSON.—The Chair of the Council on Environmental Quality shall serve as the Chairperson of the Panel.

SEC. 6. NATURAL RESOURCES CLIMATE CHANGE ADAPTATION STRATEGY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Panel shall develop a Natural Resources Climate Change Adaptation Strategy.

(b) DEVELOPMENT.—In developing and revising the Strategy, the Panel shall—

(1) base the strategy on the best available science;

(2) develop the strategy in close cooperation with States and Indian tribes;

(3) coordinate with other Federal agencies, as appropriate;

(4) consult with local governments, conservation organizations, scientists, private sector interests, and other interested stakeholders; and

(5) provide public notice and opportunity for comment.

(c) CONTENTS.—The Strategy shall—

(1) assess the vulnerability of regions and types of natural resources to climate change, including short-term, medium-term, long-term, and cumulative impacts;

(2) describe current research and monitoring activities at the Federal, State, tribal, and local level related to—

(A) the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change on natural resources; and

(B) scientific strategies and mechanisms for natural resources adaptation;

(3) identify and prioritize research and data needs; and

(4) provide direction to Federal agencies, and make guidance available to States, Indian tribes, local governments, and other interested parties for use in responding to the impacts of climate change, including—

(A) actions that Federal agencies should implement through their natural resources adaptation plans and recommendations for actions that States, Indian tribes, local governments, and other interested parties may implement to promote natural resources adaptation; and

(B) a timeline for implementation of the Strategy; and

(5) describe specific mechanisms for ensuring communication and coordination—

(A) among Federal agencies; and

(B) between Federal agencies and State natural resource agencies, Indian tribes, interested private landowners, conservation organizations, and other countries that share jurisdiction over natural resources with the United States.

(d) REVISION.—After the Panel adopts the initial Strategy, the Panel shall review and revise the Strategy every 5 years to incorporate—

(1) new information regarding the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change on natural resources; and

(2) new advances in the development of strategies and mechanisms for natural resources adaptation.

SEC. 7. FEDERAL AGENCY NATURAL RESOURCES ADAPTATION PLANS.

(a) DEVELOPMENT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of development of the Strategy, each Federal agency with representation on the Panel shall—

(1) complete a natural resources adaptation plan for that Federal agency;

(2) provide opportunities for public review and comment on the plan;

(3) coordinate with the plan of each other Federal agency with representation on the Panel; and

(4) submit the plan to the President for review and submission to Congress.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—Each plan shall—

(1) implement the Strategy;

(2) include a timeline for implementation of the plan;

(3) describe and prioritize proposed natural resources adaptation actions for natural resources managed or impacted by activities authorized by the Federal agency;

(4) describe how the Federal agency will modify or establish other plans, programs, activities, or actions in accordance with applicable authority, if necessary, to implement the plan;

(5) provide for the inclusion of climate change and impact data in natural resources management decisions;

(6) establish monitoring protocols—

(A) to assess the effectiveness of the natural resources adaptation actions taken by the Federal agency pursuant to the plan; and

(B) to update those actions to respond to monitoring results, other new information, and changing conditions;

(7) establish a process for providing written guidance to Federal natural resource managers for implementing the natural resources adaptation actions identified in the plan;

(8) identify and assess gaps in data and information useful in developing the plan; and

(9) establish protocols to collect, integrate, and share standardized climate change and impact data with Federal, State, tribal, and nongovernmental organizations, private landowner partners, and the general public.

(c) PRESIDENTIAL REVIEW AND SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.—

(1) REVIEW.—Not later than 30 days after the date of submission of a plan to the President, the President shall—

(A) review the plan for consistency with the requirements of this Act; and

(B) if consistent, submit the plan to Congress in accordance with this subsection, together with a statement confirming the consistency of the plan with this Act.

(2) INCONSISTENCY.—If the President finds a plan of a Federal agency to be inconsistent with this Act, the President shall direct the agency to submit a revised plan not later than 60 days after the finding.

(3) SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.—The President shall submit plans determined to be consistent with this Act to—

(A) the Committee on Natural Resources of the House of Representatives;

(B) the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate;

(C) the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate; and

(D) any other committees of the House of Representatives or the Senate with principal jurisdiction over the Federal agency.

(d) IMPLEMENTATION.—On submission by the President to Congress, each Federal agency shall, pursuant to and consistent with applicable authority, implement the plan.

(e) REVISION AND REVIEW.—Not less than every 5 years, each Federal agency with representation on the Panel shall review and revise the plan of the Federal agency to incorporate the best available science regarding—

(1) the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change on natural resources; and

(2) the scientific strategies and mechanisms for natural resources adaptation.

SEC. 8. STATE NATURAL RESOURCES ADAPTATION PLANS.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—In order to be eligible for funds under section 9, not later than 1 year after the development of the Strategy, each State shall prepare a State natural resources adaptation plan to address the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change on natural resources within the State.

(b) CONTENTS.—A State plan shall—

(1) include actions for addressing the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change on natural resources that—

(A) describe and prioritize proposed natural resources adaptation actions for natural resources managed or impacted by activities authorized by the State;

(B) include a time frame for implementing the natural resources adaptation actions;

(C) are incorporated into a revision of the State wildlife action plan (also known as the State comprehensive wildlife strategy) that has been—

(i) submitted to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service; and

(ii) approved, or is pending approval, by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service; and

(D) are developed—

(i) with the participation of the relevant State agencies considered appropriate by the Governor of the State; and

(ii) in coordination with other States and Indian tribes that share jurisdiction or cooperative management responsibilities over natural resources with the State; and

(2) identify and assess gaps in data useful in developing the State plan.

(c) REVIEW AND APPROVAL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and, in the case of parts of the State plan relating to a coastal State, the Secretary of Commerce shall review each State plan, and approve the State plan if the State plan—

(A) meets the requirements of subsection (b); and

(B) is consistent with the other requirements of this Act.

(2) DEADLINE.—The Secretary and, as applicable, the Secretary of Commerce shall approve or disapprove the State plan by written notice not later than 180 days after the date of submission of the State plan (or a revised State plan).

(3) RESUBMISSION.—Not later than 90 days after the date of resubmission of a State plan that has been disapproved under this subsection, the Secretary and, as applicable, the Secretary of Commerce, shall approve or disapprove the resubmitted State plan by written notice.

(d) PUBLIC INPUT.—In developing the State plan, a State shall solicit and consider the input of local governments, the public, and independent scientific input.

(e) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PLANS.—The State plan shall, if appropriate, integrate the goals and measures set forth in other natural resources conservation strategies established pursuant to applicable law (including regulations), including—

(1) the National Fish Habitat Action Plan;

(2) plans under the North American Wetlands Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 4401 et seq.);

(3) the Federal, State, and local partnership known as “Partners in Flight”;

(4) federally approved coastal zone management plans under the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.);

(5) federally approved regional fishery management plants and habitat conservation activities under the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.);

(6) the National Coral Reef Action Plan;

(7) recovery plans for threatened species and endangered species under section 4(f) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(f));

(8) habitat conservation plans under section 10 of that Act (16 U.S.C. 1539);

(9) the plans for imperiled species of other Federal agencies, States, and Indian tribes;

(10) plans under subtitle F of title IX of the Omnibus Public Land Management Act of 2009 (42 U.S.C. 10361 et seq.) and other applicable law;

(11) the hazard mitigation plans of States and Indian tribes;

(12) the water management plans of States and Indian tribes;

(13) State property insurance programs; and

(14) other State-based strategies that implement natural resources adaptation activities to remediate the ongoing and expected effects of climate change.

(f) UPDATING.—Each State plan shall be updated at least every 5 years.

(g) FUNDING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Funds allocated to States under section 9 shall be used only for activities consistent with a State plan approved by the Secretary and, as appropriate, the Secretary of Commerce.

(2) FUNDING PRIOR TO THE APPROVAL OF A STATE PLAN.—Until the earlier of the date that is 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act or the date on which a State plan is approved, a State shall be eligible to receive funding under section 9 for natural resources adaptation activities that are—

(A) consistent with the comprehensive wildlife strategy of the State and, where appropriate, other natural resources conservation strategies; and

(B) in accordance with a work plan made available to relevant Federal agencies.

(3) PENDING APPROVAL.—During the period for which approval of a State plan by the applicable Secretary is pending, the State may continue to receive funds under this Act pursuant to the work plan described in paragraph (2)(B).

SEC. 9. NATURAL RESOURCES CLIMATE CHANGE ADAPTATION FUND.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND.—There is established in the Treasury a separate account, to be known as the “Natural Resources Climate Change Adaptation Fund” (referred to in this section as the “Fund”).

(b) AVAILABILITY OF AMOUNTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—All amounts deposited into the Fund shall be available without further appropriation or fiscal year limitation.

(2) PAYMENTS.—Subject to the requirements of programs authorized as of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture may distribute payments from the Fund in accordance with subsection (c).

(c) DISTRIBUTION OF AMOUNTS.—

(1) STATES.—Of the amounts made available for each fiscal year to carry out this Act, 38.5 percent shall be provided to the Secretary for distribution to States to carry out natural resources adaptation activities in accordance with natural resources adaptation plans approved under section 8, and shall be distributed as follows:

(A) 32.5 percent shall be available to State wildlife agencies in accordance with the apportionment formula established under the second subsection (c) (relating to the apportionment of the Wildlife Conservation and Restoration Account) of section 4 of the Pittman-Robertson Wildlife Restoration Act (16 U.S.C. 669c); and

(B) 6 percent shall be available to State coastal agencies pursuant to the formula established by the Secretary of Commerce under section 306(c) of the Coastal Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1455(c)).

(2) NATURAL RESOURCES ADAPTATION.—Of the amounts made available for each fiscal year to carry out this Act—

(A) 17 percent shall be allocated to the Secretary for use in funding—

(i) natural resources adaptation activities carried out—

(I) under endangered species, migratory species, and other fish and wildlife programs administered by the National Park Service, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the Bureau of Land Management;

(II) on wildlife refuges, National Park Service land, and other public land under the jurisdiction of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, or the National Park Service;

(III) by the Bureau of Reclamation;

(IV) by the United States Geological Survey; and

(V) in Indian Country or on Native village or Regional Corporation land in Alaska; and

(ii) the implementation of the program;

(B) 5 percent shall be allocated to the Secretary for natural resources adaptation activities carried out through cooperative grant programs, such as—

(i) the cooperative endangered species conservation fund authorized under section 6 of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1535);

(ii) programs under the North American Wetlands Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 4401 et seq.);

(iii) the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Fund established by section 9(a) of the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 6108(a));

(iv) the Coastal Program of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service;

(v) the National Fish Habitat Action Plan dated April 24, 2006 (including any revisions or amendments made to the National Fish Habitat Action Plan after April 24, 2006);

(vi) the Partners for Fish and Wildlife Program, as carried out by the Secretary under section 4 of the Partners for Fish and Wildlife Act (16 U.S.C. 3773);

(vii) the Landowner Incentive Program, as established by the Secretary in the matter under the heading “LANDOWNER INCENTIVE PROGRAM” under the heading “UNITED STATES FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE” of title I of the Department of the Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2006 (Public Law 109-54; 119 Stat. 504);

(viii) the Wildlife Without Borders Program of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service;

(ix) the Migratory Species Program and Park Flight Migratory Bird Program of the National Park Service;

(x) the Water for America or other programs carried out by the Bureau of Reclamation; and

(xi) programs under—

(I) subtitle A of title VI of the Omnibus Public Land Management Act of 2009 (16 U.S.C. 1015 et seq.);

(II) subtitle F of title IX of the Omnibus Public Land Management Act of 2009 (42 U.S.C. 10361 et seq.); and

(III) other applicable law;

(C) 3 percent shall be allocated to the Secretary to provide financial assistance to Indian tribes to carry out natural resources adaptation activities through the Tribal Wildlife Grants Program of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service or other programs; and

(D) 12 percent shall be allocated for acquisition of land or interests in land to carry out natural resources adaptation activities as follows:

(i) $\frac{1}{2}$ shall be allocated to the Secretary of Agriculture to provide financial assistance to States and Indian tribes to carry out natural resources adaptation activities through the acquisition of land and interests in land under section 7 of the Cooperative Forestry Assistance Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2103c).

(ii)(I) The remainder $\frac{1}{2}$ shall be deposited in the Land and Water Conservation Fund established under section 2 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-5) to be further allocated as follows:

(aa) $\frac{1}{2}$ of the funds provided by this subparagraph shall be allocated to the Secretary to carry out natural resources adaptation activities through the acquisition of land and interests in land under section 6 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-8), to be made available on a competitive basis to States, in accordance with the natural resources adaptation plans of States, and to Indian tribes, and in accordance with subclause (IV).

(bb) $\frac{1}{2}$ of the funds provided by this subparagraph shall be allocated to the Secretary to carry out natural resources adaptation activities through the acquisition of lands and interests in land under section 7 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-9).

(cc) $\frac{1}{2}$ of the funds provided by this subparagraph shall be allocated to the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out natural resources adaptation activities through the acquisition of land and interests in land under section 7 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-9).

(II) Deposits in the Land and Water Conservation Fund under this clause shall—

(aa) be supplemental to funds provided under section 3 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-6), which shall remain available for nonadaptation needs; and

(bb) be available to carry out this Act without further appropriation or fiscal year limitation.

(III) Amounts under subclause (I)(aa) shall be made available—

(aa) notwithstanding section 5 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-7); and

(bb) in addition to any funds provided pursuant to appropriations, the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 15801 et seq.), or any other authorization.

(iii) In allocating funds under this subparagraph, the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall take into consideration factors including—

(I) the availability of non-Federal contributions from State, local, or private sources;

(II) opportunities to protect fish and wildlife corridors or otherwise to link or consolidate fragmented habitats;

(III) opportunities to reduce the risk of severe wildfires, drought, extreme flooding, or other climate-related events that are harmful to fish and wildlife and people; and

(IV) the potential for conservation of species or habitat types at serious risk due to climate change.

(3) NATIONAL FOREST AND GRASSLAND ADAPTATION.—Of the amounts made available for each fiscal year to carry out this Act, 5 percent shall be allocated to the Forest Service, through the Secretary of Agriculture—

(A) to fund natural resources adaptation activities (including water-related adaptation activities) carried out in national forests and national grasslands under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service; and

(B) to carry out natural resources adaptation activities on State, tribal, and private forest land carried out under the Cooperative Forestry Assistance Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2101 et seq.) and other authorized cooperative grant programs.

(4) COASTAL, ESTUARINE, AND MARINE SYSTEM ADAPTATION.—Of the amounts made available for each fiscal year to carry out this Act, 7 percent shall be allocated to the Secretary of Commerce, working in cooperation with other Federal agencies, States, Indian tribes, local governments, scientists, and other conservation partners, to fund coastal, estuarine, and marine natural resources adaptation activities, through programs such as—

(A) the coastal and estuarine land conservation program administered by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration;

(B) the community-based restoration program for fishery and coastal habitats established under section 117 of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Reauthorization Act of 2006 (16 U.S.C. 1891a);

(C) the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.) that are specifically designed to strengthen the ability of coastal, estuarine, and marine resources, habitats, and ecosystems to adapt to and withstand the ongoing and expected impacts of climate change;

(D) the Open Rivers Initiative;

(E) the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.);

(F) the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1361 et seq.);

(G) the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.);

(H) the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act of 1972 (33 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.);

(I) the Coral Reef Conservation Act of 2000 (16 U.S.C. 6401 et seq.); and

(J) the Estuary Restoration Act of 2000 (33 U.S.C. 2901 et seq.).

(5) ESTUARINE AND FRESHWATER ECOSYSTEM ADAPTATION.—Of the amounts made available for each fiscal year to carry out this Act, 7.5 percent shall be allocated to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and 5 percent shall be available to the Secretary of the Army for use by the Corps of Engineers, working in cooperation with other applicable Federal agencies, for natural resources adaptation activities for—

(A) large-scale freshwater aquatic ecosystems, such as the Everglades, the Great Lakes, Flathead Lake, the Missouri River, the Mississippi River, the Colorado River, the Sacramento-San Joaquin Rivers, the Ohio River, the Columbia-Snake River System, the Apalachicola, Chattahoochee, and Flint River System, the Connecticut River, Middle Rio Grande River, and the Yellowstone River;

(B) large-scale estuarine ecosystems, such as Chesapeake Bay, Long Island Sound, Puget Sound, the Mississippi River Delta, the San Francisco Bay Delta, Narragansett Bay, and Albemarle-Pamlico Sound;

(C) freshwater and estuarine ecosystems, watersheds, and basins identified and prioritized by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency or the Corps of Engineers, working in cooperation with other Federal agencies, States, tribal governments, local governments, scientists, and other conservation partners;

(D) estuary habitat restoration projects authorized by the Estuary Restoration Act of 2000 (33 U.S.C. 2901 et seq.);

(E) aquatic restoration and protection projects authorized by section 206 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 (33 U.S.C. 2330); and

(F) other appropriate programs and activities.

(d) USE OF FUNDS BY FEDERAL AGENCIES.—Funds allocated to Federal agencies under this section shall only be used for natural resources adaptation activities consistent with a natural resources adaptation plan approved under section 7.

(e) STATE COST SHARING.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State that receives a grant under this section shall use funds from non-Federal sources to pay not less than 10 percent of the costs of each activity carried out under the grant.

SEC. 10. ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS REGARDING INDIAN TRIBES.

(a) FEDERAL TRUST RESPONSIBILITY.—Nothing in this Act alters the Federal trust responsibility to any Indian tribe, or any treaty or other right of any Indian tribe.

(b) APPLICATION OF OTHER LAW.—The Secretary may apply the provisions of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.) in the implementation of this Act.

By Mr. BAUCUS (for himself, Mr. KERRY, and Mrs. SHAHEEN):

S. 1934. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to prevent the avoidance of tax on income from assets held abroad, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to introduce the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act of 2009.

The bill gives the IRS powerful tools to find US taxpayers who are hiding their money in offshore accounts. It includes strong incentives for individuals to properly report income from assets held in offshore accounts. The days of sending your money offshore to avoid paying US taxes are over.

This package is the result of a collaborative effort with the House and has the support of the White House and the Treasury Department. It is fully consistent with the policies in the preliminary draft of offshore compliance proposals that I released in March of this year to detect, deter, and discourage offshore tax evasion.

The bill is a practical solution to a very challenging problem. For the first time, the tax law would authorize the IRS to receive information reports from foreign financial institutions disclosing the identities of their US account holders and the amounts being held in the accounts.

Individuals with offshore accounts would be required to provide details of those accounts on their tax returns.

Trust rules would be significantly strengthened to prevent the true beneficiaries from hiding behind a nominee owner.

It will not be so easy to hide your money from Uncle Sam anymore.

Following the recommendation of the Government Accountability Office, the IRS would have more time, up to 6 years, to find and examine unreported and misreported offshore transactions.

Robust penalties would be in place for those who still try to skirt the rules.

This bill would improve tax compliance without raising taxes on anyone. These are taxes that already are legally owed.

Those who game the tax system by hiding their money in offshore accounts, like those in the recent UBS scandal, unfairly shift the tax burden to honest taxpayers who comply with their tax obligations. The IRS estimates that up to 52,000 individuals hid billions of dollars in offshore accounts through UBS.

Offshore tax evasion is a significant part of the tax gap and it has gone on long enough.

I believe this bill will be a turning point in putting an end to offshore tax evasion.

I look forward to working with my Colleagues here in the Senate and in the House to enact this important piece of legislation this year.

By Mr. ROCKEFELLER (for himself, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. THUNE, and Ms. KLOBUCHAR):

S. 1938. A bill to establish a program to reduce injuries and deaths caused by cellphone use and texting while driving; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, today I am introducing comprehensive, bipartisan legislation to reduce deaths and injuries caused by drivers texting and holding cell phones. I am delighted to have four original cosponsors join me today: Senator HUTCHISON, the ranking member of the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee; Senator LAUTENBERG, the chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee's Surface Transportation and Merchant Marine Infrastructure, Safety and Security Subcommittee; Senator SCHUMER, and Mr. THUNE, the ranking member of the Surface Transportation and Merchant Marine Subcommittee.

According to the Department of Transportation, distracted drivers last year killed 5,800 people. Distraction was a factor in 16 percent of all traffic fatalities. In addition, distracted drivers injured 515,000 people, which accounted for 22 percent of all people injured in traffic accidents.

Distracted driving covers a range of activities: Eating, reaching for an object, texting, or using a cell phone. An analysis of 5,471 passenger vehicle crashes investigated by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, NHTSA, found that 18 percent of drivers just prior to the crash were engaged in at least one non-driving activity, which included cell phone use.

We all know that the explosion of cell phone use and texting in the past three years has brought distracted driving to a new level of danger. Now we have the new data, provided by the same researchers who record seat belt use levels for NHTSA: at any given daylight hour, 11 percent of vehicles are driven by a person holding a handheld electronic device. That translates into 812,000 drivers not paying full attention to driving at any given moment of the day, which makes our roads more dangerous for everyone.

The statistics regarding deaths and injuries caused by distracted drivers provide the foundation for us to act. But the tragic, individual stories of deaths and injuries to innocent people compel us to act.

In October 2008, 29-year-old Tiffany DeGroft was exchanging text messages with her boyfriend while driving her Jaguar on Braddock Road in Centreville, Virginia. The text messages indicate that her boyfriend was upset. His last text message read: "Why aren't you answering me now?" Tiffany DeGroft did not answer because her car had missed a curve in the road. She was killed on impact. A Fairfax County detective said, "We found the phone on the floor in the open position. I suspect she was actually reading the text."

While that story is tragic, it becomes even more so when the person texting doesn't kill himself or herself, but innocent persons instead.

In September 2008, 13-year-old Margay Schee in Marion County, FL, was riding home from school in a school bus. A truck driver, who by his own admission was distracted by a cell phone conversation, slammed into the back of the bus, which had its flashers on while stopped. The bus caught fire, killing Margay in a vehicle that is designed to protect children.

In September 2006, college student Reggie Shaw sent 11 text messages over 30 minutes to his girlfriend as he drove his truck along a two-lane highway in rural Utah. Shaw sent the last text message one minute before he called police about the accident. Investigators concluded that Shaw sent that last text message just as he crossed the yellow line of the rural highway, striking an oncoming car. James Furaro and Keith O'Dell, both rocket scientists, were killed instantly.

Unlike some highway safety issues that are complicated to address, this one is not. Writing and reading text messages while driving a 2,000-pound vehicle is dangerous—not only for the driver, but also for the driver's passengers and everyone else using the roads. Crashes involving commercial vehicles—such as trucks and buses—can result in even more catastrophic accidents than passenger cars. An 80,000-pound truck will crush a small car like a soda can.

Texting takes a driver's eyes off the road for at least four seconds at a time—long enough at high speeds to travel the length of a football field. Under those circumstances, there is no time to react to a stopped car, a stop sign, or another road hazard. In fact, a recent study by the Virginia Tech Transportation Institute on behalf of the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration, FMCSA, found that motor vehicle operators who are texting are 23 times more likely to cause a crash, or near-crash, than a non-distracted driver. Deaths and injuries to innocent people are the inevitable and tragically avoidable result.

In 2006, the National Transportation Safety Board, after investigating several accidents, made a recommendation to the FMCSA to ban cell phone use by commercial driver's license holders who have endorsements to carry passengers or drive school buses. I commend the Transportation Secretary's recent actions to begin addressing these recommendations. But I am concerned that the Department of Transportation should be doing more to eliminate these unsafe driver distractions.

Several States have taken action to ban texting while driving, and to limit cell phone use to hands-free devices. But not enough states have done so. Since Constitutional considerations prohibit the federal government from directing states to enact traffic laws, we at the federal level can only give states funding incentives to act with regard to passenger vehicle drivers. That is why I am today introducing the Distracted Driving Prevention Act of 2009.

First, this legislation would create a grant program to send money to states that enact laws to prohibit texting and hand-held cell phone use while driving. While we wish the states would enact these common-sense safety measures on their own, the history of highway safety tells us that many states will fail to act unless we give them an incentive to do so.

To qualify for a federal grant, a state must enact an absolute ban on texting while driving. No exceptions. There should be no exception for a driver taking his or her eyes off the road. For states to receive the grant, the prohibition on texting must have significant penalties, including increased fines and other penalties for a driver who causes an accident while texting.

The second requirement for a State to receive a grant is to enact a law that bans holding a cell phone while driving. When people drive, both hands should be on the wheel. The grant program does not ask states to completely ban cell phone use by drivers; our legislation would allow the use of a hands-free device during a phone call. We also allow states to make exceptions for holding a cell phone to call for emergency services.

States qualifying for the grant must completely ban cell phone use by drivers under the age of 18. A driver under 18 years old may not even use a hands-free device. For these inexperienced drivers, the additional distraction of using a cell phone can be deadly. Many parents already encourage their teenage drivers to not use a cell phone while driving. But having the police enforce this law will be even more effective.

With more States enacting a ban on texting and hand-held cell phone use, we need to get the message out so that drivers obey the law. Our legislation would create a new national education campaign based upon the tremendous success of the recent drunk driving and seat belt advertising campaigns. These advertising campaigns are not only an opportunity to remind people of the law, but also a means by which to educate drivers about the dangers of texting and cell phone use. This education can change driver behavior even when law enforcement might not be present.

In addition to nationwide advertising, we also will direct NHTSA to target some local markets with advertising in states and cities that have already passed texting and cell phone use laws.

Unlike passenger vehicle drivers, a truck driver's vehicle is also his or her office space. Devices to receive directions, follow-up on orders, or maintain contact with dispatchers are necessary to perform a truck driver's duties. These devices, too, can become distractions, as they require eyes and attention to be removed from the roadway. Therefore, this legislation would require the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations within one year specifically on the use of electronic and wireless devices by commercial motor vehicle drivers and those who operate certain school buses. The Secretary would be authorized to ban the use of certain devices if the Secretary determines that they interfere with the safe operation of a commercial motor vehicle. The bill also would allow the Secretary to permit exceptions for emergency uses. We need to make sure that commercial motor vehicle drivers are operating their trucks and buses in the safest manner possible.

Furthermore, this legislation will require that states, as part of their federal grant for data collection, begin collecting distracted driving data about each vehicle crash, starting with the police reports of the crash. By requiring law enforcement officers to inquire about the possible role that texting or cell phone use might have played in a crash, and requiring states to collect that data, we can better understand the scope and causes of the distracted driving problem.

To bolster the new data collection at the state level, this legislation would require the Transportation Secretary to establish a dedicated program at the Transportation Department to study all forms of distracted driving across all modes of transportation. Better research is essential to finding the best strategies for reducing deaths and injuries caused by distracted driving.

This legislation also charges the Federal Communications Commission with studying potential initiatives to raise awareness and reduce the problems caused by distracted driving. By bringing aboard the agency with oversight of wireless carriers, we add another stakeholder that can help us develop creative solutions to address this problem.

One last note about this legislation: it is paid for. The grant program that encourages states to enact a primary seat belt law has run a surplus in recent years as the number of states enacting a new primary seat belt law has slowed. Any state that enacts a new primary seat belt law in 2010 and 2011 would still receive their safety belt grant. But the remainder of the funding for that program will be redirected for the nationwide distracted driving advertising campaigns, and sent as grants to states that prohibit texting and hand-held cell phone use.

Creating incentives for states to take action against distracted driving, launching a nationwide campaign to educate drivers about the dangers of texting and cell phone use, and collecting better data about driver behavior will result in fewer deaths and injuries on our nation's roads.

I ask my colleagues to support this comprehensive bill that will save lives and prevent injuries by reducing distracted driving.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 323—HONORING EDWARD W. BROOKE, III, FORMER UNITED STATES SENATOR FOR THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, ON THE OCCASION OF HIS 90TH BIRTHDAY

Mr. BURRIS (for himself, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. KIRK) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. RES. 323

Whereas Edward W. Brooke, III, served in the United States Senate with great dedication, integrity, and professionalism as a trusted colleague from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

Whereas Edward Brooke was the first African American elected by popular vote to the United States Senate and was the first African American to serve in the United States Senate since the Reconstruction Era;

Whereas Edward Brooke served on the Commission on Civil Disorders under President Lyndon B. Johnson, where his work on discrimination in housing served as the basis for the Fair Housing Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3601 et seq.);

Whereas Edward Brooke was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom on June 23, 2004;

Whereas Edward Brooke was awarded the Congressional Gold Medal on October 28, 2009;

Whereas Edward Brooke's long and distinguished career in public service included serving in the United States Army during World War II, as Attorney General for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and as chairman of the board of the National Low Income Housing Coalition; and

Whereas Edward Brooke celebrated his 90th birthday on October 26, 2009: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) acknowledges and honors the unprecedented and enduring achievements and contributions made by Edward W. Brooke, III, during his distinguished career of public service to the United States; and

(2) congratulates and expresses best wishes to Edward Brooke on the celebration of his 90th birthday.

SENATE RESOLUTION 324—DESIGNATING NOVEMBER 1, 2009, AS “NATIONAL HEMANGIOMA TREATMENT AWARENESS DAY”

Mr. GRAHAM submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 324

Whereas hemangiomas are the most common benign tumors that occur in infancy;

Whereas hemangiomas appear at birth, or within the first several months of life;

Whereas, each year, approximately 400,000 children in the United States are born with hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies;

Whereas hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies can have a negative effect on the emotional development of a child;

Whereas awareness of the impact of hemangiomas and vascular anomalies on children, their families, and society will lead to improvements in the care of children with hemangiomas;

Whereas the National Institutes of Health supports research on the treatment of, and cure for, hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies;

Whereas The Hemangioma Treatment Foundation has the unique mission of providing treatment to children affected with hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies; and

Whereas The Hemangioma Treatment Foundation is dedicated to finding a cure for hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates November 1, 2009, as “National Hemangioma Treatment Awareness Day”; and

(2) respectfully requests that the Secretary of Senate transmit a copy of this resolution to The Hemangioma Treatment Foundation.

SENATE RESOLUTION 325—DESIGNATING OCTOBER 25 THROUGH OCTOBER 31, 2009, AS “NATIONAL HISPANIC MEDIA WEEK” IN HONOR OF THE LATINO MEDIA OF AMERICA

Mr. REID (for himself, Mrs. GILLIBRAND, Mr. UDALL of Colorado, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BENNET, and Mr. MENENDEZ) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 325

Whereas for almost 470 years the United States has benefitted from the work of Hispanic writers and publishers;

Whereas there are over 800 Hispanic newspapers with a circulation of 17,800,000, and over 550 Hispanic magazines with a circulation of 31,600,000;

Whereas Hispanic television and radio programs respond to the bilingual needs of the United States Latino population;

Whereas market research estimates that the reach of Spanish language television is nearly universal;

Whereas 1 in 8 Americans is served by a Hispanic publication throughout the Nation;

Whereas the Latino print media generated $1,400,000,000 in revenue last year, despite adverse economic conditions;

Whereas the Hispanic press informs many Americans about significant political, economic, and social issues of our day;

Whereas the Hispanic press in the United States focuses in particular on informing and promoting the well being of our country's Hispanic community; and

Whereas commemorating the achievements of the Hispanic press acknowledges the important role the Hispanic press has played in United States history: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates October 25 through October 31, 2009, as “National Hispanic Media Week” in honor of the Latino Media of America; and

(2) encourages the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs and activities.

(2) in subsection (b), by striking “for 15 years”.

SA 2705. Mr. CASEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to amendment SA 2699 submitted by Mr. ISAKSON (for himself and Mr. DODD) and intended to be proposed to the bill H.R. 3548, to amend the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2008 to provide for the temporary availability of certain additional emergency unemployment compensation, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

Beginning on page 5, line 22, strike all through page 7, line 9, and insert the following:

(b) DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENT.—Subsection (d) of section 36 of such Code is amended by striking “or” at the end of paragraph (1), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting a comma, and by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

“(3) the taxpayer fails to attach to the return of tax for such taxable year a properly executed copy of the settlement statement used to complete such purchase, or

“(4) the taxpayer fails to attach to the return of tax for such taxable year a certified statement of the taxpayer's eligibility for the tax credit issued by the real estate reporting person (as defined in section 6045(e)(2)) with respect to such purchase.”.

(c) RESTRICTION ON MARRIED INDIVIDUAL ACQUIRING RESIDENCE FROM FAMILY OF

SPOUSE.—Clause (i) of section 36(c)(3)(A) of such Code is amended by inserting “(or, if married, such individual’s spouse)” after “person acquiring such property”.

(d) CERTAIN ERRORS WITH RESPECT TO THE FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER TAX CREDIT TREATED AS MATHEMATICAL OR CLERICAL ERRORS.—Paragraph (2) of section 6213(g) of such Code, as amended by this Act, is amended by striking “and” at the end of subparagraph (N), by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (O) and inserting “, and”, and by inserting after subparagraph (O) the following new subparagraph:

“(P) an entry on a return claiming the credit under section 36 if—

“(i) the Secretary obtains information from the person issuing the TIN of the taxpayer that indicates that the taxpayer does not meet the age requirement of section 36(b)(3),

“(ii) information provided to the Secretary by the taxpayer on an income tax return for at least one of the 2 preceding taxable years is inconsistent with eligibility for such credit, or

“(iii) the taxpayer fails to attach to the return the form described in paragraph (3) or (4) of section 36(d).”.

(e) INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION; REPORT.—The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall take such steps as are necessary to investigate and prosecute instances of fraud related to the first-time homebuyer tax credit under section 36 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall provide reports to Congress on the status of the investigatory and prosecutorial actions not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and quarterly thereafter.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

SA 2706. Mrs. MCCASKILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by her to the bill H.R. 3548, to amend the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2008 to provide for the temporary availability of certain additional emergency unemployment compensation, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the end add the following:

SEC. ____ . WAIVER OF RECAPTURE OF FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER CREDIT FOR INDIVIDUALS ON QUALIFIED OFFICIAL EXTENDED DUTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (4) of section 36(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(E) SPECIAL RULE FOR MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES, ETC.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of the disposition of a principal residence by an individual (or a cessation referred to in paragraph (2)) after December 31, 2008, in connection with Government orders received by such individual, or such individual’s spouse, for qualified official extended duty service—

“(I) paragraph (2) and subsection (d)(2) shall not apply to such disposition (or cessation), and “(II) if such residence was acquired before January 1, 2009, paragraph (1) shall not apply to the taxable year in which such disposition (or cessation) occurs or any subsequent taxable year.

“(ii) QUALIFIED OFFICIAL EXTENDED DUTY SERVICE.—For purposes of this section, the term ‘qualified official extended duty service’ means service on qualified official extended duty as—

“(I) a member of the uniformed services,

“(II) a member of the Foreign Service of the United States, or “(III) as an employee of the intelligence community.

“(iii) DEFINITIONS.—Any term used in this subparagraph which is also used in paragraph (9) of section 121(d) shall have the same meaning as when used in such paragraph.”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to dispositions and cessations after December 31, 2008.

SEC. ____ . EXTENSION OF FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER CREDIT FOR INDIVIDUALS ON QUALIFIED OFFICIAL EXTENDED DUTY OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (h) of section 36 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(1) by striking “This section” and inserting “(1) IN GENERAL.—This section”, and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“(2) SPECIAL RULES FOR INDIVIDUALS ON QUALIFIED OFFICIAL EXTENDED DUTY OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES.—In the case of any individual who serves on qualified official extended duty service outside the United States for at least 90 days in calendar year 2009 and, if married, such individual’s spouse—

“(A) paragraph (1) shall be applied by substituting ‘December 1, 2010’ for ‘December 1, 2009’,

“(B) subsection (f)(4)(D) shall be applied by substituting ‘December 1, 2010’ for ‘December 1, 2009’, and

“(C) in lieu of subsection (g), in the case of a purchase of a principal residence after December 31, 2009, and before July 1, 2010, the taxpayer may elect to treat such purchase as made on December 31, 2009, for purposes of this section (other than subsections (c) and (f)(4)(D)).”.

(b) COORDINATION WITH FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER CREDIT FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—Paragraph (4) of section 1400(c) of such Code is amended by inserting “(December 1, 2010, in the case of a purchase subject to section 36(h)(2))” after “December 1, 2009”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to residences purchased after November 30, 2009.

SEC. ____ . EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME OF QUALIFIED MILITARY BASE REALIGNMENT AND CLOSURE FRINGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (n) of section 132 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (1) by striking “this subsection) to offset the adverse effects on housing values as a result of a military base realignment or closure” and inserting “the American Recovery and Reinvestment Tax Act of 2009”, and

(2) in subparagraph (2) by striking “clause (1) of”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this act shall apply to payments made after February 17, 2009.

SEC. ____ . INCREASE IN PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO FILE A PARTNERSHIP OR S CORPORATION RETURN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 6698(b)(1) and 6699(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are each amended by striking “$89” and inserting “$110”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to returns for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2009.

SEC. ____ . TIME FOR PAYMENT OF CORPORATE ESTIMATED TAXES.

The percentage under paragraph (1) of section 202(b) of the Corporate Estimated Tax Shift Act of 2009 in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act is increased by 0.5 percentage points.

SA 2707. Mr. BROWNBACK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 2847, making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Justice, and Science, and Related Agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2010, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 203, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

TITLE VI—CONGO CONFLICT MINERALS

SEC. 601. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) The Democratic Republic of Congo was devastated by a civil war carried out in 1996 and 1997 and a war that began in 1998 and ended in 2003, which resulted in widespread human rights violations and the intervention of multiple armed forces or armed non-state actors from other countries in the region.

(2) Despite the signing of a peace agreement and subsequent withdrawal of foreign forces in 2003, the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of Congo has continued to suffer from high levels of poverty, insecurity, and a culture of impunity, in which illegal armed groups and military forces continue to commit widespread human rights abuses.

(3) According to a study by the International Rescue Committee released in January 2008, conflict and related humanitarian crisis in the Democratic Republic of Congo have resulted in the deaths of an estimated 5,400,000 people since 1998 and continue to cause as many as 45,000 deaths each month.

(4) Sexual violence and rape remain pervasive tools of warfare used by all parties in eastern region of the Democratic Republic of Congo to terrorize and humiliate communities, resulting in community break down which causes a decrease in the ability of affected communities to resist control by illegal armed forces and a loss of community access to minerals. Sexual violence and rape affect hundreds of thousands of women and girls, frequently resulting in traumatic fistula, other severe genital injuries, and long-term psychological trauma.

(5) A report released by the Government Accountability Office in December 2007 describes how the mismanagement and illicit trade of extractive resources from the Democratic Republic of Congo supports conflict between militias and armed domestic factions in neighboring countries.

(6) In October 2002, the United Nations Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of Congo called on member states of the United Nations to adopt measures, consistent with the guidelines established for multinational enterprises by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, to ensure that enterprises in their jurisdiction do not abuse principles of conduct that they have adopted as a matter of law.

(7) In February 2008, the United Nations Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of Congo stated, “individuals and entities buying mineral output from areas of the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of Congo with a strong rebel presence are violating the sanctions regime when they do not exercise due diligence to ensure their mineral purchases do not provide assistance to illegal armed groups” and defined due diligence as including the following:

(A) Determining the precise identity of the deposits from which the minerals they intend to purchase have been mined.

(B) Establishing whether or not these deposits are controlled or taxed by illegal armed groups.

(C) Refusing to buy minerals known to originate, or suspected to originate, from deposits controlled or taxed by illegal armed groups.

(8) In its final report, released on December 12, 2008, the United Nations Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of the Congo found that official exports of columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, wolframite, and gold are grossly undervalued and that various illegal armed groups in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of Congo continue to profit greatly from these natural resources by coercively exercising control over mining sites from where they are extracted and locations along which they are transported for export.

(9) United Nations Security Council Resolution 1857, unanimously adopted on December 22, 2008—

(A) broadens existing sanctions relating to the Democratic Republic of Congo to include “individuals or entities supporting the illegal armed groups . . . through illicit trade of natural resources.”; and

(B) encourages member countries to ensure that companies handling minerals from the Democratic Republic of Congo exercise due diligence on their suppliers.

(10) Continued weak governance in the Democratic Republic of Congo has allowed the illicit trade in the minerals columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, wolframite, and gold to flourish, which empowers illegal armed groups, undermines local development, and results in a loss or misuse of tax revenue for the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo. The development of stronger governance and economic institutions that support legitimate cross-border trade in such minerals would—

(A) help prevent the exploitation of such minerals by illegal armed groups; and

(B) enable the hundreds of thousands of people who depend on such minerals for their livelihoods to benefit from such minerals.

(11) Metals derived from columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, wolframite, and gold from the Democratic Republic of Congo are used in diverse technological products sold worldwide, including mobile telephones, laptop computers, and digital video recorders.

(12) In February 2009, the Electronic Industry Citizenship Coalition and the Global e-Sustainability Initiative released a statement asserting that—

(A) use by the information communications technology industry of mined commodities that support conflict in such countries as the Democratic Republic of Congo is unacceptable; and

(B) electronics companies can and should uphold responsible practices in their operations and work with suppliers to meet social and environmental standards with respect to the raw materials used in the manufacture of their products.

(13) Notwithstanding the extensiveness of the supply chains of technological products and the extensiveness of the processing stages for the metals derived from columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, wolframite, and gold used in such products, companies that create and sell products that include such metals have the ability to influence the situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo by—

(A) exercising due diligence in ensuring that their suppliers provide raw materials in a manner that does not—

(i) directly finance armed conflict;

(ii) result in labor or human rights violations; or

(iii) damage the environment;

(B) verifying—

(i) the country from which the minerals used to derive such metals originate;

(ii) the identity of the exporter of the minerals; and

(iii) that all appropriate tax payments are made; and

(C) committing to support mineral exporters from the Democratic Republic of Congo who—

(i) fully disclose their export payments; and

(ii) certify that their minerals do not—

(I) directly finance armed conflict;

(II) result in labor or human rights violations; or

(III) damage the environment.

SEC. 602. STATEMENT OF POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States, as affirmed by the Democratic Republic of Congo Relief, Security, and Development Promotion Act of 2006 (Public Law 109-456; 22 U.S.C. 2151 note) and consistent with United Nations Security Council Resolution 1857 (2008), to promote peace and security in the eastern Democratic Republic of Congo by supporting efforts of the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo, other governments in the Great Lakes Region of Africa, and the international community—

(1) to monitor and stop commercial activities involving the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of Congo that contribute to illegal armed groups and human rights violations in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and

(2) to develop stronger governance and economic institutions that can facilitate and improve transparency in the cross-border trade involving the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of Congo in order to reduce exploitation by illegal armed groups and promote local and regional development.

SEC. 603. INVESTIGATION, REPORTS, AND STRATEGY REGARDING COLUMBITE-TANTALITE, CASSITERITE, WOLFRAMITE, GOLD, AND HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES IN THE DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF CONGO.

(a) SUPPORT OF MANDATE OF UNITED NATIONS GROUP OF EXPERTS ON THE DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF CONGO.—The President, acting through the Secretary of State, the United States Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and other appropriate United States Government officials, shall use the voice and vote of the United States at the United Nations Security Council to renew the mandate and strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of Congo to investigate links between natural resources and the financing of illegal armed groups, and ensure that the Group of Experts’ recommendations are given serious consideration.

(b) MAP OF MINERAL-RICH ZONES AND ARMED GROUPS IN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF CONGO.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall, consistent with the recommendation from the United Nations Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of Congo in their December 2008 report, work with other member states of the United Nations and local and international nongovernmental organizations—

(A) to produce a map of mineral-rich zones and armed groups in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and

(B) to make such map available to the public.

(2) UPDATES.—The Secretary of State shall update the map required by paragraph (1) not less frequently than once every 180 days until the Secretary of State certifies that no armed party to any ongoing armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo or any other country is involved in the mining, sale, or export of columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, wolframite, or gold, or the control thereof, or derives benefits from such activities.

(c) GUIDANCE FOR COMMERCIAL ENTITIES.—The Secretary of State shall, consistent with the recommendation from the United Nations Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of Congo in their December 2008 report, work with other member states of the United Nations and local and international nongovernmental organizations to provide guidance to commercial entities seeking to exercise due diligence on their suppliers to ensure that the raw materials used in their products do not—

(1) directly finance armed conflict;

(2) result in labor or human rights violations; or

(3) damage the environment.

(d) STRATEGY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall, working with the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, submit to the appropriate congressional committees a strategy to address the linkages that exist between human rights abuses, armed groups, and the mining of columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, wolframite, and gold in the Democratic Republic of Congo.

(2) CONTENTS.—The strategy required by paragraph (1) shall include the following:

(A) A plan to assist the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo and other governments in the region in establishing and effectively implementing the necessary frameworks and institutions to formalize and improve transparency in the trade of columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, wolframite, and gold.

(B) An outline of assistance currently being provided and an assessment of future assistance that could be provided by the Government of the United States to help the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo strengthen the management and export of natural resources in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of Congo.

(C) A description of punitive measures that could be taken against individuals or entities whose commercial activities are supporting illegal armed groups and human rights violations in eastern Democratic Republic of Congo.

(e) ANNUAL HUMAN RIGHTS REPORTS.—In preparing those portions of the annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices relating to the Democratic Republic of Congo or countries that share a border with the Democratic Republic of Congo, the Secretary of State shall ensure that such reports include a description of any instances or patterns of practice that indicate that the extraction and cross-border trade in columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, wolframite, or gold has negatively affected human rights conditions or supported specific human rights violations, sexual or gender-based violence, or labor abuses in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of Congo, during the period covered by each report.

(f) ANNUAL ORGANIZATION FOR ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION AND DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT COMMITTEE REPORT.—In preparing the United States' annual report to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development Investment Committee, the Secretary of State shall include a description of efforts by the United States to ensure, consistent with the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, that enterprises under United States jurisdiction are exercising due diligence to ensure that their purchases of minerals or metals are not originating from mines and trading routes that are used to finance or benefit illegal armed groups in the Democratic Republic of Congo.

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of State for fiscal year 2010 such sums as may be necessary for the Secretary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(h) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) APPROPRIATE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—The term "appropriate congressional committees" means—

(A) the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate; and

(B) the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives.

(2) HUMAN RIGHTS REPORTS.—The term "Human Rights Reports" means all reports submitted by the Secretary of State to Congress under sections 116 and 502B of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151n and 2304).

SEC. 604. DISCLOSURE TO SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION OF ACTIVITIES RELATING TO COLUMBITE-TANTALITE, CASSITERITE, AND WOLFRAMITE INDUSTRIES.

Section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(m) DISCLOSURE TO COMMISSION OF ACTIVITIES RELATING TO COLUMBITE-TANTALITE, CASSITERITE, AND WOLFRAMITE INDUSTRIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Commission shall promulgate rules requiring any person described in paragraph (2)—

"(A) to disclose annually to the Commission the country of origin of columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, or wolframite related to any of the activities described in paragraph (3);

"(B) if disclosure is required under subparagraph (A) and the country of origin disclosed under subparagraph (A) is the Democratic Republic of Congo or an adjoining country, to disclose annually to the Commission the mine of origin of such columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, and wolframite; and

"(C) if disclosure is required under subparagraph (A) or subparagraph (B) for columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, or wolframite, to submit along with such disclosure an independent audit of the supply chain of such columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, or wolframite to ensure that such disclosure is accurate.

"(2) PERSON DESCRIBED.—A person is described in this paragraph if the person—

"(A) is required to file reports to the Commission under subsection (a); and

"(B) either—

"(i) engages in activities described in paragraph (3); or

"(ii) controls a person that engages in activities described in paragraph (3).

"(3) ACTIVITIES DESCRIBED.—An activity described in this paragraph is—"(A) the commercial exploration, extraction, importation, exportation, or sale of columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, or wolframite; or

"(B) the use of such minerals, derivatives of such minerals, components that include such minerals, or components that include derivatives of such minerals in the manufacture of a product for sale.

"(4) REVISIONS AND WAIVERS.—The Commission may revise or temporarily waive the requirements described in paragraph (1) if the Commission determines that such revision or waiver is—"(A) necessary for the protection of investors; and

"(B) in the public interest.

"(5) TERMINATION OF DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—The disclosure requirements of this subsection shall terminate if the President—

"(A) determines that—

"(i) no armed party to any ongoing armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo or any other country—

"(I) is involved in an activity described in paragraph (3)(A) with respect to columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, or wolframite; or

"(II) derives benefits from such activity; or

"(ii) a regional framework has been established and effectively implemented to monitor and regulate the activities described in paragraph (3)(A) with respect to columbite-tantalite, cassiterite, or wolframite in the Democratic Republic of Congo so that such activities do not finance or benefit illegal armed groups; and

"(B) notifies the Commission of the determination under subparagraph (A).

"(6) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the Commission for fiscal year 2010 such sums as may be necessary for the Commission to carry out the provisions of this subsection.

"(7) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection, the following definitions shall apply:

"(A) ADJOINING COUNTRY.—The term 'adjoining country', with respect to the Democratic Republic of Congo, means a country that shares an internationally recognized border with the Democratic Republic of Congo.

"(B) CONTROL.—The term 'control' means—

"(i) in the case of a corporation, ownership of at least 50 percent of the voting stock of the corporation; and

"(ii) in the case of any other entity, ownership of interests representing at least 50 percent of the voting capital of the entity.

"(C) FOREIGN PERSON.—The term 'foreign person' means a person—

"(i) in the case of an individual, who is an alien as such term is defined in section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)); or

"(ii) in the case of a partnership, corporation, or other entity, that is organized under the laws of a foreign country or that has its principal place of business in a foreign country.

"(D) PERSON.—The term 'person' has the meaning given the term in section 3(a) but does not include—

"(i) any foreign nongovernmental organization that—"(I) has consultative status with the United Nations Economic and Social Council; or

"(II) has been accredited by a department or specialized agency of the United Nations; or

"(ii) a foreign person whose business activities are strictly limited to providing goods and services that are—

"(I) intended to relieve human suffering;

"(II) intended to promote welfare, health, religious, or spiritual activities;

"(III) used for educational or humanitarian purposes;

"(IV) used for journalistic activities; or

"(V) used for such other purposes as the Secretary of State may determine serve the foreign policy interests of the United States."

SEC. 605. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON ASSISTANCE FOR AFFECTED COMMUNITIES AND SUSTAINABLE LIVELIHOODS.

(a) SENSE OF CONGRESS ON ASSISTANCE FOR AFFECTED COMMUNITIES.—It is the sense of Congress that the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development should expand and better coordinate programs to assist and empower communities in the eastern Democratic Republic of Congo whose livelihoods depend on the mineral trade, particularly—

(1) communities affected by sexual and gender-based violence; and

(2) individuals displaced by violence.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS ON FUTURE YEAR FUNDING.—It is the sense of Congress that the Secretary of State and the Administrator should work with the appropriate congressional committees to increase assistance in fiscal years beginning after fiscal year 2009 for communities affected by violence in the Democratic Republic of Congo, specifically—

(1) to provide medical treatment, psychological support, and rehabilitation assistance for survivors of sexual and gender-based violence;

(2) to provide humanitarian relief and basic services to people displaced by violence;

(3) to improve living conditions and livelihood prospects for artisanal miners and mine workers; and

(4) to alleviate poverty by reconstructing infrastructure and revitalizing agricultural production.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS ON COORDINATION OF ASSISTANCE.—It is the sense of Congress that the United States should work with other countries, on a bilateral and multilateral basis—

(1) to increase protection and services for communities in the eastern Democratic Republic of Congo at risk of human rights violations associated with the mineral trade, particularly women and girls;

(2) to strengthen the management and trade of natural resources in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and

(3) to improve the conditions and livelihood prospects of artisan miners and mine workers.

SEC. 606. REPORT.

Not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to Congress a report that includes the following:

(1) An assessment of the effectiveness of the provisions of this Act and section 13(m) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(m)), as added by section 5, in promoting peace and security in accordance with section 3.

(2) A description of the problems, if any, encountered by the President, officials described in section 4(a), the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development in carrying out the provisions of this Act and such section 13(m).

(3) A description of the adverse impacts of carrying out the provisions of this Act and such section 13(m), if any, on communities in the eastern Democratic Republic of Congo.

(4) Recommendations for legislative or regulatory actions that can be taken—

(A) to improve the effectiveness of the provisions of this Act and such section 13(m) to promote peace and security in accordance with section 3;

(B) to resolve the problems described pursuant to paragraph (2), if any; and

(C) to mitigate the adverse impacts described pursuant paragraph (3), if any.

NATIONAL HEMANGIOMA TREATMENT AWARENESS DAY

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 324, which was submitted earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 324) designating November 1, 2009, as "National Hemangioma Treatment Awareness Day."

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, and the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 324) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 324

Whereas hemangiomas are the most common benign tumors that occur in infancy;

Whereas hemangiomas appear at birth, or within the first several months of life;

Whereas, each year, approximately 400,000 children in the United States are born with hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies;

Whereas hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies can have a negative effect on the emotional development of a child;

Whereas awareness of the impact of hemangiomas and vascular anomalies on children, their families, and society will lead to improvements in the care of children with hemangiomas;

Whereas the National Institutes of Health supports research on the treatment of, and cure for, hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies;

Whereas The Hemangioma Treatment Foundation has the unique mission of providing treatment to children affected with hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies; and

Whereas The Hemangioma Treatment Foundation is dedicated to finding a cure for hemangiomas and other vascular anomalies: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates November 1, 2009, as "National Hemangioma Treatment Awareness Day"; and

(2) respectfully requests that the Secretary of Senate transmit a copy of this resolution to The Hemangioma Treatment Foundation.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate Tuesday, October 27, 2009:

THE JUDICIARY

IRENE CORNELIA BERGER, OF WEST VIRGINIA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, October 27, 2009

The House met at 10:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Ms. EDWARDS of Maryland).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
October 27, 2009.

I hereby appoint the Honorable DONNA F. EDWARDS to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MORNING-HOUR DEBATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 6, 2009, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning-hour debate.

The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to 30 minutes and each Member, other than the majority and minority leaders and the minority whip, limited to 5 minutes.

SHANNON MELENDI AWARENESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) for 5 minutes.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, October 20, 2009 should have marked the 35th birthday of Shannon Denise Melendi; instead, she will be forever the 19-year-old victim of kidnapping and rape whose life was tragically ended at the hands of a ruthless killer.

Shannon was a gifted young college sophomore from Miami attending Emory University in Atlanta. In Miami, at Southwest High School, my alma mater, she was president of the junior and senior class and a champion orator who was captain of the debate team for 3 years. She was also in the National Honor Society and graduated cum laude in the top 3 percent of her class.

As a member of the Legal Eagles club, Shannon was an aspiring attorney whose ultimate goal was to sit on the Supreme Court. During her senior year, Shannon even spoke before the United Nations and Congress.

With grand dreams and a promising future ahead of her, nothing could have turned out to be more tragic than her disappearance. The news was devastating to her home community as it was to the Atlanta area where she had already established herself as a bright individual with an even brighter future.

She disappeared without a trace on March 26, 1994 while working at a part-time job at a softball country club. Shortly after, the first 10,000 posters and 60 billboards went up in Atlanta with Shannon's picture declaring her missing. Not long after that, her father, Luis Melendi, had the signs changed to "kidnapped."

Calvin "Butch" Hinton was named as a suspect. He was a coworker and an umpire she knew through her part-time job. Many pieces of evidence linked him to the disappearance of Shannon, but unfortunately not enough for a solid case. In a strange twist of fate, this demented man burned down his own home to keep the authorities from investigating him further, but he was sentenced to 9 years in prison for fraud when he tried to collect insurance on that house fire.

Then, more than 11 years after Shannon had disappeared, Hinton had just been released from prison when he was rearrested and placed on trial for Shannon's murder. After many heart-wrenching moments in the trial, the verdict came back guilty and Hinton was sentenced to life in prison.

Because of the atrocious acts of this horrible man, a bright young life was extinguished and the world is forever poorer because of it. Chillingly, though, this murderer is up for parole in 2011. With the confessed perpetrator behind bars, we have the comfort of knowing that no other person can fall victim to him, and that is why we should fight to keep him there in prison. Unfortunately, many perpetrators are roaming the streets today still preying on the most innocent of victims. Let us make sure that Calvin Hinton is not one of them.

Shannon's parents, Luis and Yvonne, as well as her sister, Monique, are still active today in efforts to protect children by strengthening our laws and protecting and educating youth and their families about violence and perpetrators. They honor their daughter and their sister, Shannon, and the countless other children like Shannon through their work. Shannon's story must serve as a reminder to students that they must always be aware of their surroundings and stay safe.

As a mother and grandmother, I cannot imagine the heartache the Melendis have gone through. Luis Melendi still speaks to high school seniors about the dangers posed by perpetrators and reminds them that this could happen to anyone. Last week, on what should have been their daughter's 35th birthday, the Melendi family spoke to the students at Coral Shores High School in Tavernier to keep Shannon's memory alive and to drive home the idea of being aware and being safe. With these efforts and the laws that we pass, we can help protect our Nation's youth.

It is in honor and remembrance of Shannon Melendi that I urge my colleagues to remain champions and protectors of our youth. Through the life of Shannon Melendi we know that even though it was short, we can make sure that the lessons learned from her murder last eternally.

I thank the Speaker for the time, and we will always remember Shannon.

REVITALIZING OUR ECONOMY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Madam Speaker, the challenge for all America, not just the new administration and Congress, but our communities, our businesses, especially American families, is how to revitalize our economy. There is a great deal of contention occasionally here in Washington, D.C. about the best approach, but this problem takes on a new urgency as the experts now tell us that while the economy appears to be recovering, the jobs aren't: A jobless recovery, posing special problems for Americans from coast to coast.

But beyond the problems with the economy, there are serious issues dealing with the state of repair of America; our electrical grid is inadequate and unreliable, too many roads and bridges are in serious disrepair, and there are problems with inadequate or non-existent sewage collection and leaking water mains. And there is environmental damage in sites from coast to coast with Superfund, brownfields, even unexploded ordnance and military toxics on military defense locations.

The opportunity and the challenge is to combine the problems with the economy with what we need to do to rebuild and renew America. Luckily, this is a solution that is overwhelmingly supported by the vast majority of Americans—Republicans, Democrats, and Independents. This is a solution that in times past has been able to bring together people in Congress to deal with the revitalization of our infrastructure.

We have opportunities right now. There is pending a reauthorization of the Surface Transportation Act. If Congress acts, and the administration signs it, this could mean 6 million jobs revitalizing transportation from coast to coast, border to border.

I have legislation, House bill 3202, a water trust fund, that would enable communities to deal with serious problems like leaking water mains. We lose 6 billion gallons of water a day, enough to fill Olympic size swimming pools from here to Pittsburgh. Coincidentally this bill can help fix these problems while putting hundreds of thousands of more Americans to work dealing with those problems.

The administration has requested, and we have introduced, legislation to reintroduce the Superfund tax to deal with the problems of Superfunds again that are found in every State of the Union. Left unattended, the pollution actually gets worse and migrates, becoming more expensive to clean up over time. This is an opportunity to solve the environmental problem and return this land to productive use.

This is something that America supports. The time for the Obama administration and this Congress to unite on a vision to rebuild and renew America is now, to enact it into law and provide appropriate funding. This action will pay dividends to Americans for decades to come, making our communities more livable and our families safer, healthier, and more economically secure.

AARP GETS FREE PASS IN HEALTH CARE DEBATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Ms. FOXX) for 5 minutes.

Ms. FOXX. Madam Speaker, does America's biggest senior citizens organization, AARP, get a free pass in the ongoing health care reform debate?

Speaker PELOSI recently called insurance companies "immoral villains," and Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER derided their tactics as "rapacious," yet the majority has simultaneously relied on an organization that has received billions of dollars in windfall profits from those same insurers as an "independent" source to support their government takeover of health care—AARP.

The Democrat majority has even relied on AARP's support for legislation, S. 1776, that would increase the Federal debt by nearly $250 billion to fund physician reimbursements, even though the bill would raise seniors' Medicare premiums by over $60 billion. AARP opposed unpaid-for legislation as recently as December for the very same reason.

An analysis of Democrats' rhetoric and actions provides evidence why AARP may have changed its position. In exchange for its support of a government takeover of health care, AARP has received special considerations regarding several provisions in health reform legislation that could benefit the organization quite handsomely.

While the AARP Web site claims that the organization supports "guaranteeing that all individuals and groups wishing to purchase or renew coverage can do so regardless of age or pre-existing conditions," a review of the New York State Insurance Commissioner's Web site finds that AARP-branded Medigap coverage imposes a 6-month waiting period for individuals with preexisting conditions. Yet section 111 of H.R. 3200 would exempt Medigap policies from new limits on preexisting condition restrictions, thus allowing AARP to continue to deny Medigap individuals with serious health conditions.

The health reform bill approved by the Senate Finance Committee would eliminate the tax deductibility for all insurance company executive salaries over $500,000. However, as drafted by the committee, the legislation would exempt AARP from this requirement, even though fully 38 percent of its $1.1 billion in 2008 revenue came directly from royalty fees paid by United Health Care—more than AARP received in membership dues, grant revenue, and private contributions combined.

But for Chairman BAUCUS' exemption, AARP salaries would in fact be subject to the penalties in the Finance bill. In 2008, then CEO William Novelli received total compensation of $1,005,830, more than 78 times the average annual Social Security benefit of $12,738.

According to a story published today in the Washington Post, AARP collected $650 million in royalties and other fees last year from the sale of insurance policies, credit cards, and other products that carry the AARP name. One of the main products that AARP pushes are so-called Medigap insurance policies for senior citizens. These policies supplement existing Medicare policies that seniors already have.

So what's the big deal? Well, in case you missed it, AARP is helping push the Democrats' big government version of health care reform. They've been a vocal proponent of the government-run health care proposal before Congress. Interestingly, the proposal before Congress slashed funding for a Medicare program called Medicare Advantage. This program is especially popular with seniors in my district. About 40,000 seniors in my district enjoy the benefits of a Medicare Advantage plan, but these plans will be killed off under the Democrats' government takeover of health care, and AARP has been pushing this brand of health care reform.

AARP has the right to offer services to its members, but pushing for a version of health care reform that will hurt millions of seniors who have Medicare Advantage plans and that will almost certainly increase shares of AARP's Medigap policies is a very dangerous conflict of interest.

AARP has hundreds of millions of dollars in insurance revenue on the line in today's health care debate. I think America's seniors deserve to know the facts about how health care reform will affect them, and it appears that AARP may have a few too many dogs in this race to be an impartial source of information.

CHOOSING HEALTH CARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. CONNOLLY) for 5 minutes.

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. I thank the Speaker.

I rise today to support the economic engine of America—our small businesses. Small businesses represent more than 99 percent of all businesses in this country and employ more than 50 percent of the private sector, non-farm workforce. In fact, 25 percent of the total job growth from 1992 to 2005 came from those small businesses with fewer than 20 employees. For all businesses, large and small, the employment growth rate during that period was 19 percent, demonstrating that small businesses led the way to economic growth. Simply put, the health of America's small businesses is the health of the American economy.

Unfortunately, the cost of keeping the employees of small businesses healthy is imperiling the financial health of many of these same businesses. Under our current health care system, where larger companies pool their risks over larger workforces to purchase insurance for lower rates, small businesses are paying up to 18 percent more per employee for health care coverage than their larger competitors. Sadly, it's easy to see how this happens. Indianapolis small businessman Bruce Hetrick testified at a House committee hearing earlier this year that his wife and business partner, Pam, got cancer and the insurance company said that the premiums for the 15-person firm would rise 28 percent. When his wife tragically passed away 1 month prior to the higher premium taking effect, the insurance company still increased the entire firm's premium by 10 percent. Due to the current health care system, one illness in a small business can have drastic consequences for everybody.

In fact, from 1999 to 2007, for all businesses, large and small, the employer contribution for health insurance coverage for families increased 120 percent, from $4,247 to $9,325. Employees did not fare any better, as their own individual premiums increased almost 118 percent in that time period. While large businesses were better situated to keep costs down due to bigger risk pools, reduced administrative costs and lower insurance broker fees, small businesses often have but one unpalatable option with respect to health care.

More and more small businesses are unable to afford health insurance for their employees. In 1995, 68 percent of small businesses offered health care. Only 38 percent offered health care this year. While just 10 percent of employees at large businesses are uninsured, 29 percent of employees at firms with fewer than 25 employees have no health insurance. Those small businesses that currently offer health care often are forced to reduce benefits due to those increasing costs. Family deductibles are roughly 60 percent more for companies with fewer than 50 employees.

Without reform, Madam Speaker, small businesses will have to continue reducing benefits and increasing costs. According to the National Business Group on Health, in 2010, and I quote, employers and employees will face shockingly higher health care costs. Madam Speaker, those premiums are projected to increase another 10 to 20 percent—next year. This year, small businesses will pay $156 billion for their employees' health care. Without reform, those costs will more than double to $339 billion by 2018, just 9 years hence. Over the next decade, small businesses will suffer the cumulative impact of these increased costs of between $546 billion and $855 billion. In other words, absent reform, small businesses' health care costs will hit $2.4 trillion in this time period.

As they have done over the last few years, small businesses will be forced to choose between their economic health and the health of their employees. Without health care reform, the increased costs over the next decade will force many small businesses to lay off employees. Those increased costs represent up to 178,000 employees—178,000 Americans who can lose their jobs because their employers can no longer afford the cost of health care.

Fifty-seven percent of existing small businesses already have had to eliminate health care coverage, and more soon will be forced to do the same. Twenty-nine percent of small business employees have no insurance of any kind. According to the Kaiser Family Foundation's recent survey, 8 percent of existing businesses said they will eliminate health care entirely this next year.

Increasing health care costs are crippling our small businesses and small business employees. Although every company faces increasing costs, under the existing health insurance system the economic burden falls disproportionately on small businesses.

Madam Speaker, I support health insurance reform that will lower the cost of health care to these small businesses and their employees; and I urge adoption of reform.

HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN) for 5 minutes.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Madam Speaker, we are engaged in a serious debate on health care reform in this country, and there are those who believe that the only way to solve this problem is through a Washington, D.C., Federal Government takeover of health care. And I say that advisedly because I've looked at the bills that are the serious bills in the Senate and the House that are going to be presented to us at some point in time, or at least parts of them are.

One of the things that is obvious to me is that these bills stand on a number of different principles, and one of them is that there will be a requirement that every living man, woman and child must have health care insurance as defined by the Federal Government or be subject to a fine. Now they call it a tax but it is truly a fine. And the question is whether that is an appropriate exercise of authority by the Federal Government.

Some people say, Why do you even get involved in this sort of thing? Why would you even ask that question? Well, because the history of this Nation is a history of a nation that was established on the concept of individual liberty, freedom with responsibility. And because it was, our Constitution gave us a limited Federal Government, a Federal Government that could not do everything and anything it wishes to do. It is perhaps the inconvenient truth in this debate, or perhaps I should say the Constitution is the inconvenient truth.

Let me just cite what James Madison, often called the Father of the Constitution, said in the Federalist Papers, the documents that were written and then placed upon the public in order to get States to ratify the Constitution. This is what he said:

In the first place, it is to be remembered that the general government is not to be charged with the whole power of making and administering laws. Its jurisdiction is limited to certain enumerated objects.

Congress, in other words, can't get up in the morning and just say, Well, we see a problem; therefore, we're going to fix it and we're going to impose the authority of the Federal Government upon this problem by way of our solution.

Think of this: The President of the United States spoke here from the rostrum behind me in his joint session to the Congress a little over a month and a half ago; and at that time he argued that an individual mandate was constitutional, or was lawful because, he said, it is similar to what you have to do to drive in this country. You have to have insurance to drive on the public road. But there's a fundamental difference. If you analyze all the legal authority on this question, it is not that you have a right to drive on public roads, it is a privilege, and therefore it can be conditioned by the purchase of insurance.

What we're saying here is your right to breathe in the United States, to continue to exist in the United States, will now be conditioned on you buying health insurance; and if you don't, you will be fined, we are now told $1,500, and if you don't pay the fine you can be jailed; not because you want to enter into the United States as an immigrant, not because you're asking anything of the United States but, rather, for the right to exist in the United States.

There are those who say that the commerce clause is so expansive, it can include everything. Well, the courts have told us it is not that expansive. Even as they have broadened its application, they have said it is limited to an economic activity that affects interstate commerce. And if we are going to say that the right for you to breathe in the United States, the right for you to exist in the United States, is an impact on interstate commerce, there is nothing left that the Federal Government cannot do.

That's why this debate over health care is important for many different reasons. But if we are going to allow the government to take away our liberty, to allow the Federal Government to say there is nothing you can do in this country, including breathe, unless you have the permission of the Federal Government to act in a certain way, and if you don't act in that certain way, you will be fined, and if you do not pay the fine you will be jailed, there is absolutely nothing left of the freedom that this country was based upon.

The former Vice President of the United States likes to talk about inconvenient truths. The great inconvenient truth in this country is the U.S. Constitution. Let us not fail in our fidelity to it.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12(a) of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until noon today.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 55 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess until noon.

□ 1200

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BLUMENAUER) at noon.

PRAYER

The Reverend Chris Williamson, Strong Tower Bible Church, Franklin, Tennessee, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank You for this opportunity to gather together and seek Your wisdom. We acknowledge You as our great God and king, and it is our desire to do the things that please You.

In centuries past, You have proven Your love to us, and You have blessed us bountifully to the degree that we constantly ask You to bless America.

But Father, in these pressing times, we rise up and America chooses to bless You. We bless You for Your love. We bless You for Your grace. We bless You for Your power, and we bless You for Your son, the Lord Jesus Christ.

Please guide these men and women as they discuss matters today that affect so many people in our great Nation.

We promise to give Your name all of the praise for any good thing that happens as a result of our meeting together.

These and many other blessings we ask in the name of our Savior, Jesus Christ, Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LANCE) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. LANCE led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

HONORING THE REVEREND CHRIS WILLIAMSON

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentlewoman from Tennessee (Mrs. BLACKBURN) is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me today in welcoming Pastor Chris Williamson of Franklin, Tennessee, as he serves as our honorary chaplain for today.

He brings with him today the associate pastor from his church, Anthony Hendrix, and also a longtime friend of mine, Scott Roley, who is now the senior pastor of Christ Community Church.

The music industry is really what brought Pastor Williamson to middle Tennessee, and as his music performance career ended, however, he really felt a calling to the pulpit.

In 1995, he founded the Strong Tower Bible Church and has built Strong Tower into one of Franklin's most dynamic and well-known churches. My colleagues will be interested to know that Congressman JOE PITTS' son and his family attend Strong Tower. His commitment to racial reconciliation is evident through his work as an author, his mission work, as well as the intentional multiethnic and diverse background of his congregation. He is a devoted family man, and I appreciate the opportunity to represent his fine family in Congress.

Please join me in honoring him on his service to the House of Representatives today, and I wish him only the best in the years to come.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. BOSWELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOSWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the important strides Congress is making toward our Nation's health care reform.

I am pleased the Senate will be including a public option in their version of the health reform bill. A public option is absolutely essential. America's health insurance industry needs a mechanism that will level the playing field and protect consumers. The public option that we create must be fair and pay doctors and hospitals accordingly.

Many of us are very concerned that our rural doctors and hospitals are having many troubles. That is why I support language that will direct the Institute of Medicine to study the Medicare reimbursement formula and direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to fix these flawed reimbursements.

Medical professionals in my home State of Iowa were recently ranked second by the Commonwealth Foundation for providing some of the best care in the Nation. Yet when we are reimbursed by Medicare, they receive half as much per enrollee compared to many other States. Without fair pay, these providers will be pushed further into the red and out of Iowa and other States with the same problem.

The studies that we have proposed to revise Medicare reimbursement rates and create quality measures will pave the way.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BOEHNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, as we stand here, the health care bill is being written in secret in Speaker PELOSI's office and over in the Senate by Senate Majority Leader HARRY REID, even though the President of the United States during his campaign made clear that these negotiations ought to be out in the public and we ought to have C-SPAN cameras in there to allow the American people to see who is fighting for what side. Yet, it is not happening. It is being written in secret.

And no wonder it is being written in secret because the Democrat majorities are doing exactly what the American people don't want: a big government-run plan. I wonder if the 53 new agencies, boards, commissions and mandates that were in the original House bill will continue to be in this bill that is being written in secret.

But this bill is in secret for one big reason. It is going to cost over $1 trillion. It is going to raise taxes. It is going to have mandates on individuals. It is going to destroy jobs, and it is going to cut Medicare for our seniors.

What cuts to seniors are going to be in this bill? No one knows. All I know is that there were $162 billion worth of cuts to Medicare Advantage in the original House bill, $162 billion, and I have 27,000 Medicare Advantage enrollees in my district. And according to the Congressional Budget Office, some 80 percent of them are likely to lose their health coverage under this proposal.

Republicans have better solutions. Just go to healthcare.gop.gov and see the Republican solutions that will help make our current system work better and not have this big government takeover of our health care delivery system.

BOOSTING SMALL BUSINESS LENDING

(Mr. MICHAUD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the President's effort to boost small business lending.

Later this week, we will be taking up a bill that my colleagues and I on the Small Business Committee drafted to do just that. Each year, the bill is expected to support $44 billion in small business lending, helping to save or create 1.3 million jobs annually. Small businesses are the backbone of Maine's economy, and they are key to our economic recovery.

The recession and credit crunch have hurt small businesses' access to capital, and they cannot afford inaction.

This bill will give them additional resources when they need it the most. I urge the Senate to join the House in passing a strong bill that we can get to the President's desk as soon as possible.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. CANTOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in the midst of the increasing momentum we detect on the other side to push through a government takeover of health care in our country. To me, it is about four distinct questions.

One, does anyone believe that the passage of a $1 trillion bill, does anyone believe that won't aggravate the deficit? I think the answer is resoundingly "no."

Secondly, if it is going to be $1 trillion, who is going to pay for that? Well, we know that the majority is talking about small businesses and seniors paying for that.

Third, does anyone really think that the health care overhaul being proposed is going to make your health care better? I don't think so.

And lastly, is there any guarantee that this government is not going to get in between you and your doctor? Mr. Speaker, I say to that, the answer is "no."

We Republicans have a better way. We believe we can accomplish reform aimed at the discrete problems that exist, to fix those, and then expand health care opportunities for those who do not currently have it.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. KENNEDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, the other side talks about the health care reform bill costing a lot of money. Right now, consumers in America are spending millions and millions of dollars paying that to the insurance companies. One-third of the health care dollar goes to no such thing as health care; it goes to the insurance companies. That's why the Democratic proposal restricts the amount of money that insurance companies can spend on bureaucracy. That's where the out-of-pocket expenses actually go to health care. That sounds like a smart idea to me.

Furthermore, the insurance companies can no longer discriminate against preexisting conditions, no longer can discriminate against people who need health care. That sounds like a good idea.

Finally, talking about reducing deficit spending, this bill requires insurance companies to keep costs under control. That saves the government money and reduces the deficit because the biggest spender in health care is the Federal Government through entitlements.

I don't know why the other side is so hell-bent on protecting insurance companies' medical inflation that only adds to the deficit in this country.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, at nearly $1 trillion in spending and tax increases, the Democrat health care bill is a bad deal for taxpayers; but it is a worst deal for American seniors, and senior citizens deserve to know about it.

Included in the Democrat health care plan are massive cuts in Medicare Advantage, $162 billion in reductions in this popular program. As a result, Medicare Advantage plans will drop out of the program, limiting seniors' choices and causing many to lose their current health care coverage through Medicare Advantage. This will have an exceptionally negative impact in rural areas, like my district of eastern Indiana.

According to the Congressional Budget Office as well, the Democrat's health care plan will increase the cost of Medicare prescription drug premiums by 20 percent in the next decade.

The President said, If you like your current plan, you can keep it. Well, after looking at the Democrats' plan for seniors, I guess he wasn't talking about senior citizens when he said that.

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. DAVIS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, no doubt, the national discussion over health care reform has been emotional for all Americans. People from every corner and every background of our country have had a chance to tell their story, to weigh in on this issue.

Many of the stories we have heard from our constituents back home have been personal—they have been heart-breaking—about struggles with the health care system. Those kinds of experiences can sometimes be difficult and they can be emotional to share, but they have played an important part in the conversation.

Because we are starting to see that in our uniquely American way, all of that passion is being channeled to productive change. We are close to bringing forward a potentially life-changing bill.

Just think about what this means. For the first time, millions of uninsured Americans can have access to health insurance and all of us will have health security knowing we can't lose our coverage. Ultimately, voting on reform means voting to give millions of Americans peace of mind.

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. McMORRIS RODGERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. McMORRIS RODGERS. Mr. Speaker, this morning I find myself reflecting on a recent town hall meeting where nearly 1,000 people showed up, many of them seniors, and they were not happy. In eastern Washington in my congressional district, it is estimated that 20,000 seniors may lose their health care because of the cuts to Medicare Advantage. H.R. 3200 cuts $162 billion from that program, and they are cuts that hit especially those who live in rural communities the hardest.

The Obama administration promised Americans that if they liked their doctor, they could keep their doctor; if they liked their health insurance plan, they could keep it. But I guess that doesn't apply to seniors.

These are real cuts to Medicare Advantage, and it will mean canceled insurance policies and higher premiums. For those living on a fixed income, this could mean less money for food, clothing, and shelter.

House Republicans are committed to a step-by-step approach to addressing health care that will start by reducing the cost drivers. We should pass these cost control reforms rather than financing a government takeover on our Seniors.

□ 1215

EDUCATION REFORM

(Ms. HIRONO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. HIRONO. Mr. Speaker, one of the most notable improvements I've seen since the beginning of this administration is the importance the President has placed on education.

I know I'm not alone in recognizing how President Obama and Education Secretary Duncan have changed the tone in the education community. Last Friday, David Brooks used his column in the New York Times to praise the President and the Secretary for their efforts in raising the bar on education reform. Partnering with Congress, they have set high standards and are providing $5 billion in competitive grants to those States that can best demonstrate their commitment to reform. As a result, there is real excitement among the States to put their best education reform foot forward as they gear up for the competition for these grants.

At a time when the U.S. is falling behind other countries in educational attainment and at a time when State budgets are stretched thin, we need to focus more, not less, on strengthening education in our country to enable us to compete in the global economy.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, last month, President Obama stood right behind me here in our Chamber and delivered an address to a joint session of Congress in which he said, "Anyone who mischaracterizes our bill, we will call you out." His next line was, "I will not accept the status quo."

Well, Mr. Speaker, we all know that no one—no one—wants to accept the status quo. I've been listening to my California constituents, and they've been saying that we need to have exactly what our colleague from Washington (Mrs. MCMORRIS RODGERS) described as a step-by-step approach. They know and understand that a massive government takeover of health care is not the answer to our problem; in fact, it could exacerbate the problem, especially with the proposed Medicare cuts that will hurt our seniors.

We need to do things like allow people to purchase insurance across State lines, giving them a chance to have the best quality product at the lowest possible price. We need real medical liability reform, which, according to the Congressional Budget Office, will bring about a savings of $54 billion. We need to have the step-by-step approach that Mrs. MCMORRIS RODGERS said that we need. Let's make it happen.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. EDWARDS of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. EDWARDS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, we are so close to achieving quality, affordable and accessible health care for all Americans.

If we were playing football, the team in support of consumer choice, the public option, is in the red zone, and we are determined not to go three-and-out as we've done for the last six decades. At last, we are going to take health care reform with a robust public option right across the goal line. Yesterday, the Senate Majority Leader helped "move the chains" when he inserted a strong public option in the Senate health care bill. This move down the field positions us one step closer to meaningful reform.

Now my colleagues in the House and I are keeping our offensive line strong in support of a robust public option, but it's time to score this touchdown for the American people, for the middle class, for working people and the young people, including those in the Hillside program at Central High School who bear the burden and brunt of this failed health care system.

The status quo is unacceptable and it's a losing strategy. Including a robust public health option is real consumer choice; it's the logical option to scoring the goal and achieving success.

FUTURE ACCESS TO QUALITY HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SESSIONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address the looming health care debate here in Washington, D.C.

The American people know the truth about the Democrat health care proposal. We know that it's full of mandates, full of taxes, and will result in further job losses, but it also cuts reimbursement to physicians and hospitals and creates an even larger access problem.

In the proposed health care reforms, congressional Democrats are racing to create an unsustainable government-run health care plan that would reimburse physicians and hospitals no more than 30 to 60 percent of market rates.

Public safety-net hospitals like Parkland Hospital—which serves as a critical health care provider to many in Dallas, Texas—need to keep their doors open to make this plan successful. My Republican colleagues and I believe that we need to guarantee physicians and hospitals adequate reimbursement for their services to ensure the American people have access to a delivery system that works—not mandates, not taxes, and not job losses.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. TONKO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to tell you about a constituent of mine who is waiting on Congress to pass comprehensive health insurance reform.

Karen Rozzell resides in Colonie, New York. She had to quit her job as a cashier because her diabetes got so bad she couldn't stand and she hasn't been able to find other work. When she left her job, she and her husband lost their insurance. They thought they could rely on COBRA, but it cost them too much and they were forced to let their insurance lapse. Her husband, a painter, doesn't have access to health insurance through his employment.

As a diabetic, Karen should be seeing a doctor regularly, but she doesn't. A couple of years ago she was hospitalized for a staph infection; she was only able to stay in the hospital until the infection was cleared up. She signed herself out before her doctors wanted her to because she knew she couldn't afford the cost. It took her years to pay that bill.

After living without insurance, her husband was diagnosed with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, but the cost of his treatment and medication is out of reach for them. She told me she worries every time her husband sneezes.

No one in this country deserves to live in fear like this. We need health care reform.

CONGRESS—LISTEN TO THE VOICES OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

(Mr. McCOTTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCOTTER. In Michigan, the people know what the most important issue facing this Congress is: It's called jobs. My State has a 15.3 unemployment rate; it is expected to rise. And yet what we see in Congress is an unwillingness of the majority to listen to the concerns of the American people. They want this economy fixed; they want to provide for the livelihood of their families; they wish to pursue their happiness. And yet they watch a Congress that is willfully intent upon passing a partisan, government-run health care bill despite the voices of the American people.

I suggest that if we are to restore sanity and prosperity to these uncertain times, that this Congress start to listen to the voices of their constituents and start to act accordingly. That is why we have a representative government.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. ELLISON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ELLISON. Mr. Speaker, need I remind this body that between the years 2000 and 2006, the party opposite controlled the White House, the House of Representatives, and the Senate. What did they do for the American people regarding health care? Nothing; nothing at all. They didn't do anything to help the American people. And now that the Democratic Caucus is within a hair's breadth of delivering real reform, all we hear about is death panels, sex school clinics, and now, oh, my God, the Democrats are after the seniors.

Seniors of America, in 1965, when Medicare was passed, only 22 Republicans voted for it; probably none will vote for health care reform now. Remember that at the polls.

JOBS AND HEALTH CARE

(Mr. MCCARTHY of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MCCARTHY of California. Mr. Speaker, as a former small business owner, I know that success is measured by results. If you don't achieve results, you have to rethink your approach to make your business successful. The same cannot be said of this Congress. Bipartisan stimulus ideas to help small businesses grow jobs were ignored. Instead, a $1 trillion spending bill was crafted behind closed doors with the stated purpose to create 3.5 million jobs. The results? We now find ourselves with an unemployment rate not seen in over 25 years. In my home State of California alone, the White House predicted that 396,000 jobs would be created. Well, 336,000 jobs, and counting, have been lost. So where are the jobs?

Now in addressing health care, the Democratic majority is again crafting a bill behind closed doors. Can we expect the same lack of results? Likely. Because how do you save money for American families and small businesses by raising taxes and once again ignoring bipartisan ideas, like lawsuit abuse reform?

Our families deserve better; our small businesses deserve better; America deserves better.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. PIERLUISI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of Congress' efforts to reform our Nation's health care system. Too many Americans have no health insurance or are a job loss away from losing their insurance, and reform will give them access to secure, affordable coverage.

The House bill will also benefit the vast majority of Americans who already have insurance. Your insurance company will no longer be able to deny you coverage or raise your rates because of a preexisting condition. Your insurance company will no longer be able to drop or reduce your coverage when you get sick.

Mr. Speaker, I represent nearly 4 million U.S. citizens from Puerto Rico. My fellow delegates from the territories and I have fought hard to make certain that the House bill is fair to our constituents who are no less American than their fellow citizens in the States and are no less deserving of care.

Thanks to the determined efforts of our leadership, I am confident that the House bill will ensure that quality health coverage will be available for all Americans, whatever their financial means and wherever they happen to reside.

GOVERNMENT TAKEOVER
SLASHES MEDICARE FUNDING

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, what does a government takeover of health care mean for seniors? It's simple. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the Democrats' health care and tax increase bill slashes funding for Medicare Advantage plans used by millions of seniors across the country.

All told, the Democrat plan cuts $162 billion from Medicare Advantage. That will directly affect the 40,000 seniors in my mostly rural North Carolina district who enjoy Medicare Advantage plans. With such huge cuts, Medicare Advantage plans are expected to disappear, limiting seniors' choices and causing real hardships for seniors in rural areas who simply don't have many options.

So much for the President's promise that "if you like your current plan, you can keep it." Sure, this promise is true, unless of course you're one of the millions who will lose their plan.

The bottom line is this one-size-fits-all government-run plan and tax increase combination is bad news for America's seniors.

HEALTH REFORM

(Mr. LANGEVIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I am very encouraged by the progress being made on health insurance reform in this Congress. Where we are in this health care debate is truly historic. However, we're not there yet, and we cannot let this opportunity pass us by.

For millions of people without insurance, health reform will mean access to affordable, quality coverage. But what will it mean for people who already have coverage? For them, health reform will create stronger consumer protections that ensure coverage isn't dropped or scaled back when they get sick. It will ensure a lower out-of-pocket cost to make coverage more affordable, and it will provide greater access to routine checkups and preventive care. It will ensure real competition and transparency in the health insurance market so the American people are getting the best plans at an affordable price.

In short, health reform will mean security and stability for millions of Americans, and we should not make them wait any longer for these commonsense reforms. The time to act is now. This is a historic opportunity for the American people, and this Congress cannot let them down.

DEMOCRAT HEALTH CARE
PROPOSAL HARMS SENIORS

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, Democrats are proposing $163 billion in cuts to the Medicare Advantage program as part of their government takeover of health care. A crucial program, Medicare Advantage offers seniors greater choice and affordability, the primary goal of health insurance reform. But Democrats want to cut funding for this program.

Squeezing senior citizens out of their current health insurance plan in order to impose new taxes and unworkable government mandates onto American families is not the way to reform health insurance. We need targeted reforms that will expand opportunities to get insurance, like association health plans and purchasing insurance across State lines.

The Republican Study Committee, led by Dr. TOM PRICE, has offered H.R. 3400 to promote affordability and accessibility for American families and small businesses.

The American people have a choice on how we reform. We do not need a big government takeover which will destroy 1.6 million jobs, according to the NFIB, the voice of small business.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th in the global war on terrorism.

HOUSEHOLD VIOLENCE

(Mr. QUIGLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Speaker, October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and now, more than ever, it is time to draw attention to household violence that results in more than 2 million injuries and 1,200 deaths among women each year.

Estimates of assaults on women by partners range from approximately 2 million to 4 million annually. Sadly, we have no real idea of how many incidents of violence actually occur each year because so many go unreported.

Those unreported incidents are the reason Domestic Violence Awareness Month is so vital. Only when we are no longer afraid to speak out about domestic violence will we empower those who currently suffer in silence. In my State of Illinois alone, there were 114,921 reported cases of domestic violence in 2006.

It is for those thousands of women and the countless others who suffer silently that I speak today. It is for those women that I encourage my colleagues to pass House Resolution 817, which supports the goals and ideals of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. TURNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, if the government's handling of the outbreak of H1N1 flu, known as swine flu, is any indication of how it will administer a public health care option, we should all be greatly concerned. With the media reporting that lines of hundreds of people wait for H1N1 vaccinations, it took a Presidential national emergency declaration just to cut through the bureaucratic red tape.

If this Congress is serious about health care reform, why not start with simple principles on which most of us can agree, such as prohibiting insurance companies from denying coverage based on preexisting conditions, portability of health care coverage, investing in medical research to ensure quality care, deductibility of health insurance premiums, ensuring access to health savings accounts, limiting frivolous lawsuits which raise health care costs, and allowing small businesses to group together to negotiate insurance plans.

Instead of the President's sweeping overhaul, which will likely result in pitfalls, we should look at simple reforms to adhere to mutually agreed upon principles ensuring that those who have health insurance can keep it and those who don't can obtain it.

PROTECT COWORKERS FROM ASSAULT AND ATTACK

(Mr. MELANCON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MELANCON. Mr. Speaker, many of us have heard the terrible story of Jamie Leigh Jones, the employee of a U.S. defense contractor who was brutally attacked and sexually assaulted by coworkers while working in Iraq in 2005. Instead of being allowed to seek justice, Jamie Leigh was held in a shipping container by company employees so she couldn't report the crime.

When Jamie Leigh returned to the United States, she learned that a clause in her contract barred her from taking her case to court. Instead, it forced her into a company-run arbitration process; the same company that failed to protect her in the first place.

It is our responsibility to make sure that this horrific story can never happen again. No American citizen should ever have to sign away his or her rights to justice in order to get a job. Not a dime of taxpayer money should go to companies that would rather sweep an assault under the rug than allow our justice system to work.

The Franken amendment will forbid Federal dollars from going to companies that engage in these practices. If we fail to enact this measure, we have failed to protect the rights and values we were sworn to uphold when we took our oath of office. We cannot let this happen again.

U.S. DOLLAR ALARM BELLS

(Mr. LANCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LANCE. Mr. Speaker, for decades the U.S. dollar has been used to price virtually all of the world's commodities, with nearly every country having U.S.-backed securities in reserve; yet this could all change.

There is growing evidence suggesting that foreign investors are losing faith in the dollar as a secure instrument. Several important countries like China, India, Russia, France, and the Arab States voiced their concern over the role of the U.S. dollar as the reserve currency in world trade. Many have suggested a new world currency take its place.

A primary concern for those investing in the United States is the growing U.S. debt and staggering deficits. Yet, despite this, the majority party continues to push ahead with an agenda that taxes, spends, and borrows, including a health care proposal that could cost as much as $800 billion to $1 trillion over the next decade.

How many alarm bells must be set off before Washington gets serious about tackling our ever-growing debt and budget deficits?

BREAKING THE STALEMATE ON PUBLIC OPTION

(Ms. WATSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, we need to stop ranting and start reasoning. Health care providers have pushed against the public option, citing payment as one of their primary concerns. Instead of seeing the issue within the lens of payments based on Medicare rates versus negotiated ones, I believe we can attract health care providers to the public option with a new incentive to break the stalemate. Malpractice is a primary psychological, emotional issue with doctors, dentists, hospitals, administrators, and pharmacists.

Additionally, it is a principal issue of economic obsession with providers who bitterly resent paying for liability insurance. When it comes to you, it is not petty. If there is malpractice, you certainly want to contact an attorney.

Progressives have always championed community health centers. My proposal expands the liability program used by these community health centers.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BONNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying, common in south Alabama, that we need to practice what we preach. Well, if reports are accurate, it sounds like Congress will be moving forward with health care legislation that contains a government-run public option, no matter how hard the Democratic leadership might try to rebrand this poison pill.

Well, I am going to oppose with every ounce of me a Federal takeover of our health care system. I couldn't agree more with our friend Dr. JOHN FLEMING of Louisiana, who has introduced a resolution that says that any Member of Congress who votes for a public option should be the first one to sign up for it. After all, if a public option is good enough for you, Mr. and Mrs. Taxpayer, then your elected Representative should be the first to try it out.

This is especially true for our seniors who are looking at draconian cuts to Medicare, cuts to Medicare Advantage, and, according to the CBO, a 20 percent increase in their prescription drug premiums over the next decade, not to mention higher taxes for all Americans, just to help pay for this major step towards socialized medicine.

Practicing what we preach means just that. Congress won't ask the American people to take any poison that we don't take first.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. YARMUTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. YARMUTH. Mr. Speaker, our Republican colleagues continue to amaze me with the creativity that they display in finding new ways to say "no" to health care reform.

First, a few weeks ago, it was Senator JOHN ENSIGN who said in the Finance Committee in the Senate, I am against the public option because—get this—it might work; people will like it. He was against it because people will like a public option.

Now, when we find out that the Senate has proposed an opt-out for the States, we are hearing from our opponents who say, well, they won't opt out, they just won't opt out. I wonder why. Probably because it would be effective in providing competition and choice for their constituents, for citizens of America who need affordable, secure health care.

That's what our efforts are for. That's what this bill is about. We need Republicans to stop saying "no" and to say "yes" to the health care that Americans deserve.

DON'T ROB SENIORS OF THEIR HEALTH CARE

(Mr. FLEMING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, as a family physician for over 30 years, I could have never imagined that the Democrats would come up with such a crazy idea as ObamaCare paid for on the backs of the American seniors.

As it stands today, $162 billion will be cut from Medicare Advantage, forcing seniors to buy Medigap insurance like that sold by AARP, one of the many special interest groups the President cut a sweetheart deal with behind closed doors. There is also another $350 billion that will be cut from the regular Medicare, which will directly remove access to medical care for this, the Nation's Greatest Generation.

In rural areas like much of my district in Louisiana, seniors will lose access to critical medical care as home health, doctors, and hospitals—they will all be closing their doors.

I call on Speaker PELOSI to stop this horrible attack on the health and welfare of our senior citizens now.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. PERLMUTTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Mr. Speaker, the mantra of our Republican colleagues here in the House is "Just say 'no.' We like the status quo."

Well, that was their mantra when it came to the Recovery Act, which has now helped improve the stock market. Housing starts are up, and, in Colorado, unemployment is down from 7.8 percent in July to 7 percent today. The trend is right.

In Colorado, we have some 42 projects, transportation projects, as a result of the Recovery Act. We have increases in energy. We have wind companies coming. We have solar companies coming to Colorado. It has been a success, to their chagrin.

Now we hear "Just say 'no.' We like the status quo" when it comes to health care. This country can't stand the status quo when it comes to health care. Premiums are up, deductibles are up, discrimination exists against people with prior illnesses. That's got to change.

We are going to vote "yes" and stop this inequity in health care.

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. SCHMIDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about an issue of great importance—health care. The potential bill before us should concern all Americans. While I have numerous issues with this bill, I will highlight two.

The first is abortion. There is no language to exclude abortion coverage in this bill. An overwhelming majority of Americans are against Federal tax dollars paying for abortion; yet this bill opens the door to do just that.

Second, cuts to our seniors. This bill is paid for out of the pockets of our seniors, with $162 billion coming from Medicare Advantage, a plan millions of our American seniors, including 17,000 in my district, enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, we can do better than this. Let us not pass a bill that could harm our most vulnerable, our infants, and our elderly.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. GINGREY of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, my patients' health care reform should not be written behind closed doors.

When Democrats came to Congress, they pledged, led by Speaker PELOSI, the most open Congress in history; yet, now, they are planning a costly government takeover of health care in the dark of night without any public input.

Mr. Speaker, a $1 trillion, 2,000-page blended plan that will dictate how Washington will run our health care system deserves real transparency, not just empty promises about openness.

Speaker PELOSI, my patients deserve better. Your legislation is going to tell them what type of health care their family can receive and what Medicare benefits will be cut from our seniors.

Mr. Speaker, even if the Democrat majority is going to prevent minority participation, my patients deserve to know what's going on behind these closed doors in the dark of night. If this bill really is the right prescription for reform in the health care system, then it will stand up to the light of day.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded that House Rules require that they address their remarks to the Chair.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, when I was home recently, I spoke to a constituent who had lost his job because he had contracted gall bladder cancer. He was using every dime of his unemployment benefits to pay for the treatment necessary to keep him alive.

He is an example of the millions of Americans who have either lost their health care because they got sick and lost their job or the millions more who are just one paycheck or one illness away from losing their own. We have to have an answer for those individuals and for those families.

The Republican strategy of stopping health care reform at no cost provides no answer for the people of this country who have been waiting too long for a solution. It's time for this House to get beyond politics and start to provide real answers for the millions of individuals and families like that gentleman, who has his life put at stake by his lack of health care, and come together. Put politics aside and pass health care reform that will lower costs and expand access for the people of this country.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. JENKINS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, Republicans have health care solutions, but our solutions don't involve breaking promises to America's seniors. Our solutions don't involve slashing Medicare Advantage, a program that 7,400 seniors from my district rely on day in and day out. Our solutions don't involve massive cuts to Medicare that will go far beyond reducing waste and do real harm to current programs that Kansas seniors enjoy.

One of the President's stated goals for health care reform is to increase choice and competition in health care. Rather than moving forward with a plan that will reduce choice and have harmful effects on our seniors across the Nation, it is time to sit down and have an honest discussion about how we can extend health care coverage without a government takeover and without cutting Medicare.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, my mother is 83 and not in the best of health. When I see what is being proposed in this House, health care agendas that take away from seniors like her, I get a cold shiver down my spine. Medicare and Medicare Advantage are lifelines for many elderly Americans, especially in my area of south Florida.

How can this House justify $162 billion in cuts to Medicare Advantage?

Why in this economic recession are we limiting the choices for seniors or causing many to lose their current health care coverage? For seniors in my congressional district, cuts to Medicare Advantage would be disastrous.

The Congressional Budget Office says that Medicare prescription drug premiums will increase by 20 percent because of the Democrat plan. I know, and my constituents know, that seniors simply cannot afford this.

The health care reform bill makes it tougher on seniors to get the coverage and the treatment they deserve after a lifetime of hard work and sacrifice. Of course we need health care reform, but reform should not be on the backs of our seniors.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BROUN of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, Americans are growing tired of having to speculate about what is in a 1,000-plus page bill that is still being drafted in secret behind closed doors. The American people want transparency in this process, and they want real bipartisan reform. They want a step-by-step approach.

Why don't we work together out in the sunshine and add even a few of the elements Republicans have presented in our 53 health care alternatives?

One of these alternatives is my OPTION Act, H.R. 3889, that among other things would, number one, make the purchase of health insurance more affordable to more people. It would allow transparency in health care pricing; make all health care-related expenses tax deductible for everybody; and allow for individuals to keep their health insurance once they leave their jobs or shop across State lines.

We must bring health care reform back from the partisan abyss and give the American people real bipartisan health care reform.

RECOVERY ACT AIDING UPSTATE NEW YORK

(Mr. MAFFEI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAFFEI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about some of the recent investments that the Recovery Act has made in my home district in upstate New York.

A few weeks ago, Secretary of Energy Steven Chu came to Syracuse to tour some of our innovative renewable energy research facilities. When he was in town, we announced more than $1.4 million in funding for energy efficiency programs in the city of Syracuse alone.

The doors, windows, heating and cooling system at City Hall will be switched to a high efficiency, energy saving model. This is a great investment, because not only does it provide for lower carbon emissions, it will actually reduce the energy bills that Syracuse taxpayers will have to foot.

This weekend, I announced energy efficiency funding for the town of Irondequoit. Irondequoit has already had an impressive energy plan in place, so they will make the most of the $440,000 grant. Irondequoit will pursue projects like replacing lightbulbs at often-used public parks and creating a Deputy Commissioner of Public Works for Sustainability.

In my district, Mr. Speaker, the Recovery Act is making smart short-term and long-term investments. It is giving communities in my district the flexibility of making improvements and creating jobs.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. REHBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. REHBERG. This Saturday, as Americans celebrate Halloween, we should learn a valuable lesson from the frightening results Dr. Frankenstein's medical experimentation had.

Today, Congress is debating its own dangerous health care experiment. Stitched together in hidden laboratories from parts of at least five different bills and countless special interests, the final health care monster will ultimately hurt American seniors.

In Montana alone, more than 26,000 seniors choose to use Medicare Advantage. The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office warns of $162 billion in cuts to this popular program. Those will hurt those Montana seniors. Worse, this plan will increase the cost of prescription drug premiums for seniors by 20 percent over the next 10 years.

When it comes to America's health care system, the stakes are too high for reckless legislative experimentation. No one will remember how the monster was made, but they will remember the damage it did.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. HIMES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HIMES. Mr. Speaker, we are treated this afternoon to a steady stream of people rising, despite what they say, in opposition to fundamental health care reform. This long line of speakers, what do they have in common, apart from their party affiliation? They have really good health care, and they have got jobs guaranteed until January of 2011.

What about the millions of Americans who find themselves without jobs today and who, as they think about what the future holds, also think about and worry about and are terrified by the fact that their child may not be able to see a doctor when that child needs to?

We should talk about tort reform. We should talk about interstate competition of insurance. But only the bill being discussed now, not in secret, only the bill being discussed now provides for the coverage of those many millions of Americans who have lost their job in this recession. That is serious business, and that is what this House should continue to focus on.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. NEUGEBAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, the people of my district are frustrated and they are scared. They feel like their Federal Government is out of control. Now Speaker PELOSI is playing a game of hide-and-seek with a health care system that comprises one-fifth of our GDP.

The American people would like to know what you are hiding as they seek to find out what is in this bill, this massive, government-run health care bill. Perhaps you are hiding the fact that this will lead to government bureaucrats taking over control of seniors' health care.

Maybe you are hiding the fact that this bill is designed to include $163 billion in cuts to Medicare Advantage. These cuts will have an exceptionally harmful impact on seniors in rural areas, forcing many seniors into a one-size-fits-all government-run health care plan.

I would like to know, but I haven't seen the details of the bill because I don't know where they are hiding today. If you claim that it is true that the American people want government to take over health care, why is this process so closed and secretive, Madam Speaker?

The American people and our seniors deserve to know better. Madam Speaker, where are you?

OPENING OF THE JAMES A. FARLEY MEMORIAL BRIDGE

(Mr. HALL of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HALL of New York. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I attended the opening of the James A. Farley Bridge in Stony Point, New York. Eight months ago, that bridge was 80 years old and structurally deficient, one of 13 deficient bridges on the list issued by DOT after the I-35 bridge collapse in Minnesota.

This Monday, just yesterday, thanks to the hard work of so many, we celebrated the early opening of its replacement. This project is more than just a bridge; it is an investment in our community, in our country and in our future. It created jobs that cannot be outsourced, while strengthening the local communities.

The new bridge will hold three lanes of traffic and sidewalks on either side, keep our communities connected, reduce congestion, and strengthen the Route 9W corridor, providing faster response times for local EMS and less noise for neighborhoods with reduced detoured traffic.

We should celebrate the cooperation between Federal, State and local government officials, especially the supervisors, Howard Phillips and Phil Marino from Stony Point and Haverstraw, the two towns joined by the bridge. I would like to congratulate them and all the workers on a job well done.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, we have been told that the public option is now back on the table, but we have to call it by some other name. Well, I have done a little work on the criminal justice side, and we used to have something called prior acts evidence. You look at what someone has done in the past and you see how that allows you to interpret what they are doing now.

So let's look at what we have done with the issue of student loans. Oh, yes, we got rid of the private option for student loans this month, because the President and the Democrats said the government has to take it over. And now we have in this bill an effort to try and get rid of the only private option in Medicare. It is called Medicare Advantage.

But forget about that, because when they tell us now the private option is just an option for competition and they are not going to take over by government the health care system, trust them with that. Forget about the prior evidence. Give them the benefit of the doubt.

The American people aren't fooled. They look at what they have done before, they look at what they are doing now, and they are telling us, help us stop them. Help us stop them.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Mr. Speaker, you know, I will tell you what is scary. What is scary is the woman who came into my office a few weeks ago who shared her story with me to tell me about her breast cancer experience that she had just been through for the third time. She told me how I as a breast cancer survivor was fortunate because when I was diagnosed all I had to worry about was fighting the cancer. When she was diagnosed, she also one day later lost her job and, with it, her health insurance. So not only did she have to battle breast cancer, but she also was faced with battling how she was going to get her health care taken care of so she could get well from breast cancer and continue to be the survivor that she has been for many, many years.

Americans are tired of the party of "no." Americans are tired of obstacle after obstacle standing at that podium insisting on making up things that just aren't true.

There are bills out there that are available and accessible to anyone to look at. This has been an open and transparent process. But the bottom line is there are 46 million people that don't have health insurance. We need to provide stability and security to those that do and bring the costs down.

I challenge our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to work with us on true health care reform, instead of being the party of "no."

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. LATTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I come from northwest Ohio. I know that many of my colleagues from around this House go home every weekend, and it wasn't very long ago I was home and I was speaking with one of our small business owners.

He came up to me and said, BOBBY, I have a question to ask you. He said, Where are we on this health care?

I told him. I said, This is where it looks like we are going.

He said, Do you think it is going to pass?

I said, I am not really sure right now. But he said, You know what? I am going to tell you something. I have been trying to read these bills to the best of my ability to find out what is in them. I am going to tell you right now, if this bill passes, there is no way I can survive. I am going to have to close up.

We are talking about people and their health care, and it is very important. There is not one person in this Chamber that would say we should not be doing something about health care in this country. But we also have people out there trying to put jobs out there so people can work. And when I looked around that business where he was, you start saying, Where are these people going to go after this? We have over 10 percent unemployment in Ohio, and it is getting tougher. The worst is yet to come.

Mr. Speaker, the American people want health care reform, but we have to do it responsibly.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the people may be wondering what is going on here today. Well, you are watching the charge of the light brigade. The Republicans believe that they can just throw themselves into it and they will stop it. But they are not going to stop it.

The other night, Tuesday night, New York City, a friend of mine had a problem. He called a doctor's office and got the first question, which is always, What kind of insurance do you have?

He said, Well, I don't have any insurance. I am from out of the country.

They said, Oh, well, you can come in and see the doctor, but you have to bring $250 in cash or the doctor will not see you.

He said, I don't have that kind of cash.

They said, Well, tough luck. Go to the emergency room.

Now, that is the health care system that my colleagues in the light brigade want to protect. Keep trying to protect it, guys. It ain't going to work. The American people want a change, and they are going to get one.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded that the rules of the House require that Members address their comments to the Chair.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. CASSIDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Speaker, as a substitute for a plan that actually controls health care costs, the Senate majority leader has devised a gimmick. Under the plan announced yesterday, the Federal Government imposes billions of dollars of taxes on all 50 States, imposes billions in unfunded mandates via the Medicaid program, increasing the debt load of every citizen, creating a new government-run insurance program that, according to the CBO's official analysis, is more expensive than the status quo. Individual States can opt out, but their citizens cannot opt out of the taxes, and they can't opt out of the debt, and they can't opt out of the job losses that will result from these higher taxes and debt.

Real reform will not require gimmicks or job loss. States should not have to pass laws to save themselves. Real health reform lowers costs by empowering patients. If we give patients direct control over health care dollars and the information they need for value-conscious decisions, we will have reform.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. INSLEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, the debate we're having today is between two groups—those who believe we can improve America and those who believe we can't improve America. We believe we can improve American energy; they believe we can't. We believe we can improve health care; they believe we can't. We believe we can stop insurers from preventing us from having coverage because we have a preexisting condition; they believe we can't. We need some more Republicans and fewer Republican's because saying we can't improve America is not up to the standards that America was built on. We can stop insurance companies. Let's get some more of these Republican's to become Republicans and help us reform health care in this country.

HALLOWEEN HEALTH CARE

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in the dark caverns of the Capitol where the trolls roam at night, the Halloween health care bill is being drafted by a secret few. The bill is being written in secret so no one, especially seniors, see it.

Mr. Speaker, what is being cooked up in the dungeons of this building? Is it just too scary for people to know about? Well, probably so. You see, it takes $500 billion from Medicare and gives that money to the national Halloween health care bill. That's a frightening nightmare for people, especially seniors. And more importantly, it turns America's health over to the government.

Does anyone actually think the government can do it better? The Halloween health care bill will probably have the competence of FEMA, the efficiency of the post office, and the compassion of the IRS. The bill may be ready just in time for Halloween, and it will be a treat for the special interest groups, but it's a trick on the American people, especially the seniors. No wonder they're scared of it.

And that's just the way it is.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. COURTNEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. COURTNEY. Mr. Speaker, this past Sunday the front page of The New York Times reported a survey of insurance brokers across America who have now predicted that the increase in insurance rates for small businesses in 2010 will be 15 to 23 percent. Last year it was 7 to 12 percent. So if your premium as a small business for a worker was $4,500 in 2008, it will be $5,500 in 2010. That is the Halloween surprise for small businesses in America today. There is no group in America that takes a harder hit than the self-employed and small group markets who have no mechanism to pool their risk that large employers and people in the Congress benefit from, as members of the Federal Employee Health Benefits plan.

This bill will create a national purchasing exchange so that the risk-takers in America will actually have the opportunity to provide and buy affordable health insurance for themselves and their employees. It is for America's capitalism and for America's entrepreneurs that the need to fix this market is the most critical, and that is why it is time to stop listening to the voices of "no" and move forward with real health care reform that will make America's economy grow and be viable.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. ROE of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. As a physician with over 30 years experience in treating patients, I came to Washington to participate in the great health care debate. Everyone in this Chamber agrees, we need health care reform. I will tell you, to be the first, I want to opt out of the public option. We've tried that in Tennessee, and it was a fiscal disaster. Costs tripled in less than 10 years, quality decreased, and access decreased.

What are we going to do? We're going to take $400 billion to $500 billion away from our senior citizens' health care while in 2011, we're going to add 3 million to 3.5 million baby boomers each year. That's 30 million more people. Guess what: They can do the math. Decreased access, decreased quality, and increased costs will be the result of this right here.

Americans should ask themselves one question at the end of the day: When this huge, 1,000-page, incomprehensible bill, which I've read every page of, comes to fruition, will the health care that I get and my family gets and that my doctor is able to provide for me, will it improve? The answer is "no."

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. SUTTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, what we're seeing here is, we are on the brink of passing health care reform in this country. Why are we doing that? We're doing this for my constituents and constituents across the country. We're doing it for the grandparents who I saw on Sunday, whose 12-year-old granddaughter, a life full of promise, is awaiting a transplant, but she might not be able to get that transplant. They have optimistic signs that she would be fine, but she might not get that because her health insurance is about to reach its cap.

And we're doing it for the elderly gentleman who I met. He had a part of his arm stripped away because he had melanoma as a young man. He never had another day of sickness regarding melanoma in his life, but he has dodged health care issues forever because he couldn't get insurance because of his preexisting condition. Now he's on Medicare, and he has that system that is working for him.

But that's not how it should be in this country. You shouldn't have to wait to be 65 in order to access affordable, quality health care. We're better than that, and we're going to give the American people better than that.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. COFFMAN of Colorado asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COFFMAN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives will soon be debating a health care reform proposal on the floor of this Chamber. The biggest question in this proposal will be whether or not we should have a government-controlled health insurance option called the public option that is targeted to cost about $900 billion, half of which is on the backs of the taxpayers and small businesses of this country in the form of higher taxes, surcharges and fees, and the other half is money stripped out of the Medicare system; hundreds of billions of dollars stripped out of Medicare.

When the proponents tell you that if you like the insurance that you have, you can keep it, they're not referring to the 10 million seniors who are on the Medicare Advantage Program that will be phased out. Mr. Speaker, it's important that the proponents of the public option be honest with the seniors of this country in terms of what it will do to them.

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. CAPPS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, the news from the Senate that they will include a public option in the health reform bill is encouraging, as we in the House prepare to vote on comprehensive reform. It is also precisely what the majority of Americans want. They want true competition in the health insurance market, and only the public option can do that. If the current insurance market had wanted to provide equitable and affordable health coverage for Americans, we wouldn't have 47 million uninsured people.

These are our constituents, our neighbors, even our family members. It's the young mother who called me to tell me that her daughter, born with spina bifida, was being denied a life-saving surgery. I urge my colleagues to join me in welcoming the news from the Senate. Let's pass real health reform now.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. CARTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, the jury is out. The jury is looking right now, and they're wondering, What's going on with health care? We've heard all this evidence here today. Some say this; some say that. But the Democrats say, We're going to make it better, the government can do it better, and we're going to make it better. Our experience says, Wait a minute; the government doesn't do things very well.

So where's the evidence that it is going to do it better? Well, hold on. It's still behind closed doors. When we come out from underneath those closed doors, we'll give you 72 hours to try to figure out what we're doing, and then we're going to make you vote. I think the American people and the jury of the American public want this thing out in the sunlight. Open the doors. Share the information. Let us know what's going on, Mr. Speaker. That's what the American people need to know. Their health care is at stake.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. DEFAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DEFAZIO. Well, the Republicans are invoking Freddy Krueger and saying that he wrote the Democrats' health plan, and it's going to be dangerous for Americans. Really scary.

I'll tell you what's scary. Scary is losing your job and being confronted with a bill for continued health insurance that eats up two-thirds of your benefits. Even more scary—and this has happened to people in my district—is having your company go bankrupt and being told that your health insurance will cost more than your unemployment benefits. That is, if you can get it; if you've never been sick, if your kids have never been sick. You can go into the private market and buy a policy that exceeds your unemployment insurance. Of course if you have ever been sick, a preexisting condition, forget about it.

The Republicans promised 132 days ago that they would have their own health care plan. Where is it? Now 132 days later, you know why we don't have it, why there is a resounding silence on that side? Because if you are going to take care of people with health care, you have to take on their two biggest benefactors, the pharmaceutical industry and the insurance industry. And that's the last thing the Republicans want to do, take on their biggest campaign benefactors. We have to take on pharmaceuticals, take on the insurance industry and have meaningful reform for all Americans.

DEMOCRAT HEALTH PLAN HURTS AMERICAN SENIORS

(Mr. HASTINGS of Washington asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the Democrats, contrary to what we have been hearing, are behind closed doors, writing a sweeping change to our health care system. Unfortunately, a government takeover of health care, as we know, would raise taxes, eliminate choices, fine small businesses, and cut Medicare by more than $500 billion. According to the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office, the proposed cuts would result in millions of seniors losing their current plan, including 100,000 in my State of Washington. I have spoken with many hospitals in my district who say that Medicare cuts would have serious consequences on them.

We need reform, Mr. Speaker, but Americans deserve better than secret deals. I support proposals to make purchasing insurance more affordable, expand health savings accounts, help small businesses afford their benefits and end lawsuit abuse. It's time to begin open, transparent, bipartisan work on legislation that actually increases choices and lowers cost.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. WEINER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEINER. Ladies and gentlemen, I have a viewer's guide for what's going to be going on on this side of the aisle this morning and this afternoon. What essentially it comes down to is my Republican friends don't want you, the American people, to have what they have.

They say they don't want any government-run health care, but 55 of them have Medicare. You don't see them sending that back. They say that they don't want the plan that we have, which would create more choices for the American people. Well, they don't want you to have what they have. Go to the Web site for the Federal Employees Health Benefit plan and see what a great plan they have, but they don't want you to have more choice.

Frankly, I don't know what it is they do want. They said 131 days ago they were going to have a plan. You hear that sound? That's the sound of their plan. They don't seem to have one. I have heard us talk about all this stuff going on behind closed doors. My friends, there are five committees, five bills. You can read them. I know it's a lot of words, but you can see exactly what the plan is. Listen to the American people. Give them what you in Congress have, a public option, like Medicare; and choices, like the insurance plan you have.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded that the rules of the House require that remarks be addressed to the Chair.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. WITTMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WITTMAN. Mr. Speaker, today, millions of Americans cannot afford or do not have access to health insurance.

Since 1999, health care insurance premiums have more than doubled for most Americans. Virginians are not immune to the Nationwide trend in health care. For the last several years, health care premiums in Virginia have increased at approximately 10 percent a year, and today, more than 1.1 million Virginians are uninsured.

From the hourly worker in Newport News, Virginia, who must somehow find room in his or her budget to pay for health insurance, to the small business owner in Fredericksburg, Virginia, who voluntarily chooses to provide health insurance as a benefit to his or her employees but, with the slowing economy, is finding it incredibly difficult to absorb increased health insurance costs, Virginians are struggling to find affordable health care.

I've been traveling around my district, and have held dozens of meetings with constituents and with my 150-plus-member health advisory council, and thousands of e-mails are pouring into my office each week. In addition, I have also hosted multiple town hall meetings and tele-town hall meetings.

What I am hearing from my constituents is that they do not want to be forced into a new government-run health care plan that will limit their choices of doctors and of medical treatment options. Equally as important is to protect our small businesses, which are the backbone of our economy, from being penalized.

I hope that we will take this opportunity to craft legislation across the aisle that will make health care more affordable, that will enhance access for all Americans, that will ensure patients are getting their health care, and that will guarantee that doctors and patients, not insurance companies, are making important health care decisions.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SARBANES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SARBANES. Hang on, America. Help is on the way.

Mr. Speaker, a bill that will create insurance coverage for millions of people who have no insurance coverage now is on the way. A bill that will provide better coverage for those who are underinsured and that will deal with preexisting condition exclusions from coverage provisions is on the way. A bill that will strengthen Medicare is on the way. A bill that will improve our delivery system is on the way. A bill that will strengthen the health care workforce is on the way.

That is what is coming. The simple proposition we need to test here and what Americans want to know is, when it comes to the insurance industry, are we going to go on living in their world and playing by their rules or are they going to start living in our world and playing by our rules? That's the question here.

The bill we're putting forward is finally going to make the insurance industry adhere to good practices. That's why we're going to pass this bill. We're going to do it for the citizens of this country.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. GOODLATTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, somewhere in this Capitol, behind closed doors, the Democrats, by themselves, are writing a health care reform bill that is going to cost the taxpayers of this country more than $1 trillion.

Added on top of the enormous debt that we already have, this legislation is also going to include mandates that are going to risk millions of American jobs. At a time when we have nearly 10 percent unemployment and nearly 15 million people in this country looking for work, they're going to pass legislation that's going to cost millions of more jobs if they attempt to mandate on small businesses, which are struggling, an additional obligation of an 8½ percent payroll tax.

In addition, this is going to harm our senior citizens in a multitude of ways. Those of them who are on Medicare Advantage plans, like thousands in my congressional district in Virginia, are going to lose the opportunity to participate in those plans as they take $162 billion in cuts out of that portion of Medicare and $400 billion in cuts from Medicare overall.

Save our seniors. Vote against this bad plan.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BACA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, we need health care reform right now. We need it on behalf of the 47 million people who don't have insurance. We need it on behalf of the 217 in my district who don't have any insurance.

They talk about costs. What costs are going to go up if we don't do anything about health coverage?

Right now, many of our seniors are suffering. They're wondering how they're going to pay their health care bills, how they're going to put food on the table and how they're going to take care of themselves. A lot of youth are asking: How are we going to provide health insurance for a lot of us who don't have it?

We owe it to the American people. This is not about maintaining the status quo, and this is not about protecting the insurance companies. This is about doing something for the American people. It's time that we have a health plan that covers all Americans to make sure that we're not left out, to make sure that everybody has the ability to enjoy their quality of life and to be able to say: You know what? I know that I'm going to get coverage, and it doesn't matter where I am.

I am not going to maintain the status quo. With the Republicans, it's all about maintaining the status quo, and that's not what America wants. We need to make sure that we have a health plan.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, Senate Majority Leader HARRY REID has included an opt-out plan into this health care plan. We all know that it is still just a government-run plan that's going to require a vote of the legislature.

Now, do we really think that the Governor and the legislature are going to vote for a plan that opts them out of the plan but yet requires the taxpayers of that State to pay for that plan? Why, of course not.

Whether it's opt-out, opt-in, trigger plan—whatever it's called—it's still a government-run plan that's going to create an unfair advantage for the government against private insurance, causing many people to lose their plans.

I am not going to vote for a plan that raises taxes, that cuts benefits or that drives a Washington bureaucrat between the patients whom I represent and the physicians.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, during my recent trips back to my congressional district, I spent time with many small business owners who are still in business and who are able to continue to keep their doors open, but they do so by cutting back the health care benefits to themselves and to their workers. In some cases, they're getting rid of health care, and they lament that fact because they are very fond of their workforce. They believe that they're very productive and that they've helped them, but they simply cannot afford it.

They're part of a larger movement in this country of businesses, both large and small, to get out of the health care field and to stop offering these benefits, in some cases, to new hires and, in some cases, to all of their employees. We're seeing this with a record number of companies. Why are they doing that?

It's for the same reason that families are struggling. It's because the costs of health care continue to go up and up and up. It's crushing America's families and it's crushing America's businesses.

That's why we're going to have in the next couple of weeks a vote on health care in this House and in the Senate, and we will send a bill to the President's desk so that, finally, we will have real competition in this system and so that insurance companies will no longer run this system for their fun and profit.

The time for change is coming. It is time now for health care for all Americans.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. FALLIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. FALLIN. Mr. Speaker, one of the groups which is suffering under the tough economic times is seniors.

Some are still working to earn enough money just to make ends meet. Some are on fixed incomes, and every slight increase in expenses can cause them to experience difficult times.

That's why I'm very concerned about the Democrats' health care proposal to make massive cuts to Medicare Advantage plans, which would take benefits away from our senior citizens, even though President Obama has promised Americans that, if they like their health care plans, they can keep them.

The Democrats' plan to cut Medicare Advantage will limit choices; it will cause seniors to lose their coverage; it will increase prescription drug premiums by as much as 20 percent. It will even have an exceptionally harmful impact on seniors in rural areas when we try to force them into a one-size-fits-all government plan.

I will not support a health care plan that cuts benefits for millions of our seniors, who have worked their entire lives paying into this system. We can't ask our seniors on fixed incomes to pay higher costs, and we can't force seniors off of their health care plans they choose.

As a Republican, I am for health care reform, but it's wrong to finance health care reform on the backs of our seniors.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SCOTT of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SCOTT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, America is a great country. It is the greatest country on the face of the Earth.

The reason that it is the greatest country on the face of the Earth is that, at great moments of crisis, this country has risen to the occasion. When it was during the Depression, we rose to the occasion. When we needed Social Security, we rose to the occasion. With Medicare, we rose to the occasion.

Also at that time, there were the naysayers. There were people who would just say "no." That's what my friends on the other side of the aisle did. Where is their plan? They have no plan.

At this moment of crisis, we Democrats are standing here, and are saying America deserves better. America deserves the best. Now, they talk about our being in the dark with plans? We've had health care debates. We've had meetings. We've had bills moving through three houses in this Congress—two in the House and in the Senate. Republicans have had their shot. We need this bill. Let's stand up for America and have health care.

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. BACHMANN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, the Republicans were just castigated for being the party of "no," and I would submit that it is just the opposite, and this is why.

The President of the United States, in a historic move, gave a speech to the joint session of the House. He said, if any Republicans have positive ideas, they need to come to me, and I'll be happy to sit down with them.

Well, I wrote a letter to the President, taking him up on that wonderful offer, and said, I have a positive alternative, Mr. President. Could I sit down and share that with you? I'm still waiting by my desk for that return phone call, and I have yet to receive the courtesy reply as have multiple of my Republican colleagues offered to the President to share with him their positive alternatives.

The party of "no" is the party that locks the door on Republicans to even prevent them from coming into a committee room to offer our positive alternatives. We have them. What has the majority offered? They've offered to cut Medicare to senior citizens by $500 billion. Is that a positive alternative? We have loads of them. We're the party of "yes."

Stop being the party of "no."

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, all of the American people need health care now. Reform must come, and it's coming to the floor very soon.

For those who are pleased with their health care insurance, they can keep it. Their costs might even go down with reform. What we want to do is rescue the insurance from under anti-trust-ignoring insurance companies. We all pay insurance, and we like insurance, but no one wants to be abused by any system, and we have seen that happen.

The hospitals are attempting to perform all of this uncompensated care. With this reform, it will be different. I suppose that correcting preexisting conditions and getting sick will cause some to lose health care support. We must make this change.

You know, I keep hearing what the Republicans are saying, but Mr. Speaker, but that's not what the plan says.

REPEATING OUR MISTAKES

(Mr. McCLINTOCK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. McCLINTOCK. Mr. Speaker, today's unemployment rate of 9.8 percent last reached that level in 1983. President Ronald Reagan responded by cutting taxes and by reducing regulatory burdens on the economy, and he produced the biggest peacetime economic expansion in our Nation's history.

Today, President Obama is doing exactly the opposite. ObamaCare, cap-and-trade and the other measures promise the biggest tax increases and the heaviest regulations that we've ever seen.

Three Presidents within the last 100 years have responded to recessions by reducing taxes and regulations. Warren Harding, John F. Kennedy, and Ronald Reagan all produced rapid and dramatic economic recoveries.

We've had two Presidents in those 100 years who reacted to recessions by doing the opposite—Herbert Hoover in the early 1930s, who radically increased taxes and spending and who imposed unprecedented burdens on trade, and the other is Barack Obama.

As they say, those who refuse to learn from history are condemned to repeat it.

HEALTH REFORM

(Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that I've never heard someone quote Herbert Hoover as being so bad and President Obama as being so good. We have to remember that Herbert Hoover was actually a Republican.

Mr. Speaker, am I supposed to have the floor or do the Republicans have it part time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I rise in strong support of a national health care plan that provides comprehensive health care for every American.

Three House committees had many public hearings and public votes on the bill, H.R. 3200. Democrats are using the same public rules that the Republicans used when they were in charge. They just don't like them because they don't have the majority now.

We have so many people uninsured in our country. My own district has the highest uninsured in the country of people who have private insurance—35 percent of our district has private health care, and over 40 percent is uninsured because they can't afford it or their employers don't provide it.

We've given private insurance companies plenty of time to cover the 39 million U.S. citizens who don't have health care, but they can't do it because they can't make a profit on someone like that. So that's why we need a public option. H.R. 3200 will help that. We will have health care for everyone.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Members are requested not to traffic the well when another Member is under recognition.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. MILLER of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the constituents of the First District of Florida and the people across this country have spoken loud and clear: We do not want a public option or government-run health care.

But I guess the Democrats can't hear from behind closed doors.

The majority leaders have turned a deaf ear to the American people and continue to insist on a public option. Whether it be an exchange, a co-op, single payer, or whether States opt in or opt out, the fact is the majority party leaders, behind closed doors, are crafting a final health care bill that would force a public option down our throats.

If a robust public option is absolutely critical to health insurance for Americans, then why does this increased coverage not occur until at least 5 years after enactment?

This health care reform bill is a farce and should be voted down. Americans don't want government-run health care as their only option.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. SCHWARTZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SCHWARTZ. Mr. Speaker, as I sit here and listen to one after another of the Republicans here in Congress finding reasons not to move ahead, not to find that uniquely American solution to helping every American have access to health insurance, the fact is that we have to do more. We have to act right now to ensure that every American has access to insurance coverage; that that insurance coverage is affordable, and that it is meaningful; that it covers preexisting conditions and provides for ongoing care for chronic diseases; that we can ensure that Americans get quality care and the right care, including for our seniors.

Legislation we have coming before us protects seniors, makes sure that they see lower copayments for primary care, that they see lower copayments for prescription coverage.

The fact is that we can contain costs and help enable every American to have access to health insurance coverage. This is a moral imperative. It's an economic imperative for our families and for our businesses and for our Nation.

Fifty million Americans without health insurance, 14,000 a day being uninsured. It's time to get this done. It's time to act.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. KING of Iowa asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this whole health care debate started out clear back during the Obama-Hillary debate during the Presidential campaign.

President Obama has come to two premises: One is we spend too much money on health care. The proposed solution from Democrats? Spend a lot more, $1 to $2 trillion more.

The second premise: That too many are uninsured, 47 million or, as we just heard, 39 million. When you subtract from 47 million illegal aliens and immigrants and those who qualify under their employer and those who make over $75,000 a year and those who qualify for government programs, you're down to 12.1 million, not 47. That's less than 4 percent of the population.

They seek to overhaul 100 percent of the health insurance industry in America and 100 percent of the health care delivery system in America to do what? To reduce that number of uninsured from 4 percent down to something like perhaps 2 and, in the process, put in place the framework for socialized medicine.

Additionally, they give us an opt-out. Well, here's what I'll opt out of: I'll opt out of funding abortions. I'll opt out of funding illegals. I'll opt out of lawsuit abuse, tax increases, and Medicare cuts.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. FUDGE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FUDGE. Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to a lot of this today, and I just feel that it's time that the American people hear the truth.

The truth is that more than 60 percent of the American people want health care reform. The truth is that seniors pay much too much for their prescriptions and for their medications. The truth is that the American people are being mistreated by their insurance companies as they exist today. And the truth is that Democrats are working to fix the problem and not just be obstructionist.

LET'S MOVE FORWARD ON A JOB AGENDA FOR AMERICANS, NOT AN AGENDA OF GOVERNMENT- RUN HEALTH CARE

(Mr. CAMPBELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Democrat majority in this town is determined to install a government-run health care system which will be costly, inefficient, and provide bad care. We all know that.

I happen to support something that's directionally opposite to that, something called the Patients' Choice Act, which, instead of putting new bureaucracies in between people and their doctors, it would eliminate some of the existing bureaucracies and get employers and the government out of the way between people and their doctors so that they can control their own health care.

But you know what? As important as the health care debate is here, do you know what people in America want right now? Jobs. They want jobs. And if there is one thing this plan that the Democrats are proposing will do, it will cost even more Americans their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask you and I would ask the President where are the jobs you promised? Let's move forward in America on a job agenda, not an agenda of government-run health care.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. HASTINGS of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have been here 18 years fighting for health care for Americans. There are, regardless of whose numbers you use, millions of uninsured people in this country and tens of millions who are underinsured and have become, in many respects, the prime justification for moving forward with one of the most aggressive health care reform agendas in modern history.

However, despite the unquestionable need for intervention, some have sought to dominate the health care debate with fear-mongering, misinformation, and blind opposition to key reform elements without offering substantive and high-quality alternatives. This perpetuation of fictions and misinterpretations is off base and has steered the health care discussion off course.

One thing I asked Americans all summer long as we got to this point was name me the day in the last 10 years that your health care went down. Name the day. You name the day.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. COLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic health care bill now being drafted behind closed doors is bad for seniors, bad for taxpayers, and bad for the quality of America's health care system.

It will cut Medicare spending on seniors. It will cost taxpayers $1 trillion, and it will push the American medical system toward an underfunded, over-regulated, government-run health care system. We can do better than that.

Republicans have offered in good faith positive proposals putting patients first, reforms that protect the doctor-patient relationship, increase accessibility, and truly make health care more affordable. However, these ideas have never been heard in the back rooms of the Capitol where the Democrats are crafting their own partisan proposals.

Mr. Speaker, the majority's proposals continue to ignore medical liability reform, something the President himself said would be addressed. Tort reform has yet to be raised in the deliberations of our Democratic majority.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot allow the government to stand between patients and health care. Americans are smart enough to know the difference between no choice and a real choice.

THE TEA PARTY MINORITY

(Ms. NORTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the TEA Party minority didn't succeed this summer as they thought they had, so they have come to the floor this afternoon. And they are not going to succeed any more on the floor than they succeeded with the noise of the summer. And how do we know it? The public option has come roaring back.

The people got through the noise, and they understand now to a fare-thee-well. In fact, my greatest fear is that now more people want the public option than will qualify for the public option in the bill, once they came to understand the relationship between what they're paying for insurance, that health insurance has been going up at a rate three times their wages, and that is why the wages of the residents of our country have been flat for decades. Once they understood that, they put two and two together.

The American people are smart. They are smarter than the TEA Party crowd that has taken to the floor this afternoon.

EXPRESSING CONCERN REGARDING THE EFFECT OF PROPOSED HEALTH CARE REFORM ON SENIOR CITIZENS

(Mr. KLINE of Minnesota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KLINE of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern about the consequences of the majority party's proposed health reform to the members of our Greatest Generation.

As my colleagues have stated over and over today, the bill under consideration in the House would pose a major threat to our senior citizens. I'm especially troubled by the legislation's consequences for the more than 10 million Americans who rely on Medicare Advantage for their health care coverage.

In my home State of Minnesota, more than 230,000 senior citizens rely on Medicare Advantage. More than 17,000 of these men and women live in my district. And as their Representative, I simply cannot abide limiting their choices, let alone stripping them of their coverage completely. These are Minnesotans who, if they like their insurance, can't keep it.

Mr. Speaker, we can do better. Let's push the reset button and start over in a bipartisan way to write legislation, not behind closed doors, but out in the open.

HEALTH CARE REFORM FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

(Mrs. DAHLKEMPER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. DAHLKEMPER. Mr. Speaker, I came to Congress in January to make a difference for my community, to make a difference for my district.

Today, I heard from one of my constituents who owns a small business, a printing company in northwestern Pennsylvania. This small business owner received notification that health care premiums for his business are increasing by 51.1 percent this year. That dwarfs the 14 percent increase of last year and the 20 percent increase from the previous year and dwarfs the 28 percent increase that I saw in my own small business when I was still working there.

Anyone who has ever worked in a small business knows that these costs are unsustainable. This small business owner told me that his business' new family rate will be in excess of $1,700 per month. He wrote, "I don't know what can be done, but it is small businesses like mine that cannot afford these increases."

Mr. Speaker, we must not allow our small businesses to suffer so unnecessarily when something can be done. This is a clear and urgent need to pass health care reform legislation. I encourage my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to embrace reform.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. LINDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, if we were really debating health care, you could wonder if some of these things could be said with a straight face.

This isn't about health care; it's about control. Who's going to control these decisions? This entire debate could be put on a bumper sticker that says, simply, "Who Decides?" The majority wants Washington decisions and we want individual decisions.

Mrs. Clinton summed it up best 15 years ago in the last health care debate. She said, We can't trust the American people to make these decisions.

But the majority can't keep their hands off this trillion dollar decision; so they put into one of the bills things like $1.6 billion for streetlights. How many people are going to get insured with that? Or $10 billion to shore up union—their friends—insurance funds? I wonder how many people are going to get insured with that. Or the payoff to the trial lawyers, who cause us to spend $200 billion a year in defensive medicine to prevent being sued, who's helping them?

Mr. Speaker, this is about control.

THE PARTY OF "NO"

(Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DOYLE. Well, I guess all day we're going to hear from the party of "no," no health care plan, no ideas for America.

To the people who have lost their jobs and can't get health insurance because the insurance companies said, No, you have a preexisting condition, they say "no." Well, our party has an answer for that. Our health care plan will stop that.

For people in this country who have filed bankruptcy because insurance companies stopped paying on their chronic conditions, this party over here says "no." Well, Democrats say "yes." Our health care bill will cure that.

For our senior citizens who need help with their drugs and closing the doughnut hole, the party of "no" doesn't have a plan. This health care bill will help close the doughnut hole.

So I say to my friends over there, the negative nabobs of negativity, "no" is not a solution for America. Democrats have a plan that will cover all Americans and provide health care and reform this insurance industry that has abused so many people in this country.

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. BIGGERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, for the first time since 1975, seniors will not be receiving a Social Security cost-of-living increase in fiscal year 2010. And now on top of that, seniors are worried about their Medicare plans. In almost every senior center that I have visited in my district in the last few months, 50 percent of the residents have told me they are on Medicare Advantage plans. These seniors like the plans that they have, and they want to keep them.

The administration has said many times that if you like the health care plan you have, you can keep it. That will not happen with Medicare Advantage, and seniors are upset and angry.

Let's support health care reform for all Americans that doesn't harm the plans that seniors rely on. Let's help all Americans.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BUTTERFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BUTTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, what we are seeing today is terribly disappointing. Health care reform is necessary and it is urgent. There are powerful forces in this country who are determined to keep 47 million Americans without health insurance, and this same group is opposed to giving competition to the insurance industry.

If we don't reform health care, Medicare costs will surely bankrupt our Nation. That is a fact. If we don't reform the cost of employer-sponsored insurance, we will bankrupt companies and families. If we don't act now, uncompensated care will close the doors of rural hospitals in my district and your districts across the country.

We are ready to move forward. Democrats are ready to make this bold and visionary decision. I am disappointed we don't have help from the other side.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. PAULSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PAULSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call attention to another job-killing proposal that only Washington could dream up. Only here would people proclaim to lower the cost of health care by taxing it and making it more expensive.

Just today it has been reported that House leadership is now likely to include a $20 billion excise tax on medical devices as part of their health care reform bill. This new proposal will halt innovation and ultimately make health care more expensive for patients.

One week ago I held a field hearing in my district about the impact of this innovation tax. I heard from companies both large and small that there will be resultant job losses and cuts to research and development.

Mr. Speaker, these proposed taxes are a very wrong-headed approach. Let's get back on the right track and remove this tax so we can keep the jobs we have and make sure that we continue the innovation that is alive and well in both Minnesota and in our Nation.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. HOLT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, in these delaying tactics that we see from the other side, let's not lose track of the big picture. The health care reform legislation taking shape recognizes the different ways that Americans get their health care and helps each one. Those who get their health coverage through their employment will find that insurance companies cannot yank them around, or cut them off if their health treatment becomes expensive, or discriminate against them for pre-existing conditions.

Those who get their health care through Medicare will keep the Medicare they know and love; only it will be better. Closing the gap in the coverage of prescription medicine, the so-called doughnut hole, and moving toward a more patient-based, less procedure-based system. And those not well served by today's existing system, small businesses, employees and employers, people between jobs, individual contractors and consultants, can get their coverage at lower group rates and can get assistance in paying those premiums. And overall, this will hold down the rising cost of health care in America.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. HARPER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HARPER. Mr. Speaker, do we have good doctors in this country? Do we have good surgeons? Do we have good hospitals? And do we have reasonable access to that care? The answer is clear that we do.

Do you believe that a government takeover of our health care system will make health care better or worse? Do you really trust the Federal Government to take over this important part of our lives? The last thing that we need is to have some government bureaucrat standing between you and your doctor on making these important decisions.

Finally, the Democratic health care plan will hurt seniors by cutting Medicare. This Democratic plan will push unfunded mandates to my home State of Mississippi in the average amount of $360 million a year for the next 10 years. My district and our country simply can't afford this.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SCHAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SCHAUER. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I am from the State of Michigan, where people are losing their health insurance every day. Businesses are struggling to pay for health insurance for their employees.

I rise today to give voice to one of my constituents, Mike Gossett, who works for Apollo Express, a trucking company in Jackson, Michigan. He says he is a partner in this company of 70 full- and part-time employees. They have 42 employees on their health insurance program. Just this year, they received notice of a 15 percent increase in their health insurance rates for next year. He tells me this happens each and every year, and they are looking for answers. He fears that they will be forced to continue to decrease their coverage where they will just be able to offer catastrophic coverage for their employees.

Our families and our businesses are paying more and more every year and getting less and less. He is calling upon us, Democrats and Republicans, to fix this problem. That's why I am here in Congress, and I hope we can work together to pass health care reform.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. JORDAN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JORDAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it happened last week. Who would have thought that in the United States of America, a Federal Government pay czar, a Federal Government bureaucrat, would tell a private American citizen how much money they can make. But it happened last week.

And now if the majority party has their way, coming soon to you and your family, a Federal takeover of health care with all of the taxes and all of the bureaucrats getting between you and your family.

Mr. Speaker, pay czar, car czar, energy czar, a $1.4 trillion deficit, sometimes I actually think the other party won't be happy until government runs everything. Sometimes I actually think the other party won't be happy until they have an IV hooked up to the taxpayer wallet and they can hit the drip button every time they want.

What we need is common sense, what we need is real reform, not more government.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. FARR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of a bill that obviously some people in this room haven't read. And some people in this room don't realize that in order to get results, you have got to do the positive. You have to work hard and you have to vote "yes." Voting "no" doesn't provide any leadership; it just keeps the status quo.

But remember, part of this bill is going to have everybody in America have the same kind of insurance that we in Congress have. They don't want to admit that. They don't want to give up that insurance. They won't say "no" to that insurance. They won't say "no" to the TRICARE insurance that spouses and children of military folks get. That's what we are going to open it up to. That is the Medicare rates. They won't say "no" to Medicare for senior citizens. They just say "no" to the bill that is going to try to solve it for everybody else who doesn't have access to health care and can't afford health care and has preexisting conditions and can't get health care.

Also, insurance companies are raising premiums right now, all over this country, including the rates that we here in Congress will have to pay. And the party of "no" has said nothing about that. Read the bill. Yes, read the bill.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would ask Members to respect the gavel and allow each Member the opportunity to have their say.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. POSEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POSEY. Mr. Speaker, 57 percent of Americans believe the majority's health care plan will raise their health care costs. Only 18 percent believe it lowers costs. Fewer than 1 in 4 Americans believe this plan will improve the quality of health care in America. And according to the Rasmussen poll out yesterday, this is a fact.

So what is Washington's response? To press on. The omnipresent defenders of the nonexistent problems of 80 percent of Americans are crafting another plan, in secret, one they haven't even read yet.

The American people have given this plan a vote of no confidence. Given the hundreds of billions of dollars in budget shortfalls for health plans Washington already runs—Medicare, Medicaid, SCHIP—is it any wonder the American people don't believe what they are being told about this?

It is time to go back to the drawing board, and we on this side of the aisle stand ready, willing, and able to work with you in a bipartisan fashion for the best interests of the people of this great country.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. TSONGAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. TSONGAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss the important responsibility in front of us on health care reform. We are at a momentous time in our history. For the first time, we have a bill that has been approved by all five committees of jurisdiction. And although there are still details to be worked out, for the first time the majority of us have consensus on the structures and goals of this bill. We have never gotten this far, and I feel privileged to be in the House of Representatives at this time.

So now is not the time to say "no," to instill false fear, and to derail this important effort. We must work together to make sure that what we end up passing is the best it can be for the American people because the cost of doing nothing is too great. Without reform, the cost of health care for the average American family is expected to rise $1,800 every year, with no end in sight. If we don't act now, this problem is only going to get worse. If we don't act, 14,000 Americans will continue to lose their health insurance every single day. We are in a unique moment.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BARTON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, my friends on the majority side have stood before this body today asking about the Republican alternative, where it is. Well, I would ask my friends on the majority side, where is their bill? The three committees in the House of Representatives each passed different bills back in the summer. Those bills haven't been merged. The Senate passed a conceptual document. Legislative language is not yet public on that bill.

We will have a Republican alternative, and I can tell you right now what will not be in it. There won't be individual mandates that millions of Americans can't afford. There won't be employee mandates that thousands of small businesses can't afford. There won't be a health care choices administration that tells the private insurance sector what kind of coverage they have to provide. And there won't be a comparative research bureaucracy that could easily lead to rationing of care.

There will be a national pool that covers all preexisting conditions. There will be subsidies for low-income Americans. There will be some sort of a compensation package for our health care providers. So I would ask my majority: Where is their bill?

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am sad today. I hear my Republican colleagues just getting up to say "no." I tell my Republican colleagues, we have one of the greatest problems that we have ever confronted in this country. Health care has doubled in the last 8 years, and it will double in the next 8. And by the year 2020, health care costs will be $25,000.

The bankruptcy of the steel industry, the bankruptcies in the auto industry and the small business industries are directly a cause from this.

Listen to Daniel Webster and see what Daniel Webster had to say. He said this—it is on the wall up there, and I urge my Republican colleagues to look at it—Let us develop the resources of our land, call forth its power, build up its institutions, promote all of its great interests, and see whether we also in our day and generation may not perform something worthy to be remembered.

I urge my colleagues to join us in this. Let us sign together to move forward a bill that offers greatness to our country.

JOBS, JOBS, JOBS

(Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a little memory check: Do we remember when the administration promised that by spending almost $1 trillion, unemployment would go no higher than 8 percent? Well, now it's close to 8 percent.

But not only has this administration failed to create jobs, it is rushing to enact other bills, other legislation that would lead to the loss of millions of more jobs.

The cap-and-trade bill would cost the loss of 2 to 3 million jobs a year here in the United States. This health care proposal could cost Americans 4.7 million jobs and lead to $1 trillion in new spending and cuts in Medicare.

Mr. Speaker, it's time to stop spending trillions of dollars in wasteful government programs. It's time to stop targeting our senior citizens. What will it take, Mr. Speaker, for this administration and this Congress to finally start focusing on creating jobs?

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. WOOLSEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, our chance to make health care available to and affordable for the people of the United States is here. I prefer that we include the robust public option in our final plan because, first, it saves more than $110 billion over any other plan, it covers far more people, and it provides real competition to private health insurers, which in turn will provide lower cost and higher quality for the people that are insured in the United States.

This is what we need. This is what we need to do for the people of our country. And now is the time for us to get on with it and do it.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BISHOP of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BISHOP of Utah. Over 200 years ago, the Founding Fathers foresaw the health care problems that we have today and they proposed a solution. We call it federalism. See, if something has to be done the same way at the same time by everybody, only the government can do it. But if you want creativity or to take into account different circumstances for justice, then States are, as Louis Brandeis said, the "laboratory of democracy."

My State of Utah has instituted a health care reform the right way based on consumer choice and options where business has stable cost, workers have affordable portable options, and it's designed for the demographics of Utah. But if the Pelosi bill or the Baucus bill were to be passed the way they are written today, that State innovation is destroyed.

All solutions and intellect are not here in this city. Creative solutions can happen when the Federal Government gets off the backs of individuals with their mandates and regulations and out of their pockets with their taxes; then real people have the ability to find truly creative solutions if we, the Congress, let them.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. RICHARDSON. I would like to show you the headlines from my community; "It's Official: It's a Stinker." And what's a stinker? That, according to the U.S. Census and the American Community Survey, in the largest county in this Nation, 22.3 percent of the people do not have health care insurance. In my district, Long Beach, 18.8 percent; in Compton, 25.5 percent. That's one out of four people are walking around and do not have health care. And that's important to all of us.

Why are we the only industrialized nation that doesn't provide health care? Why is it that for my friends on the other side of the aisle we can spend billions for a war, but we can't spend the same for health care? Something is wrong.

We applaud the Congress and the Senate and Senator REID for stepping up. We need to do this, and we need to do it now. I'm not willing to look one out of four constituents in the face and say you're not good enough. Everyone deserves health care. And, oh, by the way, it helps all of us.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if you like your current plan, it had better not be Medicare Advantage because the Democrat health plan proposal cuts $162 billion from that program for our seniors. The reason is twofold; they need cuts to pay for their new government-run health care program and they think insurers in the program are overpaid by 14 percent. Tell that to the 25 percent of seniors who are enrolled in the program nationwide. I guess they weren't included in the folks who can "keep their plan if they like it."

Perhaps the Democrats didn't look at the plus side of Medicare Advantage. Studies show that those in the program spend fewer days in the hospital and experience fewer readmissions. A study in California showed that those enrolled in Advantage plans spent 30 percent fewer days in the hospital and were 15 percent less likely to be readmitted to the hospital. I would say that accounts for a huge savings.

The Congressional Budget Office also says the Democrats' health care plan would increase seniors' Medicare prescription drug premiums by 20 percent over the next decade. I thought reform was supposed to be improvements, not a plan to soak our seniors.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the men and women of this great Nation are not stupid, even though there have been strident, permanent and significant efforts to mislead them; that reached its heyday in August. But now we're talking about a public option because the people are speaking now.

And so I want to salute the American people; you want affordable health care, which means you are sick and tired of the rise in premiums, the cost of premiums and the number of denials that you are getting after dutifully paying those premiums for years and years. So I want to congratulate the American people; you are about to have a victory with respect to health care.

PUBLIC OPTION TRIGGER

(Mr. CONAWAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONAWAY. Mr. Speaker, frustrated this summer by diligent and watchful Americans, the President, the Speaker and the Senate Majority Leader have been unable to create a single-payer health plan, the single largest expansion in the cost, size and authority of the Federal Government in 70 years. But rather than give up, the Democrat leadership have decided to float an idea as a misdirection play to get what they want. They call it a trigger; I call it a wolf in sheep's clothing.

While some might argue that a trigger would lower health care costs, Americans are awake and watching and they know better. They see this wolf and realize that a trigger paves the road toward government control of health care and the loss of individual choice of health care decisions.

On this Halloween week, I urge the Speaker to take off the mask of reform and focus on health care solutions that don't include the government takeover of health care. The American people deserve honesty in this debate and won't be scared into supporting a trigger.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. LUJÁN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUJÁN. Mr. Speaker, our constituents have asked us to put them first, not say no and support the status quo. I ask my colleagues from the other side, from both sides, to listen to them and help them.

I have a constituent who has had health problems since she was 21, who has spent her life shackled by high copays, inaccessible insurance, and little care, and is asking us to help her. She has endured through two bankruptcies and many undertreated health problems that cause her pain every day.

Another constituent is facing increases of 20 percent each year in premiums for her business. Each year, these insurance costs are skyrocketing, and neither she nor her employees can afford them.

Throughout the country, the American people are asking us to help, but we keep hearing "no"—"no" to those with illnesses and "no" to those who struggle with the high cost of health care.

Let us do what's right. Let's come together. Let's have the courage to say yes for the American people.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, as the House majority debates with itself in secret on the future of health care, the American people are justified and worried about what is being discussed behind those closed doors.

As I always do, I have spent months listening to seniors across my district, and they are particularly concerned about how so-called "reform" will affect their Medicare and the medical care on which they rely every day.

Let me tell you, they are wise. They know that the so-called "Medicare savings" that are proposed to pay for the Speaker's $1 trillion reform bill sounds an awful lot like Medicare cuts to them. In fact, there are $500 billion in cuts to Medicare over 10 years in the bill, cuts that affect them, the doctors that treat them, and the hospitals who care for them.

Specifically, the majority plans to slash the Medicare Advantage program by more than $120 billion. Experts believe that nearly 3 million seniors will be thrown off Medicare Advantage and millions more will pay out-of-pocket expenses or face reduced benefits. We can't let this happen.

OPTING OUT OF THE GOVERNMENT TAKEOVER

(Mr. PRICE of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PRICE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we learned an interesting thing: the Senate health care bill will include a fig leaf opt-out of the government-run health care plan. Now, that brings up some interesting points and questions: Will Americans also be allowed to opt out of the rest of the government takeover of health care? Will they be able to opt out of the $800 billion in tax increases? Will they be able to opt out of the $500 billion in slashes to Medicare? Will they be able to opt out of forcing millions of Americans onto government-run medicine? Will they be able to opt out of a government bureaucrat getting between doctors and patients? The truth is, Mr. Speaker, anyone who seriously thinks an opt-out is the answer to all of these harmful provisions has already opted out of reality.

What the American people know is that there are positive solutions like H.R. 3400 and the others included from the Republican Study Committee and the Republican Conference. The American people want patients empowered and they want positive reforms. That's what we should be working on.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. MORAN of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it's nice to see our colleagues on the other side of the aisle engaged in the health care issue. Unfortunately, it's in a negative manner again with no positive recommendations for us to move forward.

You know, this is what happened back in the 1990s when we tried health care reform; there was unanimous Republican opposition to that effort. And, of course, during the 8 years of the Bush administration, we had no effort to deal with a health care plan.

So now where do we stand? Well, back in the 1990s, the average family paid about $7,000 to $9,000 for a family policy; today, they're paying $12,000 to $14,000. We know that within another decade, if we don't do something today, they're going to be paying $29,000 to $36,000 for a family health policy. Now, that might be okay if we were healthier as a result, but out of 110 countries surveyed, we are 72nd. Seventy-one countries are healthier than we are.

Our health care system isn't working. It's too expensive, we're not getting what we're paying for, and it's got to change. Now!

COMMONSENSE HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. FORTENBERRY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FORTENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, Terry recently wrote me, "Congressman, I can buy a car in Iowa, beer in Kansas, a fishing license in South Dakota, land in Colorado, but health insurance? No place but Nebraska."

Mr. Speaker, in these difficult times people are hurting. Families, and especially seniors, need more affordable options, from what they put on their table to what they put in their medicine cabinets.

My constituent, Terry, pointed out a commonsense reform—purchasing health insurance across State lines. There are other reforms, such as appropriately addressing preexisting conditions, promoting a culture of health and wellness to drive down costs, creating new insurance risk pool models for small businesses and families, strengthening community health centers, and expanding opportunities for health savings accounts. These changes could mark a truly bipartisan policy effort that increases competition among health insurance companies and benefits all Americans.

REFORM HEALTH CARE NOW

(Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the President said our health care is too costly. I agree. But the Democrat plan doesn't reform or eliminate the $1 trillion in waste. So you will pay more—not just your children or your grandchildren, but you. How? Their plan has a wheelchair tax, a hospital bed tax, asthma device tax, artificial hip tax. Diabetes supplies, medicines, home oxygen equipment, all taxed. Have a heart attack? There's taxes on heart monitors, heart valves and pacemakers. Have health insurance? They tax you if you have it and tax you if you don't. Employer paid insurance? They tax them if they will and they tax them if they won't. States can opt out of the government-run plan, but you still have to pay the taxes. It's taxation without hospitalization.

Let's reform Medicare. Reform Medicaid. Reform health care. Cut the waste. Improve quality. Let people buy across State lines, join groups, make insurance personal, portable, permanent. Millions of Americans are begging us to fix the problems, not finance the problem. Millions of Americans can't all be wrong.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. WILSON of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of liability reform.

I have heard from people all across my district in Ohio about how much they need health insurance reform. I have heard from Dawn, a small business owner who has a story that is truly heartbreaking.

Due to a doctor's mistake when her son was 23 days old, Dawn's son was left with lifelong brain damage. For the past 10 years, she and her husband have struggled to find insurance for her son. When no insurance would cover him, they were forced to pay out of pocket for all of his doctors' appointments, physical therapy, and they are currently living at the poverty level. Between the two of them, they have held as many as five jobs to try to cover their son's medical expenses.

Last year, in my district in Ohio, there were 1,270 health care-related bankruptcies. Without comprehensive health care insurance reform, Dawn's family could be the next one.

We are at a breaking point. We must come together and bring security and stability to our health care system for families like Dawn's and for everyone else in this country.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. WHITFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, there are many provisions of the Democratic health care bill that we support, like taking care of the preexisting condition problem.

But we also oppose cutting Medicare by $500 billion over 10 years. We oppose taking $155 billion out of the hospital account. We oppose reducing Medicare Advantage by $123 billion. We oppose taxing, putting a surtax on small business men and women, thousands of them. We oppose individuals being penalized 2.5 percent of their gross income if they do not buy a policy. We oppose requiring employers to pay 8 percent of the gross wages of their employees if they do not provide insurance. Then, after all of that, there still is $200 billion needed to pay for this expensive health care bill.

Those on this side of the aisle are willing to work with the other side of the aisle if they would simply open the door and give us the opportunity.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I respect a great deal my colleague from Kentucky who is on the Energy and Commerce Committee, but I heard him mostly talk about what he opposes.

That's the problem with the Republican mantra on health care reform. They are opposed to so many things, but we really don't know what they are supportive of. The fact of the matter is from the very beginning we tried to include both sides of the aisle on this health care reform, but essentially what we heard from the Republican side was they didn't like this, they didn't like that, and, ultimately, they didn't like anything.

Now we are forced, I suppose, to bring a bill to the floor which probably will get mostly or maybe only Democratic support, but it will cover everyone. It will provide that universal health care that has been so lacking with so many people now who can't find health insurance or find it increasingly unaffordable. The public option is a very important part of that, because basically it will create competition and bring down costs for the average American.

We are moving forward now. We would like to have bipartisan support. But if we don't, we are still moving forward, because we know that the promise of health care for every American is really crucial.

PROTECTING AMERICAN SENIORS

(Mrs. MILLER of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, as Democratic leaders retreat behind closed doors to craft their government takeover of health care, American seniors are rightly concerned about what $500 billion in cuts in Medicare will mean to them.

Throughout this process, Democrats have made clear that they intend to force American seniors to carry a large share of the cost of reform, and this includes eliminating Medicare Advantage. Democrats understand how negative the reaction will be when seniors learn that they are scrapping this program, so they have placed a gag order on companies that provide this coverage, stopping them from communicating with seniors on the ramifications of this change.

That's right, the Democrats who promised transparency and accountability have gone behind closed doors to craft legislation and have used the power of government to stop dissenters from communicating with American seniors. Well, American seniors are right to be concerned.

With the job-killing tax increases the Democrats are also talking about, American workers need to be concerned as well, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps that is why the Democrat majority will not allow us to have 72 hours to read the bill before it's voted on.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. ROSKAM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROSKAM. Mr. Speaker, if you are from the northwest suburbs of Chicago, today you woke up and you looked at the Chicago Tribune and you read an article that said your property taxes are going to go up 20 percent. If you turned on the radio, you probably heard folks talking in Chicagoland about unemployment at 10.5 percent in Illinois, a number that we have not seen since the early 1980s. If you have been listening to the debate in Washington, D.C., in the past couple of weeks, you have been hearing about this crushing debt that is coming on you, your children, and your grandchildren.

I went this afternoon to the Bureau of the Public Debt in downtown Washington and watched within a twinkling of an eye $44 billion that was borrowed on a 2-year note. That type of attitude and the attitude of spending and spending and spending is becoming weary for the folks that I represent in the Sixth District of Illinois.

It's time for this Congress to discipline itself and come up with a health care plan that meets people's needs but doesn't break the bank.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. CULBERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, the people in Texas that I represent oppose the Pelosi-Obama government takeover health care bill by a margin of 77 percent because we understand in Texas that our health care system needs a tune-up, not a trade-in. We need to focus, as the conservative minority has, on reducing the cost of health insurance and making it affordable and portable.

We, in the conservative minority, the temporary minority, have authored legislation that will make insurance portable across State lines, that will bring down the cost of health insurance by enacting tort reforms nationwide to protect doctors from frivolous litigation as we did in Texas. In Texas, we adopted tort reform, and the cost of health insurance dropped for all Texans, and about 400,000 additional Texans got health insurance who could not before.

We need to make sure that the greatest health care system ever created in the history of the world is protected, that we protect the doctor-patient relationship. Let's focus on reducing the cost of health insurance, making it affordable and portable.

Give our health care system a tune-up, not a trade-in.

GOVERNMENTAL TAKEOVER OF HEALTH CARE AND THE DETRIMENTAL EFFECT IT WILL HAVE ON OUR SENIORS

(Mr. BROWN of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to highlight the Democrats' plan to pay for their government takeover of health care by cutting nearly $162 billion of Medicare at the expense of our seniors.

Across the Nation, nearly 11 million seniors chose Medicare Advantage plans as their preferred coverage. Of those 11 million, over 11,000 seniors in the First District of South Carolina, an area with many retirees, may have their coverage dropped or benefits cut if the Democrats have it their way.

Despite the President's promise that if you like your current plan you can keep it, it is clear that some seniors will eventually be forced into a government-run plan. Additionally, the CBO has said that the Democrats' plan will increase seniors' Medicare prescription drug costs by 20 percent over the next decade.

As Medicare dangerously approaches bankruptcy, Democrats must open the process up to Republicans to work to repair this rapidly failing program and protect our seniors from rising drug costs, limited coverage, and reduced quality of care. Republicans vow to honor our seniors by blocking Washington's bureaucrats from overregulating their health care and by providing options and the best quality coverage for all Americans.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. OLSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OLSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues in the majority have repeatedly promised that under their public option plan, individuals can keep the coverage they currently have and nothing will change except they will have more choices at a lower cost.

As I speak with employers and small businesses in my district, the truth is vastly different. Several employers in the district I represent have candidly stated that dropping private insurance for employees, instead of paying a mandatory 8 percent surtax, makes the most economic sense for their business. Employees will no longer have the choice to keep the coverage they currently have under this scenario.

Raising taxes, eliminating choices for Americans, and placing the government in charge of health care, that hardly strikes me as a choice. The hardworking Americans in the 22nd District of Texas and cities and towns across America were promised a choice.

I ask my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, where is the choice in this government-mandated care?

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. LUMMIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. LUMMIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express what is my greatest hope and my greatest concern in 1 minute.

My greatest concern is that, by using Medicare as a means to fund this new program, you will be taking more money away from rural areas that are already inadequately reimbursed by Medicare for their costs. For example, in Casper, Wyoming, the hospital is only reimbursed at 32 cents on the dollar for Medicare actual costs.

We are underreimbursing now and having to subsidize Medicare. The government is not meeting its obligation to Medicare. My greatest hope is that Democrats will read the 40-plus Republican bills to reform health care and choose the best among them and bring those to the floor so we can discuss them and debate them.

We have over 40 bills that you can use for great ideas to reform health care in a way that will make it available to all Americans.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. ROHRABACHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, there are 20 million uninsured Americans who just can't afford insurance, others who have lost insurance when they lost their jobs. Still others have a preexisting insurance condition and have been frozen out of the insurance market. Then there are frivolous lawsuits which drain very limited health care dollars. Of course, we find that our best insurance providers can't sell their insurance across the country. They are frozen out. There is no competition.

These are problems that Republicans are anxious to work with Democrats on. I plead with my Democratic colleagues, don't hold health care reform hostage, dependent on the enactment of some socialistic experiment with government-run health care.

What's going to happen? What's being demanded here is a transformation of our system rather than a reform of our system. That transformation of our system will hurt seniors. It will take people who now have insurance in small business and put them out of a job as well as with no insurance. Of course, it will not improve the situation but will be very costly for the American people.

SENIOR CITIZENS' MEDICARE COVERAGE

(Mr. FRANKS of Arizona asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FRANKS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, it is so ironic that this Congress is debating the means of covering the uninsured while Democrats are planning to cut the existing coverage of those who need it most—our senior citizens.

Nearly 70,000 of those senior citizens will be affected and live in my district, Mr. Speaker. Those senior citizens will experience drastic changes to their Medicare coverage as a result of the $500 million Medicare Advantage cut imposed by the Democrats' bill, H.R. 3200.

Democrats may silence all of our Republican bills, but they are wrong if they believe Republicans will keep silent and allow senior citizens in America, who have already spent the majority of their lives contributing to this Nation, to be forced to give up the health care coverage they so vitally need in order to pay for a socialist, government takeover of health care which has failed in every State and in every country that has been unwise enough to allow it to happen.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SCALISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCALISE. Mr. Speaker, right now, while the Democrats who are running Congress are meeting behind closed doors to rewrite a government takeover of health care, the American people are asking why are they being left out?

Senior citizens know that they are being left out of this health care bill because they are looking at the $400 billion in cuts to Medicare that President Obama and Speaker PELOSI's bill will impose upon them, including almost the elimination of Medicare Advantage, which is a program that over 100,000 in Louisiana want and like and will be denied under their bill.

Small businesses and families are wondering why they are being left out of these discussions when they look at over $800 billion in new taxes that American families will have to pay, many of which make below $70,000, which violates one of the President's pledges.

What the American people want is real health care reform, and that is why we have brought a number of bills, including H.R. 3400, which actually goes in and addresses the problems, like preexisting conditions, addressing those problems like lowering the cost so that people can have portability and buy across State lines, and actually passing real Medicare liability reform to lower the cost of health care.

Let's fix the problems that are broken, not break what is working.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. LUETKEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUETKEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, this morning I had the opportunity to meet with a group of Honor Flight veterans at the World War II veterans memorial. These ladies and gentlemen are our heroes. One of them came up to me and said, Congressman, please don't let them take my Medicare away. That is a solemn promise.

They are concerned about the quality of care, about the costs they are going to incur. This is something that is extremely important to our seniors.

Over the weekend, I had an opportunity to talk to a businessman. He came up and said, Congressman, please don't let them implement these mandates and these excessive taxes on me. I can't survive as a business.

The American people are looking over these proposals and they are saying "no." A while ago we heard that it is not leadership unless you vote

"yes." I say it is time we start listening to the people and doing what they want. They have looked at these issues, they have looked at these proposals, and they have said "no." I think we need to listen to them, because they are the ones who are going to pay the bills, they are the ones that are going to be impacted by it, and they say "no."

HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mrs. CHRISTENSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I am sick and tired of all of the lines in the sand on health care reform. This is something that we have to do, something we cannot afford not to do. To quote Fannie Lou Hamer, on behalf of African Americans and all who are uninsured and underinsured, "We are sick and tired of being sick and tired."

This Congress has an obligation to end this, and those who continue to misrepresent the facts need to stop. The bills being put together will end insurance discrimination and the dropping of coverage when one needs it most. We will provide a public plan for those who choose to use it, and, if we do it right, we will reduce the high cost of insurance and will end those insurance horror stories.

With our bill, we will ensure security for our seniors, affordability for the middle class, access to quality health care for the poor and our responsibility to our children. We can do this without adding to the deficit.

So I think everyone needs to get up off of that hard line and come together around the most important thing we can do in our time here—give every American the possibility of health, wellness, and a decent quality of life.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. WESTMORELAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WESTMORELAND. Mr. Speaker, this majority has just run a $1.4 trillion deficit for fiscal year 2009, even as we are told a new health care entitlement will reduce red ink by $871 billion over 10 years. But let's look at history and what has happened since the government has got involved in health care.

Prior to the creation of Medicare and Medicaid in 1965, health care inflation ran slightly faster than overall inflation. In the years since, medical inflation has climbed 2.5 percent faster than the cost increases elsewhere in the economy.

Let's start with Medicaid. House Ways and Means in 1965 estimated that the first 5 years' cost would be $238 million. Instead, it hit more than $1 billion, and costs have kept climbing since.

Let's look at this. In 1965, Medicare, another government program, was projected to cost $12 billion by 1990. It cost $110 billion. Medicare hospital, 1965 projected 1990 costs, $9 billion; actual cost, $67 billion.

Let's look at history and see what happens when the government gets involved.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members should heed the gavel.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, Wisconsinites might want to know that just recently our Blue Cross Blue Shield program announced that people in their twenties under this health care bill will see a 199 percent increase in their health insurance premiums. People in their forties will see a 122 percent increase in their health insurance premiums. People in their fifties will see a dramatic double-digit increase in their health insurance premiums.

Mr. Speaker, 214,000 Wisconsinites might want to know that their Medicare Advantage plan that they enjoy will be either dramatically more expensive or will go away completely. The American taxpayer might want to know that government estimators are telling us that this bill will cost $1 trillion to $2 trillion in a new health care entitlement, which will surely add more deficit and debt to future generations.

The shame of all of this, Mr. Speaker, is that we could fix what is broken in health care without breaking what is working in health care. Republicans have offered 40 different pieces of legislation in an attempt to get bipartisan compromise, to make sure that the uninsured get insured, that people with preexisting conditions get health care, and we do this without breaking the bank, without raising taxes and without creating new debt and deficit and entitlements.

SIMPLE UNIVERSAL HEALTH CARE ACT OF 2009

(Mr. TERRY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TERRY. I am introducing the Simple Universal Health Care Act, a plan which will let the uninsured opt into a system which is an identical twin to the health care that we have in Congress. This plan removes restrictions on preexisting conditions. It allows employers to opt in and maintain the current tax benefits for providing coverage. The administrative costs will be around $15 million, not billion, not $1.2 trillion, and would be paid for by the insurance companies, leaving the taxpayers with no cost.

This plan offers a variety of options, and companies compete for customers, thus holding down the cost and maximizing benefits without a government takeover of health care, without using taxpayer dollars, without taking money from Medicare or raising taxes on small business.

The SUH Act is a simple, affordable private-sector approach to making sure all people have access to health insurance, and I encourage Members of both sides of the aisle to support this simple solution.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. GUTHRIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Congress, I not only have the responsibility of looking out for future generations, but also a duty to ensure that we are doing all we can to take care of our seniors. Real reform needs to make health care more affordable and more accessible. Unfortunately, the bills being crafted by the majority could threaten the health care benefits seniors already receive while raising premiums.

The plan currently in the House makes massive cuts to Medicare which the Congressional Budget Office anticipates will increase seniors' Medicare prescription drug premiums by 20 percent over the next decade.

For those who live on a fixed income, the possibility of having to pay more is very worrisome.

Their plan also includes cutting $162 billion from Medicare Advantage, a program widely supported by the seniors because of its choices and affordability.

We should focus on ensuring Medicare continues to be there for our seniors, not cutting their benefits to fund an unproven proposal.

PROPOSED HEALTH CARE REFORM WOULD BE HARMFUL FOR NORTH TEXAS BUSINESSES

(Mr. BURGESS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, in August, in addition to the town halls in my district, I hosted two roundtables with small- and medium-sized businesses in North Texas. Parts of health care reform are going to affect business, like it or not. They are going to see a tax increase, a new employer mandate, and penalties for noncompliance.

The North Texas business representatives said they needed more tools, not more regulation, to make health care affordable for small and medium businesses. With regard to an employer mandate, one panelist explained this would add to the burden during what are arguably tough economic times.

An individual who was the health benefits manager at a large manufacturing plant in Denton said, Our employees are already very well taken care of without mandates. If more gets mandated on us, then we are going to have to look at what we will cut, what we are going to take away in order to be competitive.

Another individual said, If we had to furnish health insurance, if it is mandated on us, we just simply will not be able to afford to do so. We will have to cut jobs.

I promised to take the lessons learned back to Washington, D.C., as we continue to work on health care reform. Most Americans today are actually concerned more about jobs and the economy than the current health care proposals that we are debating here in Congress.

Washington should be working to help businesses create jobs, not writing penalties for those who are trying to provide employment.

MEDICARE CUTS WOULD IMPACT OUR SENIORS

(Mr. BOUSTANY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOUSTANY. Mr. Speaker, as a heart surgeon, I saw patients firsthand in our current government-run programs, like Medicare, who lacked real access to a doctor, leaving them out of the system. Many of our Medicare patients and seniors out there know exactly what I am talking about.

So I ask the Democratic leadership, how can you cut $500 billion, a half-trillion dollars, from Medicare, and not hurt access and quality for our seniors? I also ask our Democratic leadership, how can you create a government-run health care takeover that fails to control costs or improve quality?

We can do better. I know we can do better. We can achieve commonsense solutions in a bipartisan way. But the current Democratic-led bills do not do that. They do not constitute meaningful reform.

We need to work together to strengthen Medicare, to put it on a better and sounder financial footing, to ensure that it will be there for our seniors when they need health care. We need to lower costs for all seniors, and for all Americans, for that matter, by increasing competition in the health insurance marketplace, promoting wellness programs and limiting frivolous lawsuits.

Let's put the doctor and patient back in control of health care.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members must heed the gavel, please, and adhere to the 1-minute limitation.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. HERGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, as the backbone of our economy, small businesses create over 72 percent of all new jobs. It defies logic that House Democrats would pay for their government takeover of health care by actually raising taxes on these same businesses by $820 billion.

During a serious economic downturn, we should be pursuing policies that will create jobs and put us on the path to recovery. Instead, these tax hikes will cost an additional 5.5 million jobs.

History shows that the American economy is at its strongest when taxes are lower and small businesses are permitted to keep more of their money to invest and grow.

Mr. Speaker, higher taxes for government-run health care is a bad deal for the American people.

IN SUPPORT OF MEDICARE ADVANTAGE

(Mr. MARCHANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MARCHANT. Mr. Speaker, I have heard repeatedly from the seniors about their high satisfaction with Medicare Advantage and their fears of losing it. The Senate Finance plan would slash $123 billion from Medicare Advantage.

Over 10 million seniors are currently enrolled in the Medicare Advantage plan, and, according to CBO Director Elmendorf, those proposed cuts to Medicare Advantage will force reduced benefits for many seniors, over 100,000 seniors in the three counties that I represent. This is in stark contrast to "if you like your insurance, you can keep it."

Director Elmendorf states very clearly that under the Senate Finance plan, Medicare Advantage enrollees will suffer reduced benefits.

We must preserve Medicare Advantage for those who are benefiting from the peace of mind that it provides, and strengthen it for those seniors that have not yet turned 65.

□ 1445

JUST SAY "NO"

(Mr. BLUMENAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, one of the interesting debate points that we are listening to today is the assertion that somehow what we need to do is just allow people to sell insurance across State lines, and that's going to solve all our problems. Well, first of all, you can buy insurance today across State lines. What we don't do is allow somebody who incorporates in a State with very weak protections and minimal provisions to go in and undercut the laws of other States that seek to protect their citizens. You can buy insurance as you see fit. It's just that people who are going to play in a market have to play by the rules, and if somebody cheats, then there is an opportunity to use the local insurance commissioner to protect the consumer.

Under the legislation that we're proposing, the only thing that changes is that for the first time, some of the States that haven't protected their consumers will have higher standards. This is a good thing.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the senior citizens in my district are scared, literally scared. They ask me, What are the Democrats planning to do to my Medicare and Medicaid? And I have to tell them, I really don't know because the Democrats are hiding behind closed doors in the dark and keeping the rest of us out of the picture. So we don't know for sure. Except we do know this: They are planning massive cuts to Medicare, upwards of $500 billion, and massive cuts to Medicare Advantage that will result in a loss of health care for millions of seniors. According to the Congressional Budget Office, that Advantage cut would be around $162 billion. As a result, Medicare Advantage plans will drop out of the program, limiting seniors' choices and causing many of them to lose their current health care coverage. Cuts to Medicare Advantage will have an exceptionally harmful effect on seniors in rural areas like mine. I urge us to reject this plan.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. LATOURETTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LATOURETTE. Mr. Speaker, all throughout history, there's been the big lie, and we've got the big lie going here again.

It goes like this: Republicans won't let us have health care reform.

Republicans are the Party of No.

Why are Republicans stopping us from reforming health care?

Well, I'm going to tell you something—the Democrats have won the last two elections because we did such a bang-up job. But the fact of the matter is, there are 257 of them. There are only 177 of us, although it looks like a bigger number over here today. We couldn't stop a one-car parade. This health care discussion is a fight between the left and the far left. And sadly for the Democratic majority, they've got people in their party that think that this health care proposal proposed by the far left is wacky. It takes $500 billion out of Medicare. You do nothing with the lawyers as they file lawsuits and cause doctors to practice defensive medicine.

This is a bad bill. They can't even get their own team to row the boat, but they want to say, Republicans don't want to reform health care.

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. EMERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, health care reform has gripped the Congress for the better part of a year now, and we're finally getting to the core of this debate: cost. Without an affordable system of health care, we'll forever have problems with access. But too many good bipartisan proposals to lower costs have been ignored—eliminating international barriers to market access for U.S. consumers, speeding new generics to market, promoting comparative effectiveness research, and better decision-making tools for doctors and their patients.

You may ask, Why? It's real simple. The administration made an $80 billion deal with the big drug companies that prevents us from offering our proposals to save consumers money on their medicine. Our constituents who often have trouble paying for their medicines today will continue subsidizing the people from other countries who pay half of what we do for the same drugs. So this $80 billion deal actually makes more money for big drug companies because it will encourage more people to take brand-name pills instead of generics, increasing the market share and profits of the drug companies. No wonder they were so quick to accept this deal, and what a scam the administration has fallen prey to.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. SHEA-PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. SHEA-PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I'm going to read the comments in a letter I received from Mr. Bradley Ball, one of my constituents in New Hampshire, because I don't think his voice is being heard on the floor today. He said that he was lucky enough to have insurance, but he had to pay for it himself, almost $7,000 a year. He said, "So to keep my current health care policy is just less than $7,000 a year, and my copay for Thalidomide could be as low as $810 a month. That translates into $16,620, rounding off, just including that one medication in health care expenses for a year. Of course there are more. My monthly income is $1,660, $19,920 a year, through disability and pensions. How can I pay for my other expenses—heat, electricity, food, clothing, shelter, et cetera, on the remaining $3,300 I will have each year? Do I have some savings? Yes. But very soon I am going to run out of all my possibilities. What will you have me do next?"

Then he goes on to say that he could live if we could get the prescriptions for him and help him pay his health insurance. And then he says, "I don't think that in the United States of America this is what anyone would wish on anyone else. I know you would not want to be in this situation. I don't care whether it's called a right or a privilege, the current system is broken. Please help fix it."

WHEN WILL YOU LISTEN?

(Mr. FORBES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, last week I received a call that every Member of Congress fears: a plant with 1,100 jobs in a town of 9,000 residents closed its doors. We want to be there for them, and we will be there for them as the symptoms of a bad economy entangle their lives. But Americans are asking you a larger question today. The question is, When will this government listen to the voice of wisdom, shouting for us to address the causes of a bad economy and not just the symptoms?

As one of 17 Members of Congress who voted against every one of your bailout stimulus bills, I watched you ignore that voice of wisdom as you saddled our grandchildren with a debt that they will wear for decades as a badge of dishonor for your deafness. I watched as you ignored it as you tried to impose your energy agenda, knowing it would stifle America's competitiveness and kill jobs. And I watched as you ignore it while you try to tax our existing jobs into oblivion.

Mr. Speaker, today Americans are asking a simple question: When will you listen?

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. HINOJOSA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I am here representing the families in my congressional district that need health care reform to happen now. In my district, almost half of my constituents go without insurance. They face some of the most expensive costs and are afflicted with high rates of chronic diseases, such as diabetes and heart disease. Congress has neglected these problems for far too long. Those that are suffering the most and need the most care do not have access to the affordable coverage they need.

What's in it for you? Stability, security and quality. Let me summarize our Democratic plan like this: No discrimination for preexisting conditions like diabetes, heart conditions or cancer. No drop in your coverage because you become sick. No refusal to renew your coverage if you've paid in full and become ill. No more job or life decisions made based on loss of coverage. No need to change doctors or plans if you like the coverage you have. No copays for preventive and wellness care. No excessive out-of-pocket expenses, deductibles or copays. No yearly or lifetime cost caps on what insurance companies cover.

I urge my colleagues to support the Democratic proposal.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, how does Speaker PELOSI plan to pay for her $1.2 trillion government takeover of health care? Simple—higher taxes, higher premiums and cuts in Medicare. What does this mean to mom and dad back home? It means 6 million will be forced off of their Medicare Advantage Program. It means their doctor will now be assigned to them by a government bureaucrat, not by their own choice.

In the rural area that I represent, they're facing $83 billion in cuts, so rural nursing homes will close down. And for seniors in Medicare part D, a 20 percent increase in drug costs.

This is not a good plan. If the kitchen sink is leaking, you don't take a wrecking ball to the whole kitchen. You fix the sink. We need targeted, market-oriented reforms to make health care more affordable and more accessible for everyone, especially our seniors on a fixed income.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. REICHERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. REICHERT. Mr. Speaker, so much is at stake, and the well-being of Americans is on the line. And it's clear that we need health care reform, but that reform must protect and strengthen the health care of all Americans.

The current overhaul bill would make $500 billion in cuts to Medicare, $156 billion in cuts to Medicare health plans and would affect 14 million Americans across this Nation. This is not the kind of reform we need.

Also, Mr. Speaker and seniors, pay close attention to this: There is an unusual advocate for these massive cuts to seniors' health care. It's AARP, who receives nearly 40 percent of its revenue from selling health insurance products. Why would AARP support a bill cutting benefits for its members? Are they truly looking out for the best interests of seniors? Could it be that AARP has a hidden profit agenda?

This morning's Washington Post explores this issue in an article entitled, AARP: Reform Advocate and Insurance Salesman. I urge people to read it. I do believe there is a conflict of interest here, Mr. Speaker, and I will continue asking the questions necessary to ensure we protect our seniors' health care.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. TIBERI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TIBERI. Mr. Speaker, throughout the course of this debate on health care, we've heard a lot about cracking down on waste, fraud and abuse. I support that. In fact, I wrote a letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the chairman of the Government Reform Committee asking that we hold hearings on the issue. I haven't heard back. Why would we need hearings when this bill now is being written behind closed doors, behind closed doors for no one else to see?

And it appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that the majority's plan for paying for this in part is on the backs of seniors. In my district, a third of my seniors are on Medicare Advantage plans. They like what they have. Under the Democrat bill, they will not be able to keep it because it will be cut.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we can only guess at this point what the health care bill will look like because it's being written behind closed doors. Only time will tell. So much for openness and transparency.

PROPOSED HEALTH CARE REFORM HURTS SENIORS

(Mr. BOOZMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. Speaker, we need to contain the cost of health care to make it more affordable for all Americans, but we cannot do this by cutting the services to our senior citizens. We have the responsibility to ensure that we don't harm the health care they currently have through Medicare. But the legislation supported by the White House, Speaker PELOSI and Senator REID doesn't protect that care.

Included in this health care plan is more than $162 billion in cuts to Medicare Advantage. More than 25,700 residents of Arkansas' Third Congressional District are enrolled in this program, and I know the positive impact it makes in the lives of Arkansans and all American seniors. This is bad practice to cut from critical services like Medicare Advantage and something that I cannot support.

Rather than cut services, we need to examine how we can save money by getting rid of the waste and fraud in Medicare. Mr. Speaker, we can craft a bill that allows access to quality and affordable health care without sacrificing services to our seniors.

COMPETITION

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, there's been a lot of talk about choices and competition recently. We're hearing now that some on the other side of the aisle want to rename the "public option" the "competitive option."

Will the competitive option negotiate with doctors like private insurance? No. Will the competitive option be subject to thousands of different State mandates on coverage? No. Will a competitive option be subject to State and local taxes? No. Will the competitive option face an endless assault of lawsuits costing billions of dollars? No.

Senate Leader REID has brought forth a bill that would allow individual States a choice to opt out of the competitive public option. What we're not sure of is whether people in these States will be able to opt out of the billions of new taxes mandated by the bill. Like most Federal programs, the States will either accept the program or watch their citizens' tax dollars go to other participating States.

The government option offers few choices, and its competitive advantages will mean that in a very short time, millions of Americans will end up with no option, just the government.

SENIORS AND HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. ADERHOLT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ADERHOLT. Mr. Speaker, there is bipartisan consensus that Congress must help with affordability, with access and with the availability of health care for American families. There is no question that Congress must act and that we must address the issues, but the current Democrat health plan is not going in a bipartisan direction. Not only is the current Democrat health plan the wrong approach; it could harm various groups of Americans who need and who depend on quality health care the most.

One of the groups is seniors. In my home State of Alabama, seniors make up about 14 percent of the population. That's higher than the national average. The seniors in Alabama and all over America deserve something better than the government takeover of health care.

The House Democrat plan includes massive cuts to Medicare that will result in Medicare Advantage plans dropping out of the program, limiting seniors' choices and causing many to lose their current health care coverage, and cuts to Medicare Advantage will have an exceptionally harmful impact on seniors in rural areas.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Ms. Wanda Evans, one of his secretaries.

SENIORS AND HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. BILIRAKIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, in my State of Florida, millions of seniors rely on Medicare for their health care, including 130,000 in my district alone.

On Monday, I held my annual seniors' health fair, which provides free health screenings to area seniors and which gives me an opportunity to continue getting their input on health care reform.

The overwhelming consensus from seniors in my district is that the Democrats' health care reform proposals would lead to fewer choices, to higher costs and to reduced quality. Of particular concern to many of the seniors I spoke with was whether they would be able to keep their existing coverage.

The House bill calls for $163 billion in cuts to Medicare Advantage, which is wildly popular with Florida seniors. The cuts will result in health care providers dropping out of the program, undermining choice and jeopardizing the more than 50,000 seniors in the Ninth District who rely on Medicare Advantage for their care.

We must not harm the health care seniors already receive.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. CRENSHAW asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CRENSHAW. Mr. Speaker, it has been pointed out that our Democratic colleagues have been drafting this health care plan behind closed doors, in the darkness of night; but yesterday, one of them emerged in the Senate—the majority leader—and he announced the best way to proceed with this plan is to have a government option with an opt-out provision for the States.

What does that mean? Nobody knows. How do you opt out? Nobody knows. How long do you have to be in before you opt out? Nobody knows. What if all of the States decide to opt out? Nobody knows.

We do know a couple of things: Number one, we do know under this Democratic plan your taxes are going to go up. We do know under this Democratic plan your Medicare benefits are going to go down. We do know under this Democratic plan there are going to be more bureaucrats controlling your health care.

So they're trying to keep us in the dark, but we know enough to know this: This is a bad plan and there is a better way.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. AKIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Speaker, when people get into the details of health care, I think they sometimes miss seeing the very big picture. The big picture here is that the Pelosi and the Democrat health care plan has this final destination, which is that it's going to be run by some czar or commissar in the Federal Government.

I guess the question I have is: On what sense of faith is this decision made?

Is it the efficiency of the Post Office, perhaps, that inspires them or the compassion of the IRS, or is it, perhaps, the Department of Energy that was created to make sure we wouldn't be dependent on foreign oil or, perhaps, the Department of Education, which was studied some years ago, and it was determined in the study that, if a foreign power had done what the Department of Education has done to America, it would be considered an act of war?

Why do we want to destroy the health care system that 100 million Americans enjoy in order to just simply socialize it and to turn it over to some czar in Washington, D.C.?

That's an act of faith that's just too hard to follow.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. CHAFFETZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CHAFFETZ. Mr. Speaker, across this country, we have millions of people who are concerned. Deep in their bellies, when they go to sleep at night, husbands and wives are concerned about putting food on their tables; they're concerned about their jobs, their futures, their kids, and their country.

We have an opportunity to help them.

You listen to the Democratic side of the aisle, and you hear them say, Oh, just trust us—$787 billion on the credit card. That will help the economy.

It hasn't.

Unemployment is getting worse. It's over 10 percent in many parts of this country. Cash for Clunkers: Oh, yeah, that will be a great program. We'll pull money out of everybody's wallets, and we'll hand it to a select few. It hasn't worked.

I, for one, do not trust the Federal Government, and the one-size-fits-all, slam-it-down-your-throat Federal solution to government health care is not the solution for the United States of America. We need Americans across this country to rise up and to say, No, we are not going to stand for it anymore. We're going to be in control of our government.

May God bless the United States of America. May God bless the men and women, our troops, who are serving across this country.

HEALTH AND THE ECONOMY

(Mr. SOUDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, we are actually having a debate today far beyond health care, far beyond the economy. Not many businessmen are probably listening to this debate as they're too busy working to make a profit so other Americans can be employed.

As we face rising unemployment in a stagnant economy, the Democrats propose a government takeover of health care and of taxes on small business to pay for that government takeover of health care. They have an energy proposal that will cripple American manufacturing and that will enact endless regulations, increasing the cost of making things in America.

On this floor, Democrats have repeatedly confused gross profits and net profits. In the student loan debate, the person before me even confused revenue with net profits. He said he was going to take the revenue from the private companies and use it for government purposes.

From the President on down the party line, there has been a philosophical attack on the concept of profit and capital. Government does not create jobs. It redistributes profits. Profits create jobs. Capital creates jobs. That is why our system is called capitalism. This economy cannot recover if the leadership of our country has no basic understanding of how our economic system works, and we will not have growth by destroying the capitalist system.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. CAMP asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, the health care of every American is too important to risk on one gigantic piece of legislation, especially one being written in secret and behind closed doors.

The Democrat plan, or at least the last time any of us saw it, was over 1,000 pages long. It contained hundreds of billions of dollars in new taxes—taxes on families earning as little as $20,000 a year and taxes on small businesses. Even if our national unemployment rate were not 9.8 percent, or over 10 percent in my home State of Michigan, these massive new taxes would create an undue burden on families and on employers. To raise taxes while these Americans are losing their jobs is irresponsible.

To what end do Democrats raise these taxes? What do we get for these tax increases? While the Democrats' health care tax increases go into effect immediately, Democrats delay their so-called "reforms" for years to come. This plan is literally immediate pain for no gain.

Again, the health care of every American is too important to risk on this secretly negotiated 1,000-page bill.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. LAMBORN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LAMBORN. Mr. Speaker, President Obama has promised he wouldn't raise taxes on working Americans or go into debt for health care. Both promises are violated by the Democrat plan for health care.

The Congressional Budget Office's score of almost $1 trillion for the Baucus bill is based on 10 years of revenues but on only 7 years of expenditures. This is a dishonest budget gimmick that hides the true cost.

Is anyone so foolish to believe that a $1 trillion spending program won't translate into higher taxes and fees on working Americans or into higher deficits or both?

The nonpartisan Joint Committee on Taxation has confirmed that just the penalties for not purchasing government-approved coverage will translate into higher taxes on middle class families, in addition to possible jail time—a direct contradiction of President Obama's promise.

When the President's and the Democrats' actions do not match their rhetoric, the American people should know.

THE BACK TO WORK TAX CREDIT ACT

(Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, 3 million Americans have lost their jobs since the Democratic stimulus plan passed. It was supposed to create 4 million jobs. National unemployment was at 8 percent when the stimulus passed, and now it's approaching 10 percent. In Florida, in my district, it's over 11 percent, and even in St. Lucie County, it exceeds 15 percent unemployment.

Now is not the time for partisan bickering but, rather, for bipartisan solutions. That's why I've joined with Democrat and fellow freshman JOHN BOCCIERI from Ohio to introduce a bill to get Americans back to work.

This week, we're introducing the Back to Work Tax Credit Act, a commonsense bill to expand the current work opportunity tax credit to the long-term unemployed.

The time for action is now. My neighbors in Florida and all over America deserve real solutions from Washington, not just talk and further inaction.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BARTLETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, this morning, I had what was, for me, a very emotional meeting in my office. Representatives from the home health care industry were there, lamenting the fact that tens of billions of dollars will be cut from home health care in this bill that we may have to vote on.

It was emotional for me because I thought of my mother, who, during the last months of her life, would have liked nothing more than to be home, and her family wanted her there. She would have been happier, and probably would have lived longer, but because of limitations of funds and because of regulations, she had to be in an institution. The toughest moment of my life was when I would go there to visit her, and she would say, "I want to go home."

Please, we've got to get it right. This bill doesn't get it right. It's just one more place where it doesn't get it right. Let's get it right before we finish it.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SHIMKUS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, given 1 minute, what should I talk about?

Should I mention how Federal tax dollars will be used to fund abortion? Should I highlight the fact that tax dollars will go to fund illegal immigration since there is no verification? Should I talk about the thousands of seniors in my district who will lose their Medicare Advantage accounts?

I should, but I will primarily mention what the real plan is here, and that is to use a public option to enact a one-payer system. If you don't believe me, ask Chairman FRANK; Congresswoman SCHAKOWSKY; the head of the Democratic National Committee, Howard Dean; and last but not least, President Obama. They've always had that as their stated objective.

HEALTH CARE

(Mrs. CAPITO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to highlight the concerns my constituents continue to raise in the ongoing health care debate. Rather than listening to me, let's listen to them in their own words.

This is from a woman in Nitro: "While I agree that changes are needed to today's system, I don't believe that a new government-run health insurance plan is the right solution. The government plan will shift costs to employers, which could force more and more businesses to stop offering benefits to their workers. I like my current coverage, and don't want to be forced into a government program."

Or a quote from a gentleman in Scott Depot: "Congress must not let government get between my family and my doctor. Please protect patient freedom, and expand our health care options with real reforms—focused on patients, not on politics."

Or another quote from West Virginia: "I see my country being spent into destruction and my daughter's and grandson's future being thrown away by reckless politicians. What in the world are they trying to do? Myself and other mothers that I am in communication with are watching with great interest to see what is going on with the public health care plan, which we can't afford."

Yes, we want health reform, but we want a thoughtful, bipartisan approach that will result in solid reform.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. ROGERS of Alabama asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROGERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the Democrat majority likes to say this is about choice and competition when, in fact, they know this is about a road to universal, government-run health insurance.

The President says if we get this public option, you will have a choice between your insurance company. If you like it, you can keep it; if you don't, you can go into the public option. What he doesn't say is that after 2 or 3 years of this so-called competition, the private-sector companies won't be there any longer.

The fact is our insurance companies have to make a profit. They have to pay taxes, they have to meet Federal regulations, and if they have a tough year, they have to just eat it and hope they can do better the next year. If they have a couple of tough years, they go out of business.

This new government plan does not have to make a profit, will not have to pay taxes because it's the government, will not have to meet the same regulations because it's the government, and if it has a bad year, it's going to be subsidized by us.

If anybody in the majority tells you that we're not going to put money into this program, they're not being straight with you. And if they say they're going to let this program go under because it has tough times meeting its obligations, they're not being straight with you.

It will be subsidized. It will be unfair competition. It will end up with no private-sector competition, and we will all wind up in universal health care.

IT'S TIME FOR CONGRESS TO GET TO WORK ON REAL HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. LEE of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LEE of New York. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House voted on two resolutions congratulating sports teams for winning national championships. Today, we're considering four non-controversial suspensions, just four, and one of them marking the anniversary of the birth of Confucius.

Congress just doesn't get it. We should be working on real health care reform that lowers costs and expands access to all, such as real liability reform which is not on the table. We should be working to make America more energy independent and lower costs for all. We should be working to rein in Federal spending and addressing the $60 billion in Medicare and Medicaid fraud that we saw on "60 Minutes" on Sunday. Instead, we are congratulating sports teams and marking the birthdays of ancient philosophers.

I hope my colleagues across the aisle will get down to some real reform so that the American people can start trusting Congress again.

THE HEALTH CARE PLAN SHOULD NOT BE FINANCED BY RAIDING MEDICARE

(Mr. LATHAM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Speaker, as millions go without health insurance and costs skyrocket, I strongly believe we need commonsense reforms so that all American families can have access to affordable health coverage.

But the plan should not be financed by raiding the Medicare program and shifting costs onto the backs of our seniors. Seniors are being asked to shoulder the burden while getting virtually none of the benefits.

H.R. 3200 cuts Medicare by a total of $500 billion over the next 10 years. This includes cuts to hospitals, nursing homes, life-saving imaging services, and home health care services. The bill cuts payments to Medicare Advantage plans by $172 billion, which, according to the CBO, will force more than 3 million seniors out of plans that could no longer operate.

More than 61,000 Iowa seniors and nearly 20 percent of Medicare beneficiaries nationwide are enrolled in that type of plan, which lowers premium costs by rolling health and drug coverage into one plan and negotiating with the health care providers.

MEDICARE CUTS

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, in order to pay for a government-run health care plan, Democrats obviously plan to cut Medicare. They call it a "savings," but it is cutting essential programs and services that are now available for our seniors.

I'm particularly concerned about the $117 billion in cuts in the Medicare Advantage program. In my district, there are over 20,000 seniors that are enrolled in Medicare Advantage. You cannot expect that they will continue to have the same level of coverage after you cut this program by $117 billion. Hasn't that been the President's promise all this time? If you like your insurance, you can keep your insurance?

My constituents want to keep their insurance coverage through Medicare Advantage. But cutting $117 billion will cause providers to simply exit the Medicare Advantage program, reducing options for these seniors and preventing them from keeping the insurance of their choice.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. MCCAUL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MCCAUL. Mr. Speaker, last August we went home to our constituents and we listened to the American people. The American people were loud and clear in their message, and it was: Congressman, we do not support the government's taking over our health care system.

Then we came back to Washington, DC, away from our constituents. We've been up here for about 2 months now, and what are we seeing? We're seeing the public option being put back on the table.

And what did the President say? Well, we know what he said on the campaign. He said basically, I'm going to have all the negotiations around a big old table and we'll have the negotiations televised on C-SPAN.

Have we seen that? I don't think so.

What are we seeing today? We're seeing three Senators behind closed doors in the darkness of the night negotiate a health care plan for this entire Nation.

Sunlight is the best disinfectant. We need to bring these negotiations out on the table. Republicans need to be at the table. We have good ideas. We have good solutions. But they are not being heard and the voice of the American people is not being heard.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SHUSTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, health care reform should empower all Americans to choose a health care plan that offers them choice and affordability. However, the Democratic plan will only lead to higher taxes, cuts in benefits, and government's taking away our seniors' health care choices.

For seniors on fixed incomes, the prospect of being forced to pay more for health care could become a frightening reality. The Democrat plan would raise Medicare prescription drug premiums by 20 percent over the next decade and deny seniors the choice of keeping their current coverage. The Democrat plan includes $163 billion in cuts to Medicare Advantage. Up to 38,000 seniors in my district would be negatively affected by these cuts. Nothing should ever come between seniors and their doctors; yet this is exactly what the Democrat bill does.

The American people and our Nation's seniors deserve better than this reckless rush to reform.

NINE MONTHS SINCE THE STIMULUS BILL PASSED; YET AMERICANS CONTINUE TO LOSE THEIR JOBS

(Mr. CALVERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, there's been a lot of talk from my friends on the other side of the aisle about the so-called improvement in the United States economy. Unfortunately, all the talk comes without the data to back it up.

Nine months ago, Congress had an opportunity to provide a real shot in the arm to our economy, and yet Americans continue to lose their jobs. While the Democratic leadership continues to push for radical and expensive changes to the American economy, such as a government-run health care system, cap-and-trade legislation, the question that should be asked every day on Capitol Hill is, simply, Where are the jobs?

When the leadership spent $800 billion of Americans' hard-earned tax dollars with lightning speed with no review in February on the so-called "stimulus bill," the White House promised that unemployment would not exceed 8 percent. We are now at 9.8 percent nationally, 12 percent in California, and 15 percent in parts of my congressional district.

Congress certainly does not have all the answers—it rarely does—but what Congress can do is straightforward: Reduce the Federal tax burden on families and business, reduce spending, and target spending where we have real infrastructure projects.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. BRADY of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, over the past few months, we have held over 50 town hall meetings and forums on health care reform in our district. Recently, we held one in The Woodlands with a panel of doctors to talk about health care. One of them was Dr. Peter Shedden, a Canadian-born neurosurgeon, who practices in The Woodlands. He was trained in Canada, is very complimentary about the way they trained physicians. He shared his experiences.

He told us how his father died after he was refused kidney dialysis, even as the disease entered the acute phase, because he was over 70 years old. He told us, "You've got to know somebody" to get to the front of the line. He said, "There are no second opinions in the Canadian system . . . After age 70, if you get sick, you're done."

Because of the long waiting lists, he told us ER doctors are forced to make a quick evaluation of whether or not someone is "salvageable" when they come in the door. He said, "Within 48 hours, you'd better show you are going to improve; otherwise, your breathing tube is taken out and you move on . . . because there is nowhere for you to go." He also said many patients come from Canada to Texas to seek his treatment.

So before we go to a national, government-run system, I have one question for those proponents of that bill: When was the last time you went to Canada for your health care?

CONSTITUENT HEALTH CARE SURVEY RESULTS

(Mr. McKEON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McKEON. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, I held a town hall meeting in my district. It was widely publicized. We had a great turnout. We had about 1,200 people there. This is a district that was won by President Obama 49-48 percent, even though I'm a Republican, and I just thought it would be interesting to tell the other side what my constituents think just in case they're listening.

Do you support the health care reform plan proposed by President Obama and the congressional Democrats? Yes, 12 percent; no, 81 percent.

Overall how would you rate the quality of health care in this country? Excellent, 27 percent; good, 46 percent; fair, 11 percent; poor, 11 percent.

Do you believe the Federal Government has a responsibility to ensure health care coverage for all Americans? Yes, 15 percent; no, 65 percent.

Do you support the creation of a government-run public insurance option to compete with private insurance? Yes, 15 percent; no, 71 percent.

Mr. Speaker, I think at least in my district the American people have spoken loudly and clearly that they don't want this Democrat government-run plan.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. AUSTRIA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. AUSTRIA. Mr. Speaker, included in the Democrats' health plan are massive cuts to Medicare Advantage that could result in a loss of health care for millions of seniors.

In my State of Ohio, this isn't good. Cuts to Medicare Advantage will have an exceptionally harmful impact to seniors in areas that I represent in Ohio, rural areas, forcing many seniors into a one-size-fits-all, government-run health care plan.

The CBO also said the Democrats' health care plan will increase seniors' Medicare prescription drug premiums by 20 percent over the next decade.

It is time that Congress listen to our constituents, listen to the American people, and have an open, bipartisan debate on health care reform.

THE DEMOCRATS' HEALTH CARE PLAN: WE SIMPLY CANNOT AFFORD IT

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, Robert Samuelson is a long-time economics columnist for The Washington Post. He is considered to be a very middle-of-the-road writer, neither liberal nor conservative.

In yesterday's Post, he wrote a column entitled, "Public Plan Mirage." Mr. Samuelson wrote that the public option "is mostly an exercise in political avoidance: It pretends to control costs and improve access to quality care when it doesn't."

He wrote that it is a mirage because it uses "free market rhetoric to expand government power" and added that the public plan "would probably doom today's private insurance."

The so-called opt-out provision is a mirage, too, because it does not allow people to opt out of paying for the program. No State could really opt out, because its citizens would then be paying medical bills for people in other States without receiving any benefits in return.

Medicare and Medicaid have both cost about 10 times more than was predicted. This new health care plan will also cost many times more than is predicted now. We simply cannot afford it.

□ 1530

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SULLIVAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, a $1.5 trillion government takeover of our health care system is not the answer. People were not even consulted about this. When I was home in August, physicians, patients, doctors, providers were not informed. The stakeholders were not even told about the Obama health care plan before it came out. This is not the answer.

And people are suffering right now. Our economy is not doing too well. People are losing jobs. And an $818 billion tax increase on small business is not the way to reform our health care system. It is the wrong approach.

Republicans have a better way. We want people to have choice. One thing the Republicans want, we want people with preexisting conditions to get coverage and we want health insurance to go down, but we want to make sure that the bureaucrats don't get in the way of the doctor-patient relationship. That is what this plan does. There are 31 bureaucracies in place, bureaucracies and czars between you, the patient, and the doctor. That is the wrong approach.

We don't need an Obama health care plan. We need one that gives choice. We need one where people have an option to have a relationship with their doctor, and we need one that doesn't tax small business, especially right now when people are suffering and the economy is not doing that well.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Senate majority leader announced his decision to push health care legislation with a public option, better known as government control. He said, "We've spent countless hours over the last few days in consultation with Senators."

What the Senate majority leader did not say was that these negotiations took place behind closed doors with the media and American people shut out. Recent polls show when the American people have the facts, they oppose the Democrats' proposals by a wide margin.

During his campaign, then-Senator Obama promised he would, "have all the negotiations around a big table" and "televised on C-SPAN" to "allow people to stay involved in this process."

Democratic leaders have failed to be open and candid with the American people about the decisionmaking process. The public deserves to have all of the facts regarding a health care plan that would raise premiums and cut benefits.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. FLAKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, there is much we don't know about the health care legislation being developed behind closed doors somewhere here in the Capitol. But this much we do know: the promises being made that this legislation won't add a dime to the deficit just don't hold water. Any characterization of this legislation as being deficit neutral is based on an assumption that we will obtain significant savings from Medicare, that we will somehow over the next 10 years summon up the courage to tell seniors that the benefits they currently are receiving are too lavish, and that they will need to sacrifice some of their current coverage to pay for those who don't currently have coverage.

Mr. Speaker, this type of courage doesn't reside with this Congress. We recently passed legislation to shield high-income seniors from a slight increase in Medicare part B premiums. If we have to shield seniors who make more than $170,000 annually from paying another $20 monthly, how are we going to find $500 billion in savings from Medicare over the next 10 years? It simply doesn't add up.

WHERE ARE THE JOBS?

(Mr. LOBIONDO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, the people in the 2nd Congressional District of New Jersey are asking, Where are the jobs? They have watched as this Congress has passed bailouts for AIG, for GM and for Chrysler. They watched as this Congress passed a huge bailout for Wall Street, and then followed up with a stimulus bill that had very little thought and that isn't providing the jobs for our citizens. They are not too big to fail, so they are not getting help.

The unemployment rate nationally is about 9.8 percent. In most of my district, it is at least a couple of points higher than that. People are struggling. People want to understand when are we going to get spending under control, and when are we going to understand that we should pay attention to the real people, the people who have their connection to the real world, not the people who are connected to Wall Street, not the people who are getting multimillion dollar bonuses after running companies into the ground, but the people who are just trying to make America go.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. KIRK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, the rule of medicine is do no harm, and the rule here in the House of Representatives should be to build on the success of some of our States.

What are the Republican ideas for medical care reform? First, the Medical Rights Act, which says Congress should make no law interfering with decisions that you have made with your doctor.

Secondly, no reform is serious unless it has lawsuit reform in the United States.

And third, you should be given a right as an American to buy coverage from any State in the Union if you find a plan that is less expensive or more flexible for yourself or for your business.

We should avoid the mistakes of some States and repeat the successes of others. The smoking hole of health insurance in the United States is the State of New Jersey. No lawsuit reform, incredible administrative burden, it costs $5,500 a patient to insure someone in New Jersey. The best State in the country, California, where they have cut their costs to half of the New Jersey rate, but they have rock and rolling lawsuit reform in their State. What we should do is not pass the bill that is coming up next week, a $400 billion tax increase in the teeth of the Great Recession and a $400 billion cut for Medicare.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. MORAN of Kansas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, many Kansans ask if health care reform will allow them the choices of options that Members of Congress and other Federal employees enjoy under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program. That is a good question.

I sponsored legislation calling for Members of Congress who support a government-run health plan to automatically enroll in the soon-to-be-created public plan. In some of the health care bills crafted by Congress, Members of Congress have been exempt from participation. I am concerned that expansion of government-run health care will lead to rationing of care and higher taxes. If Members of Congress are so convinced the public government-run option will deliver quality, affordable care, then Members of Congress should be willing to enroll right alongside with the American people. Congress should not have a better health care plan than they are willing to provide the American people, especially since the American people are paying for both.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. MICA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, there is quite a bit of talk right now about the spread of the H1N1 virus, but I want to talk about amnesia in Washington. You might recall on September 12, hundreds of thousands of Americans from every State and every locality, community, converged upon Washington, and they left us some messages. And sometimes the people in Washington have forgotten those messages. One they left to me and the Congress in a petition was: serve us honorably and responsibly. They demand no more taxes. Stop spending our money. Exercise our freedoms; you will not take them away. Halt the dismantling of America. First, say "no" to cap-and-trade; second, say "no" to government-run health care.

Members, unfortunately, have amnesia around here. But I just wanted to bring forward the petition the people brought me from north central and really all of Florida petitioning their government: no government-run health care.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. HUNTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HUNTER. This is an interesting debate about health care. The interesting thing about this is that Congress could fix it. We could increase portability. We could make it so there aren't any more frivolous lawsuits. We could make it so there is more access, so it is cheaper, and there are more tax incentives for health care. But we aren't doing that.

What we have with health care in this country is a leaky faucet, and liberal Democrats want to tear down the entire house for that one leaky faucet. We could fix the faucet without a 1,200-page bill that is so complex that 90 percent of the American people can't understand it.

We could fix health care and do it responsibly, and we could do it gradually. Unfortunately, it looks like we will be voting to tear down the entire house. I say we just fix the leaky faucet, reform health insurance in this country, and fix things one at a time.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CUMMINGS). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, proceedings will resume on questions previously postponed. Votes will be taken in the following order:

Motion to instruct on H.R. 2996, by the yeas and nays;

Motion to suspend on H.R. 2489, by the yeas and nays;

Motion to suspend on H. Res. 854, by the yeas and nays.

The first electronic vote will be conducted as a 15-minute vote. Remaining electronic votes will be conducted as 5-minute votes.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 2996, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, ENVIRONMENT, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2010

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the vote on the motion to instruct on H.R. 2996 offered by the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. SIMPSON) on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk will redesignate the motion.

The Clerk redesignated the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 267, nays 147, not voting 18, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the vote). Two minutes remain in this vote.

□ 1629

So (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 2996, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, ENVIRONMENT, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2010

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DICKS, MORAN of Virginia, MOLLOHAN, CHANDLER, HINCHAY, OLVER, PASTOR of Arizona, PRICE of North Carolina, OBEY, SIMPSON, CALVERT, LATOURETTE, COLE, and LEWIS of California.

There was no objection.

CONTINUATION OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO SUDAN—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 111-74)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1622(d)) provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent to the Federal Register for publication the enclosed notice stating that the Sudan emergency is to continue in effect beyond November 3, 2009.

The crisis constituted by the actions and policies of the Government of Sudan that led to the declaration of a national emergency in Executive Order 13067 of November 3, 1997, and the expansion of that emergency in Executive Order 13400 of April 26, 2006, and with respect to which additional steps were taken in Executive Order 13412 of October 13, 2006, has not been resolved. These actions and policies are hostile to U.S. interests and pose a continuing unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States. Therefore, I have determined that it is necessary to continue the national emergency declared with respect to Sudan and maintain in force the sanctions against Sudan to respond to this threat.

BARACK OBAMA.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 27, 2009.

□ 1630

GRANTING A FEDERAL CHARTER TO THE MILITARY OFFICERS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Madam Speaker, together with my colleague WALTER JONES, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 832) to amend title 36, United States Code, to grant a Federal charter to the Military Officers Association of America, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The text of the bill is as follows:

S. 832

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. GRANT OF FEDERAL CHARTER TO MILITARY OFFICERS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

(a) GRANT OF CHARTER.—Part B of subtitle II of title 36, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 1403 the following new chapter:

“CHAPTER 1404—MILITARY OFFICERS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

“(b) INSPECTION.—A member entitled to vote on any matter relating to the corporation, or an agent or attorney of the member, may inspect the records of the corporation for any proper purpose at any reasonable time.

“§ 140409. Service of process

“The corporation shall comply with the law on service of process of each State in which it is incorporated and each State in which it carries on activities.

“§ 140410. Liability for acts of officers and agents

“The corporation is liable for any act of any officer or agent of the corporation acting within the scope of the authority of the corporation.

“§ 140411. Annual report

“The corporation shall submit to Congress an annual report on the activities of the corporation during the preceding fiscal year. The report shall be submitted at the same time as the report of the audit required by section 10101(b) of this title. The report may not be printed as a public document.

“§ 140412. Definition

“In this chapter, the term ‘State’ includes the District of Columbia and the territories and possessions of the United States.”.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters at the beginning of subtitle II of title 36, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 1403 the following new item:

“1404. Military Officers Association of America 140401”.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Madam Speaker, I am proud to rise in support of S. 832, a bill to grant a federal charter to the Military Officers Association of America. My colleague WALTER JONES and I joined with 140 cosponsors to introduce the House companion, H.R. 2017.

S. 832 recognizes the dedication, service and accomplishments of military officers and their families, and the enduring contribution of MOAA to the military and veterans' communities, and the nation.

I want to thank Senators BILL NELSON and BOB CORKER for their hard work in helping successfully report the Senate bill.

MOAA has been seeking a federal charter for 15 years. Despite bipartisan and bicameral support, the bill had never previously received a floor vote in either chamber.

MOAA serves a membership of 370,000 active, reserve and retired officers and their spouses in every branch of the military.

The variety of services MOAA provides includes:

The MOAA Scholarship Fund, which provides interest-free loans and grants to students of military families;

Supplemental health insurance; and

Personalized career transition assistance services for members and spouses;

The Military Officers Association has had a distinguished record of protecting and improving earned compensation and benefits for the entire military and veterans' community. Thanks to the support of Members of this Body and our colleagues in the Senate, MOAA has led efforts that resulted in enactment of major legislative accomplishments including:

TRICARE for Life, landmark legislation that provides lifetime government-sponsored health coverage for military retirees and their family members;

The Post-9/11 GI Bill, which provides cost-free education at any public college or university in the country for the current generation of Iraq and Afghanistan veterans;

Elimination of a dollar-for-dollar offset to military retired pay for retirees with VA service-connected disabilities of 50% to 100%;

Access to continuous TRICARE health coverage for currently serving National Guard and Reserve families and for reservists who qualify for reserve retirement but are not yet in receipt of reserve retired pay at age 60;

Elimination of financial penalties for retired regular officers who pursue second careers in the Federal civil service; and Upgrades in compensation and transition services for severely wounded warriors, their families and the survivors of those who have made the ultimate sacrifice in defense of the nation.

MOAA serves a vital role in helping inform and shape public policy on national defense matters and by ensuring that the needs of the entire active duty, National Guard and Reserves, military retirees, survivors, veterans and their family members are given voice in the public forum.

I want to also congratulate MOAA for being recognized by “The Hill” newspaper for the third year in a row as the top advocacy organization representing veterans.

MOAA has long tradition of servant-leadership to the entire military and veterans community. The Association provides a variety of services not only to its members but to military men and women of all ranks and to veterans.

I am pleased to recommend a Federal Charter be granted to the Military Officers Association of America and ask for unanimous consent that S. 832 be passed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1298

Mr. ALEXANDER. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1298.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote incurs objection under clause 6 of rule XX.

Record votes on postponed questions will be taken later.

WELCOMING HIS ALL HOLINESS BARTHOLOMEW, ARCHBISHOP OF CONSTANTINOPLE, NEW ROME, ECUMENICAL PATRIARCH

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 838) welcoming to the United States and to Washington, DC, His All Holiness Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, New Rome, Ecumenical Patriarch on his upcoming trip on October 20, 2009, through November 6, 2009, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 838

Welcoming to the United States and to Washington, DC, His All Holiness Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, New Rome, Ecumenical Patriarch on his upcoming trip on October 20, 2009, through November 6, 2009.

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew is the spiritual leader of nearly 300,000,000 Orthodox Christians around the world and millions of Orthodox Christians in the United States;

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew is head of the largest Christian denomination headquartered in the Muslim world and convener of an ecumenical meeting which produced the first condemnation by Muslim religious leaders of the 9/11 attack on the United States as an anti-religious act;

Whereas the Ecumenical Patriarchate, located in Istanbul, Turkey, is the spiritual home of the world's oldest and second largest Christian church;

Whereas within the 2,000-year-old Sacred See of the Ecumenical Patriarchate, the New Testament was codified and the Nicene Creed was created;

Whereas the disappearance of the See would mean the end of a crucial link between the Christian and the Muslim world since the continuing presence of the Ecumenical Patriarchate in Turkey is a living testimony of religious co-existence since 1453;

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew received on his first official visit to the United States in 1997, the Congressional Gold Medal, presented by the United States on behalf of the Congress in recognition of his outstanding and enduring contributions to religious understanding and peace, and was recognized by the United States in a manner reserved for a very small number of world leaders;

Whereas the legislation bestowing the Congressional Gold Medal on Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew had one of the highest numbers of Members of the United States House of Representatives cosponsoring it in Congressional history;

Whereas His All Holiness is one of the few living persons to have been awarded the highest Congressional honor, the Congressional Gold Medal, which has been bestowed only on the most eminent individuals, such as George Washington, Winston Churchill, and Pope John Paul II;

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew is recognized in the United States and abroad as a leader in the quest for world peace, greater religious understanding, and respect for the Earth's environment;

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarchate Bartholomew was selected by Time Magazine as number 11 among 2008's 100 most influential people in the world;

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew enhanced greater religious understanding by initiating a joint declaration that it is man's duty to protect the earth, signed by himself and Pope John Paul II, the spiritual leaders of nearly 1 out of every 5 people in the world;

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew is called "the Green Patriarch" by leaders of the international environmental community;

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew received the prestigious Sophie Prize of Norway for his environmental work;

Whereas the prize money was donated by His All Holiness to UNICEF's fund for destitute children and for environmental projects;

Whereas Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew has led symposia of international environmental leaders regarding the Adriatic, Aegean, Arctic, Baltic, and Black Seas, as well as the Amazon, Danube, and Mississippi Rivers, and His All Holiness was honored in New York through the Scenic Hudson River Initiative;

Whereas the Religious, Science, and Environmental (RSE) symposia are organized under the auspices of His All Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, who originally conceived the movement in 1988 at a meeting of environmental and religious leaders for the purpose of establishing common ground on environmental issues between representatives of faith communities, scientists, and environmental nongovernmental organizations;

Whereas patrons of past symposia have included Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh; Jacques Santer and Romano Prodi, former Presidents of the European Commission; and Kofi Annan, former United Nations Secretary-General;

Whereas the symposia have also reached out across different faiths and denominations, revealing the wisdom of diverse theological traditions, as well as a common imperative to protect the natural world;

Whereas during the 2002 Adriatic Sea Symposium, Pope John Paul II and Patriarch Bartholomew signed a joint declaration underlining the spiritual duty of caring for God's creation in the interest of future generations; and

Whereas the outstanding accomplishments of Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew have been formally recognized and honored by numerous governmental, academic, and other institutions around the world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) welcomes to the United States and to Washington, DC, His All Holiness Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, New Rome, Ecumenical Patriarch, and recognizes the importance to the United States and the world of the Ecumenical Patriarch's recent environmental seminar conducted on the Mississippi River with some of the world's leading environment experts;

(2) recognizes the importance to the United States and to the world of Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew's leadership on matters of environment, peace, and religion, and encourages United States foreign policy makers to continue to urge Turkey to grant religious freedom and property rights to the Ecumenical Patriarchate as well as to reopen the theological school at Halki; and

(3) expresses its support for Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew's noble efforts for the betterment of humankind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CARNAHAN) and the gentleman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution and yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to thank my colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and a leading voice in the Congress on issues concerning the Ecumenical Patriarch, for introducing this resolution.

We are all pleased to welcome Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, the spiritual leader of nearly 300 million Orthodox Christians around the world, to the United States and to our Nation's Capital. Elected as the 270th Archbishop of the historic throne of Constantinople, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew has been a tireless advocate for religious freedom, Muslim-Christian dialogue and international environmental protection.

Known as the Bridge Builder and the Patriarch of Peace, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew has provided hope to those who have survived under Communist oppression and has also traveled throughout the Muslim world, advocating for religious tolerance and understanding.

Sitting at the crossroads between East and West, the Ecumenical Patriarchate itself is a testament to half a millennium of Christian-Muslim coexistence. In fact, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew has strived to communicate his message of tolerance and understanding directly to millions of Muslims around the world.

Another important theme of Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew's has been environmental protection which has earned him the title of Green Patriarch. It is fitting then that the Ecumenical Patriarch began his visit to the United States in New Orleans and convened a symposium on the environmental health of the Mississippi River.

This marks the eighth environmental symposium Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew has held since 1995. In 2002, at the Adriatic Sea Symposium, Pope John Paul II and Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew signed a historic joint declaration, underlining the spiritual duty of caring for God's creation in the interest of future generations.

Madam Speaker, while I am pleased that we've come here today and expressed our strong support for Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew and his leadership on many important issues, we must also remember that the Patriarchate itself operates under numerous onerous restrictions imposed by the Government of Turkey, the country where the Patriarchate is located. The Patriarchate's property rights, its freedom to open religious schools and other issues of religious freedom must be properly addressed by the Turkish Government. Indeed, the very future of the Ecumenical Patriarchate is endangered by the Turkish requirement that the Ecumenical Patriarch be a natural-born citizen of Turkey. As the Greek Orthodox population of Turkey has dwindled to less than 3,000 persons, the pool of potential future Ecumenical Patriarchs has virtually dried up. This archaic requirement that the Patriarch be a natural-born Turkish citizen was born in the difficult post-World War I environment in which the modern Republic of Turkey was created. It is certainly unworthy of the self-confident regional power that Turkey has become, and we call on Turkey to end this requirement, and end it now, before it strangles the Patriarchate.

I urge my colleagues to join me in welcoming His All Holiness Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, New Rome, Ecumenical Patriarch and honoring all he has done to promote peace, religious understanding and the protection of our environment. I strongly support this resolution, and I urge all my colleagues to do likewise.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I am so pleased and honored to yield such time as he may consume to my good friend from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), an esteemed member of our Committee on Foreign Affairs and the author of this important resolution.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Madam Speaker, I rise today with great pride to offer House Resolution 838, as amended, which welcomes His All Holiness Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, New Rome, Ecumenical Patriarch, as he visits the United States. I would like to recognize Foreign Affairs Committee Chair BERMAN and Ranking Member ROS-LEHTINEN for working with me to move this important resolution to the House floor expeditiously.

Consideration of this resolution underscores the importance and demonstrates Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew's relevance in the world as a spiritual leader, the leader of nearly 300 million Orthodox Christians around the world and millions of Orthodox Christians right here in the United States.

I was blessed to have been raised in the Greek Orthodox Church. As a child, I served as an altar boy in St. Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church in Tarpon Springs, Florida, as do three of my sons today.

Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew is the 273rd successor of the founder of the Eastern Orthodox Church, St. Andrew the Apostle. Madam Speaker, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew must ensure that the faith in the Holy See endures. The Ecumenical Patriarchate is the spiritual home of the world's oldest and second-largest Christian church located in Istanbul, Turkey.

Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew has a record of reaching out and working for peace and reconciliation among all faiths and has fostered dialogue among Christians, Jews and Muslims. In fact, His All Holiness convened an ecumenical meeting which produced the first condemnation by Muslim leaders of the 9/11 attack on the United States as an anti-religious act, an accomplishment that has yet to be repeated by any other world or religious leader. Indeed, His All Holiness was the second living person in U.S. history allowed to be honored in the United States Capitol Rotunda as a recipient of the Congressional Gold Medal, the highest congressional honor, previously bestowed on such historic figures as George Washington, Pope John Paul II and Winston Churchill.

Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew was honored by Time magazine in its selection of His All Holiness as number 11 among 2008's 100 most influential people in the world. He has been recognized in the United States and abroad as a leader in the quest for world peace, greater religious understanding and respect for the Earth's environment.

This resolution also recognizes the need for religious freedom and property rights to be granted to the Ecumenical Patriarchate as well as the need for the theological school at Halki to be reopened, both of which deserve our full support.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution recognizing the importance of Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew's visit to the United States and his work on behalf of world peace, the environment and religious freedom.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SPACE).

Mr. SPACE. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 838, welcoming to the United States His All Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, New Rome. This visit of the Ecumenical Patriarch is a significant occasion for Orthodox Christians, Greek Americans and all Americans in general.

As a Greek American and as an Orthodox Christian myself, I am humbled by the visit of the leader of my church who is renowned for his work on peace and religious understanding and tolerance around the world. Patriarch Bartholomew has also distinguished himself by working diligently to bring attention to our environment, calling his followers to take heed of their physical and spiritual impact on this Earth.

All of us have been fortunate to live our lives and raise our families in a nation where we are free to worship and we can seek the spiritual guidance of our church leaders without fear. In too many places in the world, this is not possible.

I would like to thank my colleague from Missouri for his reference to the Government of Turkey and would, by these remarks, appeal upon the State of Turkey to embrace a sense of religious tolerance that has, regrettably, been missing. As one of over 300 million who follow the Orthodox faith, I look to Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew for spiritual guidance and leadership, and it fills me with great pride to welcome His Holiness to the United States.

I would like to thank my colleague and good friend from the State of Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) for introducing this resolution, and I am honored to be an original cosponsor. As a member of the Orthodox Church, as a Greek American, as a proud Member of this Congress, I strongly urge support for this resolution.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, it is my great honor to rise in support of this important resolution put forth by my good friend from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS). I thank him for his leadership.

This resolution welcomes the Ecumenical Patriarch on his visit to the United States, which is coming up this November. Patriarch Bartholomew is the spiritual leader for over 300 million Orthodox believers around the world, millions of whom live right here in the United States.

As the leader of the oldest and second largest church in the world, the Patriarch has been an inspirational advocate for peace and religious tolerance. In fact, the Ecumenical Patriarchate in Istanbul has been an iconic symbol for religious co-existence since 1453, when the Muslim ruler and the Patriarch at that time signed an accord for the continuation of the Orthodox Church in what became a predominantly Muslim country.

Today, Patriarch Bartholomew continues to reach out to leaders of various religious faiths to encourage dialogue and understanding. In fact, following the horrendous attacks on our country on September 11, 2001, Patriarch Bartholomew convened an interfaith conference with representatives from the Christian, Jewish and Muslim religions—a conference that resulted in the first condemnation by Muslim leaders of those terrorist attacks. Patriarch Bartholomew has also been a global leader in efforts to protect our environment. He has sponsored symposia with international environmental leaders on initiatives to protect our clean oceans and to protect our rivers.

Despite his many contributions and the commitment to peace and understanding, the Ecumenical Patriarch continues to endure restrictions imposed by the Turkish Government. The prohibitions on the Patriarchate's right to own property and its right to determine for itself the requirements for Patriarchal succession must end. The closing of the theological school in Halki must be reversed. Such actions restrict the religious freedom of millions of Orthodox believers, and they threaten the future of the Patriarchate, itself.

I am pleased that this resolution clearly states the need for the lifting of these bureaucratic restrictions on the Ecumenical Patriarchate, and on the occasion of the Patriarch's visit to the United States, we again call on the Turkish Government to end them.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES).

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 838. It is, indeed, a privilege to join with my colleagues in welcoming to the United States and honoring His All Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople and New Rome.

I want to thank Congressman BILIRAKIS for his leadership in developing this resolution.

As Ecumenical Patriarch, His All Holiness is the spiritual leader of the world's Orthodox Christians. Orthodox Christians constitute the second largest Christian domination in the world, numbering some 300 million. From the Phanar, located in modern day Istanbul, the Ecumenical Patriarch has challenged all of us through his unparalleled work in interfaith dialogue to respect each other's faiths and cultures.

He is a true messenger of peace and justice. Each day, the Ecumenical Patriarch reminds us through his good deeds and good words that we must reach beyond the value of material goods and look at one another as the brethren of a single family. The role of pastor to the world, the Ecumenical role of His All Holiness arises from the fact that he is the successor of the Apostle Andrew, who established the church in Rome's eastern provinces while his brother, Peter, established the church in Rome.

Unfortunately, while the Ecumenical Patriarchate in Istanbul is more than 1,700 years in existence, today, its survival is threatened because of the continued denial of religious freedom and human rights that is perpetuated by the government of the Republic of Turkey. The plight of this ancient and noble religious center exemplifies the ongoing struggle for international religious freedom that so many people of so many faiths continue to endure.

The United States must call upon its ally Turkey to restore the full rights of the Patriarchate, including property rights, and to reopen the Halki Theological Seminary.

I am particularly drawn to the Patriarch's efforts to promote environmentalism. He has been called the Green Patriarch for his powerful commitment to restoring our planet. He initiated a joint declaration that it is man's duty to protect the Earth, signed by himself and Pope John Paul—the spiritual leaders of nearly one out of every five people in the world.

The moral force of his message is unassailable. Humankind must ensure that it exists in a world where there is fresh air to breathe, clean water to drink and pure soil from which to harvest our food. From the Phanar, the Ecumenical Patriarch has inspired millions of Christians, Jews, Muslims, and people of all faiths with his call upon humanity to honor its responsibility as a steward of the Earth's natural bounty.

We are so privileged to have Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew in the United States and to honor him for his continuing efforts to achieve a more peaceful and harmonious world.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 838, a bill to welcome His All Holiness Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, to the United States and to Washington, DC.

As the spiritual leader of nearly 300,000,000 Orthodox Christians around the world and millions of Orthodox Christians in the United States, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew is recognized here and abroad for his leadership in the quest for world peace, for his work to promote responsible stewardship of the environment and for his global efforts to spread religious tolerance.

In addition to receiving the 1997 Congressional Gold Medal and the Sophie Prize of Norway for managing to raise the environmental awareness of 300 million members of the Orthodox Churches, His Holiness was recognized in 2008 by Time Magazine as one of the world's most influential people. Time Magazine said His Holiness was recognized for his successful efforts to "stake out a clear moral and spiritual vision that is dominated by his concern for the environment."

I am proud to stand in recognition of the pioneering efforts of His Holiness in linking faith to the environment, for his tireless efforts to promote justice and human rights and for his global spiritual leadership.

I welcome His Holiness to the United States and urge my colleagues to join me in support of this resolution.

Ms. TITUS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 838. I am proud to be a co-sponsor of this important resolution which welcomes His Holiness Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, New Rome, to the United States of America.

His Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew has been a tireless advocate for religious freedom, Muslim-Christian dialogue, and international environmental protection. He has been internationally recognized for his work to improve our worldwide community in many ways.

His work in the Muslim world advocating for religious understanding and tolerance and his efforts with victims of soviet oppression have earned him the title of "Patriarch of Peace." In 2008, His Holiness was named one of the 100 most influential people in the world by Time Magazine.

Madam Speaker, while I am pleased that the House of Representatives is expressing our strong support for Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew and his leadership on many important issues, it is equally as important that I address the fact that the Patriarchate itself operates under numerous unfair restrictions imposed by the Turkish Government, where the Patriarchate is located. Unfortunately, the Patriarchate's property rights, its ability to open religious schools, and other issues of religious freedom must be properly addressed by the Turkish Government. I hope that the United States and the world community will work with the Government of Turkey to end this terrible crime of inhibiting religious freedoms.

I am pleased to welcome His Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew to the United States and I look forward to joining with our country's leaders to formally welcome His Holiness to Washington. I look forward to learning from him and working with the Greek Orthodox Community in the United States to bring full religious freedom to the Patriarchate. His Holiness has been instrumental in bringing light to those who have lived in darkness and helping those who need it most. We all benefit from his teachings.

I urge my colleagues to support the resolution.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time on this important resolution, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CARNAHAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 838, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

ENCOURAGING IRAN TO REUNITE JOSHUA FATTAL, SHANE BAUER, AND SARAH SHOURD WITH THEIR FAMILIES

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 45) encouraging the Government of Iran to allow Joshua Fattal, Shane Bauer, and Sarah Shourd to reunite with their families in the United States as soon as possible.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The text of the concurrent resolution is as follows:

S. CON. RES. 45

Whereas on July 31, 2009, officials of the Government of Iran took 3 United States citizens, Joshua Fattal, Shane Bauer, and Sarah Shourd, into custody near the Ahmed Awa region of northern Iraq, after the 3 United States citizens reportedly crossed into the territory of Iran while hiking in Iraq;

Whereas officials of the Government of Iran have confirmed that they are holding the 3 United States citizens; and

Whereas officials of the Government of Iran have allowed consular access by the Embassy of the Government of Switzerland (in its formal capacity as the representative of the interests of the United States in Iran) to the 3 young United States citizens in accordance with the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, done at Vienna April 24, 1963: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress—

(1) encourages the Government of Iran to allow Joshua Fattal, Shane Bauer, and Sarah Shourd to communicate by telephone with their families in the United States; and

(2) encourages the Government of Iran to allow Joshua Fattal, Shane Bauer, and Sarah Shourd to reunite with their families in the United States as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CARNAHAN) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous materials on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARNAHAN. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of S. Con. Res. 45, a resolution encouraging the Government of Iran to allow the American prisoners Joshua Fattal, Shane Bauer and Sarah Shourd to reunite with their families in the United States as soon as possible.

On July 31, 2009, these three American hikers were taken into custody by Iranian officials near northern Iraq. They were seized because the Iranians said they had crossed into Iranian territory while on a hike in a rural region near the Iraq-Iran border.

The three hikers certainly had no malicious or devious intentions. The area they were hiking through, part of Iraqi Kurdistan, is mountainous but not obscure. In fact, it is becoming increasingly popular with tourists. If the three Americans did, indeed, cross into Iranian territory, they almost certainly did so unknowingly and unintentionally.

At the time of her capture, 31-year old Sarah Shourd was teaching English in Damascus, Syria, where she was living with her boyfriend, Shane Bauer—a writer and photojournalist. Their friend and fellow University of California—Berkeley alumnus, Joshua Fattal, was traveling with them in Iraqi Kurdistan. Their adventure in Iraq turned into a nightmare when they were seized by the Iranians.

This important resolution calls on the Government of Iran to provide these three innocent, young Americans, at a minimum, the opportunity to speak with their families by phone. It also encourages the Government of Iran to free them so they can be reunited with their families in the United States as soon as possible.

Of course, Joshua, Shane and Sarah are not the only Americans currently being held in Iran. The Iranian-American scholar, Kian Tajbakhsh—an urban planner with a doctorate from Columbia University—was arrested in July, and was sentenced last week to 15-years' imprisonment for his involvement in the peaceful demonstrations that followed the July 12 election fraud.

Another Iranian-American, 71-year old Reza Taghavi, has been imprisoned since May 2008 without a trial or formal charges.

In April, this body passed House Concurrent Resolution 36, regarding the case of the former FBI agent, Robert Levinson, who has been missing in Iran since 2007.

As the United States and the international community engage Iran on its nuclear weapons program, we must not forget the plight of these innocent Americans. I commend Undersecretary of State William Burns for raising this issue with his Iranian counterpart at the October 1 Geneva meeting. I encourage him to continue to do so at all subsequent meetings with Iranian officials until our fellow citizens are freed.

A New York Times editorial this past Saturday said it well, entitled "More Iranian Injustice." The editorial called for the immediate release of the imprisoned Americans, and it went on to read, "Iran may sit at the negotiating table with the United States and other world powers, but it will never earn the respect it craves if it continues these kinds of human rights abuses."

I commend Senator ARLEN SPECTER for introducing this timely resolution in the Senate, and I commend our colleague from Pennsylvania, ALLYSON SCHWARTZ. This deserves our deep appreciation for their leadership on this issue.

Madam Speaker, we care passionately about the freedom of our fellow citizens, and it is in that spirit that I urge all of my colleagues to support this important resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, on July 31 of this year, the Iranian regime detained three U.S. citizens—Joshua Fattal, Shane Bauer and Sarah Shourd—who were hiking in northern Iraq and who allegedly strayed across the border by accident. Almost 3 full months later, Iran still holds them captive. This case should alert us once again to the true nature of the Iranian regime.

Almost 30 years ago, on November 4, 1979, this regime took 53 American hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, and it held them for 444 days. Three decades later, this is a regime that continues to hold American citizens hostage. This is a regime that remains the largest state sponsor of terrorism in the world—from Beirut to Buenos Aires. This is a regime that continues to support Iraqi and Afghan violent Islamist groups, which are responsible for the deaths of Americans. This is a regime that openly seeks to wipe out our ally, the democratic, Jewish State of Israel, off the map, and it acts accordingly. This is a regime that continues to relentlessly pursue unconventional weapons and the missiles to carry them.

Using conventional means, Iran has inflicted considerable damage on U.S. citizens, on our interests and on our allies during its 30-year war against America.

I strongly support Senate Concurrent Resolution 45, which draws attention to the fact that Iran continues to hold U.S. citizens hostage. The regime must release these young Americans immediately and unconditionally, and the United States and other responsible nations must fully recognize the nature of the regime, and they need to apply every form of economic and political pressure in our arsenal—now, not later—to compel the regime to abandon its dangerous course.

Madam Speaker, with that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. SCHWARTZ).

Ms. SCHWARTZ. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this resolution.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of three young American citizens who have been detained by the Government of Iran for nearly 3 months now.

On July 31, 2009, Joshua Fattal, Shane Bauer and Sarah Shourd were taken into custody after purportedly crossing into the Iranian territory while hiking in Iraqi Kurdistan. It is a peaceful region of northern Iraq which has become increasingly popular as a hiking destination for many Westerners. During the hike, it seems they accidentally crossed over an unmarked border into Iran.

As a result, these three young Americans, all graduates of the University of California-Berkeley, have since been detained in Iran. While Swiss diplomats were finally permitted access to Josh, Sarah and Shane on September 29, the three have still not been allowed to have any contact with their families.

In response to this action, I have sponsored in the House—and Senator ARLEN SPECTER has spearheaded in the Senate—Senate Concurrent Resolution 45, which encourages the Government of Iran to allow Josh, Shane and Sarah to communicate by telephone with their families in the United States. More importantly, it also encourages the Government of Iran to allow them to reunite with their families here in the United States as soon as possible.

□ 1700

This resolution was unanimously passed by the Senate on October 6.

Josh, whose family is from Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, which I represent; Sarah; and Shane did not commit any malicious acts. They were three young Americans who have traveled extensively throughout the world seeking to learn about different societies and different cultures. Unfortunately, they made a single mistake: They got lost. For that they have been held for nearly 3 months with almost no contact with the outside world.

As a mother, I can well imagine the pain and frustration the families of the three young adults feel as they wait, hoping, doing all that they can but with little power to compel action by Iran to free their children. I know, especially through my conversations with Mrs. Fattal, how important this resolution is to them and their families.

I urge the Government of Iran to reunite Josh, Sarah, and Shane with their families, and I ask my colleagues to support this concurrent resolution and the strong but compassionate plea for action that it contains.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased now to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank him also for carrying this resolution.

Madam Speaker, I am in strong support of Senate Concurrent Resolution 45, which encourages the Government of Iran to allow the three American citizens detained in Iran to reunite with their families as soon as possible.

Since July 2009—I think it was July 31—Joshua Fattal, Shane Bauer, and Sarah Shourd have been detained by the Government of Iran after inadvertently, inadvertently, crossing the unmarked border with Iran while attempting to hike in the mountains in Iraqi Kurdistan. Now, Sarah is a constituent, but Joshua and Shane, they are all graduates of the University of California in Berkeley, which is located in my district.

I have had the opportunity to talk with family members of Sarah, and I know how difficult it is for them during these trying times and I know how they are doing everything they can do to seek their release.

Reports indicate that for 3 months, the families of these young American citizens have had no contact with the detained, whether in person or by telephone. The lack of information regarding the whereabouts and welfare of their loved ones, as well as any indication of a timeline for their release, is deeply troubling.

Under article 36 of the Vienna Convention, consular officers shall be provided access to an arrested, detained, or imprisoned national without delay. I was relieved to hear that on September 30, 2009, Swiss officials were finally granted consular access to the three detained American citizens. However, like my colleagues, like all of us, we are deeply concerned that these officials and the three lack freedom of communication, which is also provided for by the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

This resolution importantly calls upon the Government of Iran to allow for Joshua, Shane, and Sarah to communicate by telephone with their families in the United States, who continue to passionately appeal to the Government of Iran for their timely and safe release. On September 22, President Ahmadinejad stated his intent to ask the Iranian judiciary to “expedite the process” of this case, as well as to “look at the case with maximum leniency.”

In accordance with this resolution, I hope that the Government of Iran will live up to its promise and act without delay to ensure that these young American citizens may be reunited with their families and loved ones.

I stand in support of this resolution today. I want to thank the State Department and all of our colleagues for doing so much to try to gain the release of these three young individuals as soon as possible.

I thank my colleagues for their support of this resolution.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CARNAHAN) that the House suspend the rules and concur in the concurrent resolution, S. Con. Res. 45.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

HONORING CONFUCIUS' 2560TH BIRTHDAY

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 784) honoring the 2560th anniversary of the birth of Confucius and recognizing his invaluable contributions to philosophy and social and political thought.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 784

Whereas September 28, 551 B.C., is recognized as the date on which Confucius was born in the town of Qufu, in what is now the Shandong Province of China;

Whereas Confucius, who is one of the greatest thinkers, teachers, and social philosophers in history, developed a philosophy that has deeply influenced, and continues to influence, the social and political thought of countries around the world, including China, Korea, Japan, Taiwan, and Vietnam;

Whereas Confucius counseled introspection, self-cultivation, sincerity, and the observance of respect within social relationships as a means of achieving justice and attaining morality in personal and public life, reflecting a moral fiber of the highest degree;

Whereas the teaching of Confucius that “what one does not wish for oneself, one ought not to do to anyone else; what one recognizes as desirable for oneself, one ought to be willing to grant to others” is a model for ethical behavior and for the promotion of harmony among us;

Whereas Confucius taught that an ideal government is founded upon loyalty, respect for elders, and recognition of the importance of family; and

Whereas Confucius taught that politicians must be models of truthfulness and morality, which serves as a reminder to all of our duty to serve with the utmost honor and respect: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives honors the 2,560th anniversary of the birth of Confucius and recognizes his invaluable contributions to philosophy and social and political thought.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CARNAHAN) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROSELEHTINEN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This resolution before us honors the birth of Confucius over 2,000 years ago and recognizes his contributions to philosophy and social and political thought. I would like to thank my friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. AL GREEN) for introducing this resolution.

According to Chinese tradition, Confucius was born in 551 B.C. to a poor but noble family. He became a high-level government minister but later resigned his position after becoming disillusioned with the misbehavior and corruption of the rulers in feudal China.

Confucius then embarked on a long journey throughout the small kingdoms that made up China with a devoted group of students, expounding his political philosophy. He would return home to spend his last years teaching and compiling his wisdom into a set of texts that would become known as the “Confucian Classics.”

After his death, Confucius would serve as the “spiritual ancestor” of later teachers, historians, philosophers, and literary scholars whose lives and works figure prominently in Chinese intellectual history. Indeed, he would become not only China's preeminent philosopher but also Asia's most influential thinker as well.

Confucius' birth over 2½ millennia ago was not only celebrated in China late last month but throughout Asia, including South Korea, Japan, and Taiwan.

He taught respect for one's elders and for understanding one's responsibility to others within the existing social structure. He believed that government officials should be chosen for their virtue and ability, not for their birth.

Confucius believed that the purpose of the government was the welfare of the people. And perhaps most importantly, he taught that a ruler who was not righteous and humane would forfeit the “Mandate of Heaven” and, thus, lose the right to govern.

Confucius' teaching developed into a system of philosophy known as Confucianism, which would have profound impact on the thought and life of East Asia. Some have compared his influence with that of Socrates in the West.

I strongly support this resolution and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution commemorating the 2,560th anniversary of the birth of that sage of Chinese culture, the philosopher Confucius.

Confucius is not only revered in his native China but also in Taiwan, Korea, Japan, and Vietnam. Confucius is best remembered for his promotion of social harmony and his emphasis on the virtues of education. His teachings have long provided an ethical guidepost for millions of people living throughout East and Southeast Asia.

Confucius is another philosopher who taught us the golden rule: "Do not do to others what you do not want done to yourself." Confucius also taught that the path to both virtue and success is led through the discipline of study. His famous saying that "a journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step" encouraged his disciples never to give up no matter what the hardships.

Inspired by him, thousands of Chinese, Taiwanese, Korean, Japanese, and Vietnamese scholars and scientists have made enormous contributions to the world's pool of knowledge. Young American scholars, drawn from these Asian communities influenced by Confucianism, have made impressive contributions to the mosaic of American life in the fields of science, law, medicine, engineering, music, and art.

So it is fitting today to pass this resolution honoring the birthday of a man who has been called "China's greatest teacher."

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased now to yield 5 minutes to the sponsor of this bill, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. AL GREEN).

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. Madam Speaker, I think it appropriate that you be in the chair today because in Houston, Texas, in your district, I believe, we have a statue that has been erected in honor of Confucius. So I come here today and I thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank the leadership for allowing this resolution to come to the floor. I thank the Honorable HOWARD BERMAN, the chairperson of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for allowing the resolution to pass the committee. I thank the Honorable ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN for allowing us to work with her and to manage this piece of legislation on the floor. I thank the Honorable RUSS CARNAHAN for acting as Democratic manager of the amendment.

This resolution honors the 2,560th anniversary of the birth of Confucius, recognizing his contributions to philosophy and to social and political thought. This resolution is a reflection of the diversity that we celebrate in the United States of America.

We are 46.9 million Hispanic and Latinos, 37.6 million African Americans, 16 million foreign-born naturalized citizens, 14 million Asian and Pacific Islanders. We speak 337 different languages. In my district, we have and we are African American, Latino, Vietnamese, Indian, Pakistani, Chinese, Nigerian, Somali, Ethiopian, Eritrean, Sudanese, Turkish, Ghanaian, and Taiwanese. And there are probably some that I have missed and I apologize to any constituent that was not properly mentioned.

On September 26, in our district, as I indicated earlier, this year, a bronze statue of Confucius was dedicated in Hermann Park in Houston, Texas.

I am honored to tell you that today on the suspension calendar we honored His All Holiness Bartholomew, Archbishop of Constantinople, and I commend my colleague for bringing this to the attention of the House. It is not unusual for us to honor persons who are not Americans for their contributions to America and to global society. We have honored many persons, including Tony Blair, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom; Nicholas Sarkozy, President of France; Her Majesty Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands; and we've also honored the Honorable Desmond Tutu and Nelson Mandela, both of South Africa. We have honored events. We have honored what is known as the religious and historical event that is the Festival of Diwali, which was presented to this House in September of last year. And I am proud to say today that we are going to honor Confucius, an Asian teacher, scholar, and philosopher.

Confucius was born in 551 B.C., was one of the great thinkers of his time and of all time. He was a teacher of prosperity and a preacher of peace. He developed Confucianism, a philosophy that has deeply influenced the social and political thought of countries around the world, including China, Korea, Japan, Taiwan, and Vietnam, to name a few. He emphasized that personal introspection, self-cultivation, respect of social relationships, personal and governmental morality, justice and sincerity reflect a moral fiber of the greatest and highest degree.

□ 1715

He preached that politicians must always represent truth and morality. He taught the philosophy of reciprocity: never impose upon others what you would not choose for yourself.

He taught the "silver rule" which complements the Golden Rule: do not do unto others as you would not have do unto you.

He taught the importance of shame in an orderly society by indicating, If people be led by laws, and uniformity sought to be given by punishments, they will try to avoid punishment, but have no sense of shame. However, if they be led by virtue, and uniformity is sought to be given them by rules of propriety, they will have a sense of shame, and moreover will become good.

I would note that shame promotes good to prevent punishment, whereas punishment precedes bad, to promote good.

He reminded all that, When you have faults, do not fear to abandon them. In different words what he said was, It is virtuous to know one's faults and change. He explained that self-respect begets self-respect when he made this quote, Respect yourself and others will respect you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARNAHAN. I yield the gentleman an additional 1 minute.

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. He gave us with a great degree of simplicity a quote that I believe is one of his greatest when he articulated, To understand nothing is to understand everything.

I am honored to present this resolution today. I believe that the diversity that we celebrate in this country, the diversity that I have in my district which is 36 percent African American, 31 percent Anglo, 21 percent Latino, and 12 percent Asian, in my district I believe that my constituents are honored to have persons of Asian ancestry who honor and celebrate Confucius. But I think as a philosopher who has transcended time, he is someone we should recognize in the House of Representatives.

I beg that my colleagues would support this resolution, comparable to many others that we have had on the floor of the House.

Mr. HONDA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to support House Resolution 784, honoring the 2560th anniversary of the Birth of Confucius and recognizing his invaluable contributions to philosophy, and social and political thought. This resolution is sponsored by my friend and executive board member of the Congressional Asian Pacific American Caucus (CAPAC), Congressman AL GREEN of Texas.

Confucius was born on September 28, 551 BC in the town of Qufu, in what is now the Shandong Province of China. Though he grew up in poverty, Confucius recognized the value of education in creating an informed and knowledgeable society. He lived his life by this principle and traveled throughout China as a teacher to counsel others in introspection, self-cultivation, sincerity, and the observance of respect within social relationships as a means of achieving justice and attaining morality in the personal and public life. In a chaotic time of internal feuds and wars, Confucius established a peaceful intellectual and personal evolution in the minds and hearts of the Chinese people. He began a global effort to move society in an enlightened direction, and his teachings in the principles of self-transformation, humaneness, strength of mind, and an orderly society have contributed to our advancement.

In addition to being known for his commitment to education and self-enlightenment, Confucius's thought also included the principle that politicians must be models of truth and morality. He believed that government must adopt the practice of moral correctness and that politicians must rule with justice and sincerity. These principles have helped build the foundation for political philosophy, and have been a cornerstone for past and future leaders in representing their constituents. Confucius's philosophical teachings have been studied by scholars throughout the world, and his words of wisdom have inspired many generations of dedicated followers.

Confucius is considered to be one of the greatest philosophers, whose teachings and philosophy still influence millions of people around the world today. I am proud to be a cosponsor of House Resolution 784 to honor Confucius's birth, life, and teachings. This resolution recognizes the importance of Confucius's edicts in today's society, and conveys the House of Representatives's deepest respect to this important philosopher.

I would especially like to thank Congressman GREEN for making this resolution a priority on the House floor. As a member of CAPAC, Congressman GREEN is a committed and conscientious advocate on behalf of Asian American and Pacific Islander communities. I commend his efforts to recognize Confucius's great contributions to society, and I join him in asking you to support House Resolution 784.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CARNAHAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 784.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on S. 832.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMAHON). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

HALLOWEEN HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this year at Halloween, the Feds will be going door to door playing trick or treat on seniors by taking their Medicare coverage. When they knock, seniors should not answer the door. When they peek through the peephole, the bureaucrats will be dressed as snake oil salesmen because they are cutting Medicare parts A, B, C and D. They are going to try to sell seniors on the new bill which we call Medicare part E, but it doesn't cover one senior citizen. Not one. Just call it Halloween health care because it is really scary.

What is in this Halloween health care bill? Well, just look at the latest and greatest Senate bill. You know, that is the bill that is being drafted in the dark corners and the dungeons of the Capitol where the light of transparency and truth never reaches.

The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office says the Halloween health care will do the following things: It will cut Medicare part A for hospitals by $128 billion. It will cut Medicare part B for doctor reimbursement $130 billion. It will rob Medicare part C, Medicare Advantage, off $133 billion. We are not through yet. And yes, Medicare part D for prescription drugs is cut $20 billion. The total: $411 billion cut for seniors and Medicare. That is enough to scare everybody.

This new Medicare part E takes a half-trillion dollars out of Medicare, but it doesn't cover the seniors. In this new Medicare part E, the "E" stands for everybody else, including those in the country illegally.

I know, they keep talking about and saying that illegals will not be covered. But when attempts were made to require proof of citizenship to sign up for Halloween health care handouts, the amendments were voted down. The bill also raises $424 billion in new taxes.

Now why would they do that when the country is in a recession? The country is broke. We don't have the money. Well, Halloween health care will cost a trillion dollars, and they have to get the money from somewhere. We can't afford another thousand-page, trillion dollar bill. Our seniors are going to pay for more than half of the tab out of Medicare, and not one single senior will get more coverage out of this new health care bill.

Here is where it really gets dicey. The new Halloween health care proposal still rations health care services based on age. If you need a pacemaker, the snake oil salesmen are going to look at your age, the cost in what they call survivability rates. If the bureaucrats think your health care needs are just too expensive, they will hand out pain pills instead of approving that new pacemaker. That is what they already do in other countries where the government runs the health care system. In England it is called, and get this, the Quality Adjusted Life Years, and they have the power to make these life-and-death decisions on seniors.

When the Federal Government is in charge of health care, they are the only game in town and this so-called public option will be costly. You think health care is expensive now, just wait until it is free.

There are commonsense health care reforms we can all agree on. We don't have to have the government take over the whole system to fix what is specifically wrong with the system. That is like pulling all of your teeth when you have a toothache.

Halloween health care will be another thousand page, trillion-dollar bill. It will raise Medicare and other premiums, raise taxes, and slash Medicare coverage for seniors. This is not reform, that's abuse. But that is Halloween health care and it is coming to your door. Trick or treat.

And that's just the way it is.

MILITARY STRATEGY FOR AFGHANISTAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, tonight I want to read a few paragraphs from an article written by Andrew Bacevich. It was in the American Conservative in May of this year, and the title is "To Die For a Mystique: The lessons our leaders did not learn from the Vietnam War."

"In one of the most thoughtful Vietnam-era accounts written by a senior military officer, General Bruce Palmer once observed, 'With respect to Vietnam, our leaders should have known that the American people would not stand still for a protracted war of an indeterminate nature with no foreseeable end to the U.S. commitment.'

"General Palmer thereby distilled into a single sentence the central lesson of Vietnam: to embark upon an open-ended war lacking clearly defined and achievable objectives was to forfeit public support, thereby courting disaster. The implications were clear: never again."

I further read from the article, "To Die For a Mystique."

“To cite General Palmer’s formulation, the citizens of this country at present do appear willing to ‘stand still’ when considering the prospect of war that goes on and on. While there are many explanations for why Americans have disengaged from the Long War, the most important, in my view, is that so few of us have any immediate personal stake in that conflict.”

Again, that was from the book written by General Bruce Palmer.

Mr. Speaker, I further read from this article. This is the close. “The President who vows to ‘change the way Washington works’ has not yet exhibited the imagination needed to conceive of an alternative to the project that his predecessor began.

“The urgent need is to demystify that project, which was from the outset a misguided one. Just as in the 1960s we possessed neither the wisdom nor the means needed to determine the fate of Southeast Asia, so today we possess neither the wisdom nor the means necessary to determine the fate of the Greater Middle East. To persist in efforts to do so—as the Obama administration appears intent on doing in Afghanistan—will simply replicate on an even greater scale mistakes like those that Bruce Palmer and John Kerry once rightly decried.”

Mr. Speaker, I read this for this reason: I want to first say to the President, thank you for taking the time and thank you for being very careful in making your decision as to what our future plans are for Afghanistan. And, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to read this because Andrew Bacevich knows better than anyone. He fought in Vietnam for this country. He later became a professor at West Point. And during the Iraq war, he buried his son, a lieutenant, who was a graduate of West Point who was killed for this country. So I think we need to be very careful as we move forward, and I want to again say to the President, please take your time, make the right decisions for this country.

I have the privilege of having Camp Lejeune Marine Corps Base in my country. I have gotten to know a lot of marines, both active duty and retired. I recently spoke to a general that I cannot name because I don’t have his permission, but if I did, he would be well known to the Marine Corps.

□ 1730

He said to me 3 weeks ago, Please tell your colleagues on both sides of the aisle to move very carefully, to have a full, understood plan and a defined plan as to what we’re supposed to accomplish in Afghanistan. Again, this general fought in Vietnam for this country.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I will close as I always do by asking God to please bless our men and women in uniform. I ask God to please bless the families of our men and women in uniform. I ask God, in His loving arms, to hold the families who have given a child dying for freedom in Afghanistan and Iraq. I will ask God to bless the House and Senate, that we will do what is right. I will ask God to give wisdom, strength and courage to the President of the United States, that he will do what is right in the eyes of God. And three times I will ask, God please, God please, God please continue to bless America.

RYAN WHITE ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am so proud to represent one of the most beautiful, most diverse regions in our country, south Florida. Sadly, though, our local paradise, well known for its sunny weather, its world-class beaches, its artistic style, also is one of the areas hardest hit by the HIV/AIDS epidemic. We are continually confronted with the challenge of providing adequate and timely treatment to those impacted by this terrible disease.

The number of people suffering from HIV/AIDS in south Florida has increased immensely over the past few years. We have over 32,000 people currently diagnosed in my home county of Miami-Dade, and it ranks second among large metropolitan areas for people living with AIDS. On top of this, Florida ranks third in the Nation on the number of AIDS cases. These individuals need our assistance in fighting this terrible disease.

There are wonderful programs designed to mitigate the terrible consequences of HIV/AIDS. One of the most innovative, one of the most effective is the Ryan White HIV/AIDS Treatment Program. This program funds HIV/AIDS treatment for low-income, uninsured, and underinsured people. Ryan White provides funding to cities, to States, as well as directly to select clinics and care providers for core medical and support services.

In 2009, my home State of Florida received over $209 million in funding through Ryan White to assist countless low-income Americans living with HIV/AIDS. This life-saving program was set to expire this month. Thankfully, Mr. Speaker, this amazing program was granted a 3-year extension through the Ryan White HIV/AIDS Treatment Extension Act, and I thank my colleagues for this.

With strong bipartisan support, this bill was overwhelmingly approved. I voted for and the House passed this legislation, and we should all be proud of that. Passage assures the continuity of this vital program. It will allow us to help States, communities, and families cope with the impact of the HIV/AIDS epidemic while creating a support system for those dealing with the disease.

I am constantly working to improve the quality and the availability of care for persons with HIV/AIDS and their families and their support system. It is my mission to promote awareness and education so that each day we can help assure that fewer people will be afflicted with this disease.

I have seen firsthand the impact this disease has had on so many individual lives and families in my community, and I know that extending this important program is not just a priority, but a necessity.

The Ryan White program is the largest federally funded program in the United States for people living with HIV/AIDS. It has been the largest supplier of services for those living with HIV/AIDS in the United States as well.

As a payer of last resort, the Ryan White Act offers a method of payment for treatment unlike Medicare or Medicaid. In the United States, over 500,000 people a year benefit from the Ryan White program. I know that through the extension of Ryan White, we can—indeed, we will—save and improve the lives of countless individuals in my congressional district and throughout our great country of the United States of America.

RECOGNIZING HANOVER PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, our country faces many serious challenges, but it’s sometimes useful to know that good things are still happening out there in the real world, out there across our country, and mostly away from Washington, D.C. So Mr. Speaker, I recognize tonight the Hanover Public Schools for their commitment to providing quality education.

Located in the community of Hanover in northern Kansas, the school serves about 175 students from the surrounding rural area. Though Hanover Public Schools are small by most standards, their accomplishments are great. The students, teachers, and administrators at Hanover Public Schools are dedicated to excellence in education. This excellence is evident by the recognitions that they have received.

For the past 3 consecutive years, Hanover High School has received the Kansas Governor’s Achievement Award. This award is given to the top 5 percent of schools in Kansas that meet the highest standards on Kansas assessments. Only five other schools in our State have received this award 3 years in a row.

Not only has Hanover High School been recognized as one of the best schools in the State of Kansas, it has also been honored nationally. For the second year in a row, Hanover High School has been cited by U.S. News and World Report as one of the top schools in the country.

Having a well-rounded education means more than what can just be learned in the classroom. Students at Hanover Public Schools have also excelled in extracurricular activities. During the 2008-2009 school year, Hanover High School became State champions not in one, but in two sporting events. Last November, the Hanover High School football team took first place at State in the eight-man division. And after placing second at last year's State tournament, this year's Hanover High School basketball team placed first in the 1A division. The team finished with a perfect record, winning all 28 games.

The success of Hanover Public Schools serves as a model for other schools in our State and across the country. That success could not be possible without the strong support of the Hanover community. Small-town values and small community ties have produced generations of successful graduates.

I commend the Hanover Public Schools for their success and for achieving their mission, to create a learning environment dedicated to developing lifelong learners and responsible citizens.

My congratulations to the students, staff, faculty, the Board of Education, and the community. I am honored today to recognize this outstanding school in the State of Kansas.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank you, and I thank my leadership on the Republican side for allowing me to control the time during this Special Order hour this evening. And surprise, surprise, we're going to be talking about health care reform.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, we all know that this is something that has been on the front burner for the entire 7, 8, 9 months of this 111th Congress. It has certainly been a priority of the President; the President has said so on many occasions. In fact, President Obama indicated that reforming our health care system is the number one priority of his administration. First and foremost, it is the thing that he is willing to spend political capital, whatever it takes, to have comprehensive health care reform and to have it before the end of this first year of his first term.

I certainly can see that the President, Mr. Speaker, has followed through on that pledge. I personally feel that he has made a mistake on that. I don't think that the American people believe that fixing our health care system to the extent that we literally would throw out everything that we've got and let the Federal Government essentially take over lock, stock and barrel our health care system—which accounts for something like 16 percent of our total economy—at a time when our economy is literally, figuratively in the tank. We're sitting here with a 10.5 percent unemployment rate across the country and 15 million people out of work. It has even affected my own family very, very personally, one of my four children. They say, Mr. Speaker, that when your neighbors lose their job it's a recession, but when you lose your job all of a sudden it's a depression. I know that feeling right now, and a lot of people across this country know that feeling.

When we adjourned for the August recess, the District Work Period that's traditional in this Congress, all Members go back home, they may squeeze in a little family vacation, but you've got about a month, August, it has been traditional probably for 100 years that Congress has done that. And we got an earful, did we not, Mr. Speaker, during those 4 to 5 weeks of these town hall meetings that Members had all across the country? And by a factor of 10, the attendance had increased that much.

On a typical town hall meeting in my 11th District of Georgia in the nine counties I represent—and we would always try to have our town hall meetings at a time that was most convenient to our constituents, that would be easy for them to get to, maybe at a senior center, and try not to schedule it during suppertime or during prime time TV evenings—you might get 50 people on a good night, maybe 75 people when they were really ginned up about something.

Well, in my case, in the 11th of Georgia, we were getting 750 people, 1,100, 1,500—in one instance 2,000 in some of the town hall meetings we had. And we were seeing the same thing all across the country, whether they were Republican districts or Democratic districts. Mr. Speaker, what these constituents were saying—many of them, of course, were seniors—they're most concerned about the economy, of course, because they're on a fixed income. My mom is one of those. God bless my mom, Helen Gannon Gingrey, originally from Manhattan, New York City, but lived in the South most of her life. She is 91 years old now on a fixed income, relies on Social Security and Medicare and Medicare part B and part D. She's a little disappointed she's not going to get a COLA this year. But these folks showed up at these town hall meetings telling us, We don't want to pay for some new government-run health care system from A to Z that's going to be paid for on our backs. And what they're referring to, of course, is mostly the cuts, the deep cuts that the bills in the House and the Senate propose to take out of the hide of the Medicare program.

I'm going to be joined, Mr. Speaker, by a number of my Republican colleagues. In fact, tonight the participants in our hour are going to be for the most part the doctors on the Republican side. We have a caucus, a group that we call the GOP Doctors Caucus; there are about 15 of us in that group. We have a number of M.D. physicians. We have a doctor of psychology, we have a doctor of optometry, we have a couple of dental doctors, and people that have spent before coming to Congress—and some of us now have been here 8, 10, 15 years even, but before coming here our day job, if you will, our profession was delivering health care. We were health care providers.

We keep our licenses active, I think most of us do, and we keep up with medical issues, realizing, of course, that Congress is not necessarily forever, particularly young ones who may want to go back and go back into the practice of medicine. Those doctors will be with me tonight.

When I totaled up, I asked my colleagues, well, how long did you practice? Some of them are OB/GYN doctors, some of them are orthopedic surgeons. There is a gastroenterologist. There is a family practice, a couple of doctors do family practice, just all across the spectrum. In the aggregate, we probably have about 400 years of clinical experience. That says something about our age, Mr. Speaker.

But as an example, I spent 31 years, from the day I graduated from medical school, practicing medicine either as a family doctor in a small town or while I was in training during my internship and my residency and then 26 years of being a part of an OB/GYN group and delivering over 5,000 babies in my hometown, which became my adopted hometown. My hometown is Augusta, Georgia, but Marietta, Georgia, in Cobb County is where I now live and practiced for 26 years.

Mr. Speaker, we feel we have a lot to bring to the table. It's so disappointing we get to do these things at night—as I say, my colleagues will join me and I will yield to them when they arrive—because this is our only opportunity. It's a shame we are in the minority. God forbid that it happens to the other side one of these days, and they will understand the feeling, but when you have got that knowledge of a particular profession, you would think, wouldn't you, that the Speaker of the House, the leadership, the minority side, both Chambers, they would open their arms and say, for goodness sakes, come on in here. Come on here behind this green door where we are trying to work out how we are going to do this health reform bill and tell us a little bit how it was when you were seeing patients and practicing and what were the things that would upset people about insurance, health insurance companies and denial of coverage or not being able to get insurance because of preexisting conditions. Also, Doctor, what do you think is causing the 10 percent, 12 percent rate of inflation in the cost of health insurance premiums year after year after year? Why is that?

Could it be this? I have heard some people say that maybe it's a medical malpractice issue and doctors ordering a lot of defensive unnecessary tests because they are afraid that if they are dragged into a court of law someone would say, well, you know, we have got, plaintiff's attorney, I have got this expert witness here from California. They will say, well, looking at the chart, I see where, Doc, you didn't order a fizzle phosphate level on this patient or some other esoteric test that nobody has ever heard of and say, ah, you know, you are guilty of malpractice. Doctors order everything, almost to the point of the patient coming to the hospital, have blood drawn one day and becomes anemic the next morning for all the testing that's done.

Again, I bring up this point, Mr. Speaker, because we should be participating. We should be doing it on a bipartisan basis. If we would, if we had done it—and it's still not too late, my colleagues. It is still not too late. It's not soup yet. We have yet to vote on these bills that have come through committee on the House side or come through the committees on the Senate side. They haven't reached the floor of either Chamber. So there is plenty of time to amend, to start over. We don't need to rush it any more than we need to rush the decision to send the troops to Afghanistan.

The President, Mr. Speaker, made it very clear, as did his advisers and this administration, well, you know, you can't, you shouldn't knee-jerk now. I know what the General said. I know he said what his needs are, but we need to think about this. We need to get it right. It's better to get it right than to do it quickly.

Well, I sure wish they would take the same attitude toward reforming one-sixth of our economy, and I think that we could do that. There is no rush.

I will tell you where there is a rush though, Mr. Speaker. There is a rush in putting people back to work and stemming this tide of unemployment and all these jobs just disappearing and now 15 million people in this country out of work. That should be the President's number one priority.

But, anyway, we are going to talk about these issues tonight, and there are a lot of thoughts that my colleagues have, as I see them begin to join me. I am going to try to go in order of those that walked on the floor.

The first person that I am going to call on is our former majority whip, minority whip, someone who has been a part of the leadership with distinction on the Republican side of the aisle, and I am speaking of the gentleman from Missouri, ROY BLUNT.

I yield to Mr. BLUNT.

Mr. BLUNT. I thank my good friend from Georgia for yielding and appreciate the doctors letting me join them here for a few minutes.

Most of our doctors in the House, Republican doctors in the House have been on the Health Care Solutions Group that we worked hard on all year to have alternatives, alternatives to government-run health care, alternatives to create access to health insurance, health coverage for people, even people with preexisting conditions.

When I joined the doctors on the floor one day last week, there were 15 bills stacked up in notebooks behind, on the dais, Mr. Speaker, that talked about the 15 things that Republicans would like to do. We don't think they have to be in a 1,500-page bill. In fact, the things we have talked about, like access for everyone, allowing people to stay on their parents' plan until they were older, then they have to leave the plan today, medical liability reform, more competition in the system, associated health plans, all of those things could happen individually.

It would be great if all 11 bills that I personally cosponsored would pass and none of them conflict with the others. We think that's the way to move forward.

But our doctors are consistently our best leaders on this issue, because they know all the problems that come up in health care, all the challenges that come up in health care, the importance of the doctor-patient relationship and how important it is that you don't have someone come between the doctor and the patient.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that I and others have been criticized for saying that in the Canadian system, if you want to have a procedure done, you have to get permission from the government. Often that has been interpreted to mean that we are saying you couldn't possibly have that procedure done. What we are saying is not that. What we are saying is that somebody besides your doctor decides whether you get that procedure done or not.

A well-read Wall Street Journal article back in the spring talked about the 57-year-old Canadian that even wanted to pay for his own hip replacement procedure and wasn't allowed to do it. It doesn't mean that you couldn't get a hip replacement. It just means he couldn't get one. It just means some bureaucrat decided he couldn't get one.

We are going to be talking in the next few days, because of the apparent nature of the closed door, behind closed doors negotiation, we are going to be talking again about this government-run health care plan. The government option would be government-run health care as a competitor. My belief, sincerely, is that the government would not compete fairly. It would drive the other competitors eventually out of business. Now, this new wrinkle, Doctors, to the government-run option is, well, the States could opt out.

Now, I was never in the State legislature, but I worked in a capitol building that had lots of legislators in it. Many of my colleagues were in the legislature, and they know and I know, and the majority knows, that if the government-run option is cheaper—and it will be because they, like Medicare and Medicaid, don't have to pay the whole bill—if it's cheaper, no legislature is going to opt out and say people in this State are going to become the example of standing against government-run health care. We are not going to have in this State that cheaper competitor until the other competitors go away. That's just not going to happen. This idea that somehow this is any kind of a compromise doesn't stand any scrutiny.

And then the other big issue over the next few days will be this issue of why seniors and people who have been told their entire working career since 1965, and anybody who started work after 1965 has had Medicare, a Medicare deduction from their paycheck every single paycheck, now to be told we are going to cut Medicare benefits for half a trillion dollars to pay for this new government plan, if seniors figure this out in the next 10 days, this will not happen. If seniors understand how this bill would theoretically be paid, this would not happen.

Whether it's the elimination, as is proposed, of Medicare Advantage for a whole lot of seniors, one out of four, or whether it's finding $300 billion in cuts in Medicare to pay a majority of the costs, that $500 billion in Medicare Advantage and cuts in Medicare to pay a majority of the cost, now everybody who will walk on this floor is surely for finding any legitimate savings in Medicare, but, my friends, if we are going to find savings in Medicare, we should use them to save Medicare.

Everybody else that walks onto this floor knows that Medicare is supposedly in significant trouble beginning as early as 2017. Why do you take savings from a program already in big trouble and say we will use these savings to pay for some new program? It won't make sense to seniors or anybody who really, frankly, doesn't like the idea that they have paid into this program out of every single paycheck they have ever had, and the Congress and United States is not going to allow that program to be solvent in order to start down another road of more health care.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I appreciate the gentleman's comments.

I am sure the gentleman would agree with me that it's really disingenuous to take $500 billion out of the Medicare program over the next 10 years and then, at the same time, tell seniors that, oh, by the way, next year you are going to get to pay $110 a month for your Medicare part B—I think it's $98 a month, $98.50 now—and we are going to raise it to $110 a month at the same time that we are going to cut $500 billion out of the program.

Mr. BLUNT. That's exactly right, you know, one out of every four seniors on Medicare Advantage, that would go away under any proposal out there right now. The administration apparently told the providers of those Medicare Advantage plans that they couldn't tell people that there was legislation that would eliminate the plan.

Now, after a lot of appropriate outrage about that administration decision, that gag order to these plans, apparently now they are going to say, okay, you can tell them the truth. What a step forward that is. You can tell people in Medicare the truth about this. If people in Medicare find out the truth about that, and they figure out the truth about the other way to pay for this new government program and they start calling Members of the Congress of the United States, this will not go forward and we will be back to where my friend from Georgia said we should be, where we start over. We work together. We do the things that will fix what's broken in the system, but we also ensure that we keep what's working. More is working in health care than is broken.

If we are not careful about this, we will eliminate what's really working and will actually encourage the things that are broken. None of us here on the floor at this minute want to do that, and hopefully none of our colleagues will either, and we can all work together in new ways.

Again, I thank the doctors for the incredible credibility and knowledge base that they bring to this discussion. I know they are going to continue to be at the forefront of this debate between now and the end of the year, and, if possible, if it takes until next year. This is one-sixth of the economy. This is the most important thing to every family, people in your family being well. We ought to take the time that it needs to do this right.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I want to thank the gentleman from Missouri and thank the gentleman for his work in leading Leader BOEHNER's task force on health care reform on the Republican side.

My doctor colleagues that are with me tonight were a part of that small group of about 15. We worked on coming up with meaningful reform issues in an incremental way over the last several months. I think we had a good plan that we submitted to the President, Mr. Speaker, and we are still waiting to hear back from him on that, unfortunately.

Before I yield to my good friend from Louisiana, in fact, my two good friends from Louisiana—I am going to start with Dr. CASSIDY, the gastroenterologist from Baton Rouge—I just want to say one thing. I have got this one poster. Dr. MURPHY may have some other posters when he arrives, but we have a second opinion.

□ 1800

The GOP Doctors Caucus is the second opinion. The Republican minority, 178 of us, Mr. Speaker, we have a second opinion, and that second opinion is, no government-run health care.

We listened to our constituents during the August recess, and that is what they told us loud and clear. Somebody might dig up some ABC-Washington Post poll that says people want government-run health care. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, to all of the Members on both sides of the aisle, go back and check with your constituents, like I did last night during a tele-town hall meeting, when all of the seniors were on the phone and said, Goodness gracious, Congressman, we don't need that.

I will make this point, and then yield to Dr. CASSIDY. There has been so much gnashing of teeth and wringing of hands and pulling of hair over the last several months, Mr. Speaker, trying to say how are we going to pay for this thing? It is going to cost a minimum of $1 trillion. And then President Obama said, No, we are going to limit the expenditure to $900 billion, but we are going to pay for it all. I won't sign a bill that adds one dime to the deficit.

So, you figure out, well, we are going to tax here, we are going to tax there. We are going to take $500 billion out of Medicare, as the gentleman from Missouri just talked about, Medicare Advantage. We are going to gut that program. And, hey, we have come up with $900 billion and we are going to do this government-run health care. What in the world, Mr. Speaker, have we accomplished?

I want to use this analogy. It would be like a family 25 or 30 years ago scrimping and saving and cutting down on food and clothing and family vacation and college education for the children to save up enough money, and you finally save up enough money and you buy an Edsel.

My colleagues, I hope you all remember the Edsel. I am not knocking Ford Motor Company, but I think most of you are old enough to remember the Edsel. You saved up enough money, yes, you have sacrificed, and you bought an Edsel.

That is what it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, what the Speaker, Speaker PELOSI, and the leader, Leader REID and the President and his advisers, many of them holdovers from the Clinton administration, that is what they are wanting us to do. They want us to buy an Edsel. I don't care whether it is paid for or not, it is a bad deal.

With that, I yield to my friend from Louisiana, Dr. BILL CASSIDY.

Mr. CASSIDY. Thank you, Dr. GINGREY.

I think Congressman BLUNT made some great points. One of them is we want reform, but we want reform that works. Actually, I want to compliment President Obama, because of the three things we want in reform, one is to control costs so we can increase access to quality care. I think he has nailed it. My concern is the approach to achieving these will not work.

I am also concerned that the Democratic proposals before us attempt to achieve that through gimmickry. They are using gimmicks to try and convince the American people that they are achieving the appropriate goal that President Obama has laid out, that it will not add to our deficit.

I was struck today that on the Senate side they are saying that States can opt out of the public option. I am wondering, can you opt out of the taxes that will go into offsetting it? Can you opt out of the debt that the Congressional Budget Office says will accumulate? Can you opt out of losing the jobs that the increased taxes and the increased national debt will inevitably lead to? No. All you can opt out of is the benefit that is offered. You cannot opt out of the high cost that goes into providing this marginal benefit.

I am also struck that there is this tax that they are creating for the American people, and on some similar criticism, it is truly bipartisan. The bill before the Senate Finance Committee that Mr. REID says that we can opt out of is funded by about $350 billion in taxes. If I may quote Speaker PELOSI, she says that these savings, these taxes, if you will, come off the backs of the middle class.

So I think we have a bipartisan criticism of the bill that is before the Senate right now. I think we would agree on the Republican side with Speaker PELOSI that the "savings" in those bills, that $350 billion, comes off the backs of the middle class. Indeed according to the Joint Committee on Taxation, families earning less than $200,000 pay 87 percent of these taxes.

This is remarkable. During the presidential campaign it was stated that if you earn less than $250,000, your taxes will not go up. Yet, now, through these various accounting gimmicks, we are seeing indeed 87 percent of these new taxes will come off of those who earn less than $200,000.

There are other gimmicks in this as well. It is pushing the cost of an expansion of Medicaid. And for those watching who don't worry about—I used to work in a hospital for the uninsured. For 20 years I have spent my life trying to bring health care to the people who don't have insurance. Medicaid is the safety net insurance program that is partly funded by the Federal Government and partly by the State government.

Now, in this plan before both the House and the Senate, both plans, they are going to expand Medicaid. In the Senate plan, they are going to make the State taxpayers pay for this expansion. That is really great. It looks like we are saving money on the Federal level, but all we are doing is shoving that cost upon a taxpayer, it is just through the State income tax or property tax or sales tax, not through the Federal tax.

That is a gimmick. If you want to say it is the taxpayer paying for it, absolutely she is paying for it. And so this expansion, this increased cost is going to lead to increased taxes, but it will be through the State tax code, not the Federal. There is the sleight of hand that is being passed off as fiscal responsibility.

Now, on the other hand, we agree on the goals. We want to have quality health care, accessible to all at an affordable price. But we can see that this kind of bargain being offered by the Democratic proposals is really not controlling costs at all. It is merely shifting it onto State taxpayers or it is using taxes upon the middle class to fund.

I like to say they are using new tax dollars in the old wineskin of an old health care delivery system. Just as we know that new wine in old wineskins will not work, so we know that these new taxes, these savings off the back of the middle class, as Speaker PELOSI says, will not work in the old wineskin of an old delivery system.

Republicans, on the other hand, I think we truly want a transformation of how health care is delivered. The Republican proposal I have signed on to, and I think several of my colleagues have, H.R. 3400, is wonderful in the sense that it empowers patients to make cost-conscious decisions.

If I might yield to my friend from Shreveport, he has got this great anecdote of how Health Savings Accounts in his business worked not only to hold down costs, but how by empowering his employees, also improved our health, if I may yield.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Dr. CASSIDY, if you will yield back to me and I will yield to our good friend from Shreveport. That, of course, is our family practice doc who spent many years, and he will tell us about that, seeing lots of patients in south Louisiana, Dr. JOHN FLEMING.

I do yield to Dr. FLEMING at this time.

Mr. FLEMING. I thank the gentleman. And thank you, Dr. GINGREY, for having this hour. You have shown tremendous leadership over the last few months and even before that, of course, but particularly the last few months in being willing to control time for us to have these discussions. Of course, Dr. CASSIDY, my colleague from Louisiana, has been deeply involved in this issue, and we have all worked together, I think, as a great team, the GOP Doctors Caucus.

I will get to that anecdote in just a moment. I think it is an important one. But let me stay with the subject just for a moment about the gimmickry, because I think that is essential to our discussion. I will develop it very carefully, but quickly, and also point out that this is an important part of the macroeconomics of health care that everyone must understand, and that is this: Currently Medicare and Medicaid, which are the current government-run health care systems, do not pay for the service that they are providing.

Let me repeat that: These programs, Medicare and Medicaid, do not pay, at least completely, for all of the services that are provided, because the government requires and forces doctors, if you will, hospitals and other organizations, to provide care for less than the 100 percent reimbursement. Physicians, nurses, hospitals, home health agencies and so forth actually have to settle for less.

So, how is it that we can stay in business, we in the health care industry, and get by on less? The answer is that the private insurance market, a much bigger market, subsidizes to the tune of about $1,700 to $2,400 per year per family. If it were not for that subsidy, it would collapse. Yet and still, Medicare is scheduled to run out of money by 2017.

Now, how long is 2017? This is 2009. That is about 8 years that we are going to run completely out of money. Nobody in Washington is advancing any solutions to that.

All right, where did the gimmickry begin? Remember that in the time period from about 1997 to 2003, Congress decided in its infinite wisdom that Medicare will be subject to a limitation on the budgetary increases from year-to-year. We call that the sustained growth rate, SGR for a lot of people. But because it was recognized even in the first year that such cuts would block access to health care by patients, it has never been enforced. So it has been a bookkeeping gimmickry that now has created an incremental difference of about $250 billion, and growing. And even the other day the Senate attempted to resolve this.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. If the gentleman will yield for one second, Mr. Speaker, for clarification, that limitation based on that formula, Dr. FLEMING, applies to the doctors, doesn't it, all the health care providers? This is not applicable to the hospitals. They are reimbursed under a different system.

Mr. FLEMING. That is correct. It is just physicians only. It is actually part B, which is mainly physicians. It simply says if you guys can't keep your billing and your costs and everything down in totality, we will just cut across-the-board. Well, that is an impractical solution. It is gimmickry. It would never work. Now we have a $250 billion gap that is not being paid for. The Senate the other day tried to address that and failed to, because they knew it would be dumped on to the budget.

Let's advance, fast forward to this bill today. Right now this plan for approximately $500 billion that will be cut from Medicare, $160 billion or so of that would be a direct cut out of Medicare Advantage, which, as you know, is the more generous private system that is funded by Medicare dollars. If that happens, then those who are on Medicare Advantage, such as Humana Gold, will have to go back into the regular Medicare system and they will have to purchase Medigap insurance that they didn't have to purchase before. Again, seniors taking on the added burden.

On top of that is another $300 billion to $350 billion coming directly out of Medicare on the basis of some future savings, some future efficiencies that no one has been able to figure out.

So where are we today, Mr. Speaker? Basically $250 billion of doctor cuts, which have never been cut and will never be cut and are growing, that is going to end up in the budget at some point, another part of the deficit; another $350 billion which everybody in this room has known will never be paid for, but yet somehow it is being booked by the CBO as some savings. It is just continuous gimmickry. That is the only way this bill will ever be paid for, is gimmicks, which really means it is going to be taxpayers and premium holders.

Then to go back and kind of summarize, my point here is that, as Dr. CASSIDY points out, the only way that this is going to be an efficient health care system in terms of cost is the decision-making has to be in the exam room between the doctor and the patient, and one of the best methods to do that was a plan started in 2003 or so, Health Savings Accounts.

All this does is allow the employer—and government could do this, too, for Medicare and Medicaid—to put money in the bank that can be used at the discretion of the patient to buy medications or whatever, and it's his money or her money to use efficiently.

Just an example of how it works, we implemented this with my own private health plan with my companies a few years ago, and instead of our rates going up an average of 15 percent per year, they're going up an average of 3 percent per year. I was giving this discussion to my employees one day, and one of my employees piped up and said, Well, look, if we go to this health savings account idea, that's going to mean that I'm going to have to pay out of my health savings account $100, $150 a month for inhalers.

I said, Well, let me suggest to you this: Why don't you stop smoking? You will save money from the tobacco. You will be able to stop your inhalers, and then you'll just be banking all this extra money, which will end up removing any deductible you're going to have in the future. She came back to me 3 months later and said, I stopped smoking. I no longer have to use inhalers, and I've got extra money every week.

I wanted to pull together some of these salient points that have to go with the gimmickry and how we're going in the wrong direction. Expanding government control is going to expand cost. Instead, we should be looking inwardly and bringing it down to the doctor-patient level where the decisions can really be made efficiently.

With that, I will yield back.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Dr. FLEMING, thank you for those comments. Before I yield one more time to Dr. CASSIDY, just following through on this point that you are making, you may have mentioned one of the companies, Safeway and others who have testified up here—I don't know if they have been before the entire House or Senate, but certainly they have met with Members on our side of the aisle and explained some of the things that they're doing in regard to incentivize people to take care of themselves, to take better care of themselves, to realize there is a personal responsibility issue here. You pointed out in regard to smoking cessation, to not be using recreational drugs, to exercise on a regular basis. Certainly if you are overweight, particularly massively overweight, get on a good program. In fact, some of these companies, Dr. FLEMING, I think they have programs in-house where it's free, and these employees are incentivized by a reduction in their monthly premiums for health insurance, their copay, their deductible.

When we were marking up the bill, the health reform massive H.R. 3200, a 1,200-page bill in the Energy and Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives, we had an amendment on the Republican side of the aisle to actually expand this program that Safeway and others had initiated to allow even more incentives. You know, for the life of me, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand even to this day—and it's been 6 weeks ago July 30 that we passed the bill in the Energy and Commerce Committee—that amendment was voted down strictly on a party-line vote. Maybe one of these days they'll explain it to me. But to actually get healthier employees so there is less absenteeism, they have a longer work life, and to incentivize them with giving them monetary breaks in the cost of their health insurance, why in the world would we not want to do that?

Mr. FLEMING. Would the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. FLEMING. That is a great point you make. What I would like to say is that something we have all observed as physicians is that while we all recognize collectively that, yeah, we should lose weight, we should exercise, and we shouldn't smoke, we, as human beings, tend to not address those issues until something comes up, until it affects us immediately in day-to-day life. The beauty of systems such as Safeway's is that they implement a financial impact, both positive and negative, that encourages healthy behavior before you ever get to a point where you go, You know what, I'm going to have to have heart stents or bypass surgery. Now I am going to make changes. Why not make the changes 5 years in advance? Then you don't have to go through that. Look at all the money you save and the health that you have as a result of that.

I yield back.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for yielding back. His final point was, give them the incentive when it really matters, not wait until it's too late.

With that, I will yield back to the gentleman from Baton Rouge, Dr. CASSIDY.

Mr. CASSIDY. I am actually going to disagree with my colleague from Shreveport—and by the way, he is from north Louisiana, not south. The point being is that these gimmicks only pay for on paper. So the Congressional Budget Office, which makes an assessment, Does this achieve the goal of controlling cost? Because as President Obama points out, controlling cost is important. These gimmicks only control it on paper. Ultimately, this would be paid for not by gimmicks, but it will be paid for by taxpayers or by debt. Ultimately, that debt will come from taxpayers again. That's why I think Speaker PELOSI says of the savings—this is a public statement—The savings in the bills before the Senate side, the Democratic bills before the Senate, will come off the backs of the middle class, and these taxes will continue to be paid for by the middle class.

I have learned in my practice—because, again, I have worked in a public hospital. I have worked in a government-run hospital where the nurses, doctors, med techs, therapists do their absolute best to bring health care to those who otherwise would not have it, a true safety net hospital. But when there is no money, the lines lengthen. When there is no money, something has to give. Now as it turns out, either we're going to raise taxes, we're going to borrow money, or their lines are going to grow; and our reform goals of controlling cost and, thereby, increasing access to quality care will not be achieved.

On the other hand, let me just kind of amplify on your health savings account. The Kaiser Family Foundation has a study—I believe the Web site is kff.org—and they looked at a family of four with a health savings account and a wraparound catastrophic policy versus a family of four with a traditional insurance policy. They found that the cost of the patient-empowering health savings account with a wraparound catastrophic policy was 30 percent cheaper than the traditional insurance policy, that 27 percent of folks who had the health savings account with the wraparound catastrophic policy were previously uninsured, and that these folks who now have insurance access preventive services as frequently as a family with a traditional policy. We achieve the goals. By empowering patients, we, the folks buying those policies, lower their cost. By lowering their cost, folks who were previously uninsured now have access to insurance and, once having access to the insurance, are accessing the primary and preventive services as frequently as those who are paying 30 percent more for their insurance. The goals of insurance have got to be that.

Now, again, I'll go back to the analogy I used earlier. We can either put the new financing, the new tax dollars in the old wineskin of a top-down, government-controlled, bureaucratic health care delivery system or we can use new wineskins, and I think the new wineskins that the Republican Party wants to use are patient-empowering. How do we empower patients to make a decision that's good not only for their health but also for their pocketbook? And by so doing, you lower cost. People previously uninsured can now afford it, and once they have their insurance, they're able to access those primary and preventive services. As practicing physicians, as a guy that's been working in a safety net hospital for some time, that seems the wineskin for us.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I appreciate the gentleman for being with us. Mr. Speaker, I can't quote the chapter and verse, but obviously the gentleman's been reading the Good Book. It's somewhere in the Old Testament. I know about those wineskins as well, and I really appreciate his analogy and his great insight on health care reform.

We've been joined by another member of the GOP Doctors Caucus, and I will yield to him momentarily. But Mr.

Speaker, as we heard from our colleagues from Louisiana—north Louisiana. I'll get that straight one of these days. Shreveport is not New Orleans. But they brought out some excellent points. There was some commentary about health savings accounts. I think most of our colleagues surely understand that program now, and maybe many of them—I bet many of them—I know that was the insurance plan that a lot of the doctors in Congress had when they were in practice, and Dr. BURGESS may want to talk about that in just a minute when I yield to him. But a high deductible—in other words, you don't get first-dollar coverage on your health insurance. You have more out-of-pocket expense, but your monthly premium is much lower than your standard first-dollar coverage-type policy. I mean, it might be less expensive by a factor of four, and you can fund it by putting in money. Your employer can do that. You can do it yourself. Family members can do it and get a tax break from doing that. But up to the limit of your deductible, every year you can fund these plans, and for the out-of-pocket expenses, whether it's an annual physical or Lord knows if somebody breaks their ankle playing soccer or something, you know, you pay for that out of this health savings account. If at the end of the year you haven't spent all that money, and you don't have to get into the catastrophic coverage, then that rolls over to the next year. And if you take good care of yourself and you exercise personal responsibility, which does include exercise, maybe at the end of 20 years, a young person has an account that has enjoyed the miracle of compounding, and they may have accumulated $125,000 in an account by the time they are 65 and they're eligible for Medicare.

Mr. Speaker, these are great programs, and I, personally, would like to see them expanded. In fact, I would suggest that we could make some changes in the law in regard to COBRA, where if a person loses their job through no fault of their own, that they are able to continue to stay on the company group health plan, except they have to pay all of the premium, plus 2 percent administrative costs. They can do that for 18 months while they're trying to get another job and get other coverage. Well, most people when they're out of a job, they can't afford that. They can't afford to pay those premiums. So why not let them, during that 18-month period, switch over to one of these health savings accounts that has a high deductible and a low monthly premium? This is an incremental thing that could be done and that Members on our side of the aisle have suggested. Just as we have a number of other incremental things, like equalizing the tax treatment, setting up State-administered high-risk pools, absolutely giving government subsidies to those who are low income but not low enough to be eligible for Medicaid or some other safety net program, let people buy insurance across State lines.

I live in Georgia. Why can't I shop on the Internet for a policy that's offered in Florida, South Carolina or Alabama, my neighboring States, that fits my needs better and is more cost effective, less expensive, something that I can afford? We have done all of these things, made these suggestions. And yes, also on the Republican side, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of comprehensive bills. Some of my colleagues on the floor tonight have written and introduced comprehensive health care reform that would be cheaper than what the Democrats want to do with H.R. 3200, with the majority in the Senate, with what they want to do, the bill that Senator REID, the majority leader, is about to put on the Senate floor. But I would say that probably my colleagues on this side of the aisle would tell you in all honesty, yeah, we have better bills and they're less expensive, but you know what, we don't even recommend that we pass those right now when the unemployment rate is over 10 percent and the economy is in the tank, people are suffering, and 15 million have lost their jobs. We might want to do it next year or the year after that. Eventually we'll do it—probably better in an incremental way—but it is not the number one priority of the Republican Party to totally reform our health care system, throw out the baby with the bath water, spend $1.5 trillion and have the economy get worse and more and more people lose their job. This is not the number one priority.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I want to yield to my OB/GYN colleague and classmate, someone who I am proud to serve with on the Energy and Commerce Committee, MICHAEL BURGESS, an OB/GYN doctor from the Dallas-Fort Worth area, a great Member.

Mr. BURGESS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I actually didn't intend to come over here talking about HSAs. But having initiated the discussion, I do want to just mention that the HSA is a way to save significantly on the premium. I currently have an HSA. It costs me about half of what a PPO insurance cost last year. Most importantly, in addition to an insurance card, I also have a debit card, and that debit card is something I can use to pay for expenses that occur throughout the year, and as Dr. GINGREY pointed out, the money in that account does roll over at the end of the year. It does not go away if it is not used at the end of the year.

□ 1830

You know, earlier today, we had many people come down to the floor of the House and speak on the issue of health care reform. One of the criticisms that was leveled at Republicans was that we were doing nothing but obstructing the process and that we had no ideas of our own. I did feel obligated to just touch on that point for a moment.

Let's be honest. We do not have the numbers. We do not have the organization. There is no way that the Republicans in this body can obstruct anything that the Democrats wish to do. They have a 40-seat majority in the House. They have all kinds of ways of getting to 218, and really, because they are the majority party, it is up to them to do it. True, they don't have much Republican support, but tell me: If you have an excess of 40 votes and if you can't pass your own bill, it tells you that something may be wrong with the bill, that it's not something wrong with Republicans. Something is wrong with the bill the Democrats have crafted.

More to the point, what makes a bill bipartisan? Is it because you can pick off a couple of Republicans at the final vote and can record a couple of Republican "yeas" in the final tally as the vote is passed? No. What makes a bill bipartisan is inviting the minority party in at the beginning and encouraging them to have their ideas as well as the ideas from the majority. That's exactly what didn't happen through this discussion.

In November, I reached out to the transition team. I told them I didn't leave a 25-year medical practice to sit on the sidelines while we discussed health care. I was thanked very much for my interest. Never heard back. I reached out to the chairman of my committee, the Committee on Energy and Commerce. Again, I reiterated that I did not give up a career to sit on the sidelines. Again, no response from the committee.

There was ample opportunity early in the year, as these bills were being crafted, to bring members of the minority party in and to get their ideas on paper, on record. Maybe there was room for some horse trading. Who knows? The problem is we never tried.

Then 5 weeks ago on the floor of this House, when the President came and spoke to us—and this is the same President who said he would meet with Hugo Chavez and with Ahmadinejad without preconditions but who won't meet with congressional Republicans without preconditions. This is the same individual who, as a candidate in 2004, said there are not just blue States and red States. There is the United States. This individual was elevated in the eyes of the Nation as someone who could rise beyond partisanship. Yet we see a city today that is absolutely immobile because of partisanship.

The fact of the matter is they've got the votes. They've got the votes on their side in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. They have a 60-vote majority in the Senate. There is nothing they can't pass if they want to. Please do not attribute the lack of passage of this bill to Republican obstruction. Again, I'd like to take credit for it, but the fact is we don't have the numbers.

The American people deserve a great deal of credit because, during the month of August, they spoke up and gave many Members pause, and caused them to reflect on where we were going with this bill. Unfortunately, today, it's almost as if August did not happen, because we're going full speed ahead with the direction they intended to go in the first place. Never mind what we heard or saw during the month of August.

I know the time is tight. I'll yield back to the gentleman the balance of my time.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding back, and I thank him for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to yield the remaining time that we have. I wish we had more. When you're having fun, it goes fast. We've been joined by my co-chairman of the GOP Doctors Caucus, clinical psychologist Dr. TIM MURPHY from Pennsylvania. He is my classmate and is president of our class. He is going to take the rest of the time. Dr. MURPHY served with me—or I should say I served with him on the Energy and Commerce Committee, and I'm proud to yield time and the concluding remarks to Dr. TIM MURPHY.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. Thank you, Doctor. I appreciate that.

You know, the big question becomes: Are we going to reduce the cost of health care or are we going to increase it?

During the President's inaugural address, he said our health care is too costly. I could not agree more, and that has been our passion to reduce health care costs, and I still want to work with the President and with my friends on the other side of the aisle to make that work, but there are a couple of questions here.

If you're on Medicare, if you're sick or if you have health insurance under the plans being proposed, you may pay more. Let's review that really quickly.

First of all, with $500 billion cut from Medicare, there will be less to hospitals, less to skilled nursing facilities, $5 billion cut from inpatient rehab facilities, $56 billion cut from home health care, and fewer payments to doctors for drug programs, for part D and for Medicare Advantage, which has a lot of preventative services.

Those are a lot of cuts. When you're taking away preventative services and when you're taking away money from the programs that we know save money, such as disease management—and that's important—they're going to end up with higher costs.

The second thing is, in taxing the sick, the proposal that's being kicked around the Senate now is increased taxes on all of these medical devices: heart monitors, heart valve rotators, pacemakers, artificial hearts—I hope you don't have a heart attack, because it will cost you more—defibrillators, hearing aids, hospital beds, nebulizers, artificial hips. There are a number of things. There are wheelchairs and ventilators. All will be taxed, including the insurance plans because it comes down to this:

With the insurance taxes, you get taxed if you do have it and taxed if you don't. If the employers offer insurance, they may tax employers if they do offer it and tax them if they won't.

Finally, there are issues with States. If States have an opt-out provision where they do not have to have as a provision in their State where they will have this health insurance plan run by the Federal Government, they may still pay the taxes, and that becomes taxation without hospitalization.

Look, there's a lot we can do to fix this system. There's a lot we can do to reform Medicare. There are so many problems with the Medicare system, not just the fraud and abuse. I believe Congress will work on that, but it's just how things are run there, and we need a more effective and efficient system to make changes in how we operate with Medicare.

Why does it take months to get a power wheelchair for someone? Why do you need such expensive procedures to get a crutch? Why do we have so many things that cost so much money? It's because they're done ineffectively and inefficiently.

Let's change that. Let's make Medicare and Medicaid work better for people. If we're going to do anything so that the Federal Government can run it better, shouldn't we start off by making the government run it better? Let's cut the waste. Let's improve the quality. Let people cross State lines, as so many of my colleagues have said. In a survey in my district, 70 percent of people said that they wanted that.

Let people join groups and have the purchasing power of the group. Let's make insurance permanent because millions of Americans are begging Congress to work together with both sides of the aisle to fix the problems. That's what we should be doing. Millions of Americans can't all be wrong. Let's not dismiss Americans as being frivolous with all of that.

With that, Dr. GINGREY, I yield back to you for the remainder of our time here. Let's continue to work together as a Congress and as a Nation to fix this problem, not just to finance the problems.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Dr. MURPHY, thank you so much.

I failed to mention to my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, that Dr. MURPHY is also an author, and has written a number of books on child psychology, and he knows of what he speaks.

I think the theme tonight, Mr. Speaker, is to try to present Members who are knowledgeable on the subject matter. If we were talking about the law, if we were talking about national defense, there would be the people like JOE SESTAK and Colonel JOHN KLINE on our side of the aisle. You'd listen to those folks. I hope that our colleagues will understand that we're trying to do this in a bipartisan way to help impart knowledge. Knowledge is power, and we hope and pray every day that God will give us all wisdom and that we'll make the right decisions and that we'll reform our health care in a way that doesn't destroy what really is the best health care system in the world.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the time. I yield back.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. QUIGLEY). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KAGEN) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. KAGEN. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I feel very flattered that you have provided me with sufficient time to explain some of the problems and solutions that we're looking at in helping to solve our crisis in health care across America.

By way of background, my name is STEVE KAGEN. For the first time in my life, I ran for public office in 2006, and I was elected and reelected in 2008. I grew up in Appleton, Wisconsin; went to public schools; went to the University of Wisconsin; studied molecular biology; went to medical school. I went back home to Appleton with my wife, Gayle, to raise a family in 1981, practicing allergy, asthma and immunology.

Over the years, what has been happening to my patients is they've been having more and more difficulty paying for their prescription drugs. What has been happening to my friends I went to high school with is they've had more and more difficulty running their businesses and having access to affordable health care.

The health care costs in this country have simply gone through the roof. It's becoming more and more impossible for people to pay for, not only their medically necessary and life-saving prescription drugs, but also their health care coverage that they so dearly need. It's not just difficult for families. It's difficult for small businesses. It's difficult for large businesses.

Recently, I received an e-mail from a large employer in Green Bay, Wisconsin—home of the world champion a long time ago, the Green Bay Packers. This very large employer-CEO said: KAGEN, keep the public option on the table. I just got my quote from Blue Cross, and they're jacking it up by 29 percent in 2010.

People have to understand that, if we don't address this crisis and begin to solve it immediately in 2010, they'll either have a job with no health care coverage or no job at all, and good luck with the coverage you can get.

Now I'd like to share with you some of the personal stories and comments from people in Northeast Wisconsin, and I trust that they're very much the same as they might be all across this great land.

Ned writes from Dunbar, Wisconsin: The part D doughnut hole needs to be eliminated.

Well, Ned, you're right, and we're working very hard on the Democratic side, and I'm sure the Republicans will go along with the idea of closing the doughnut hole in Medicare part D. Medicare part D, after all, was a prescription drug plan which was written by and for the insurance industry, which was nothing more than a windfall profit of billions and billions of dollars for Big Pharma. It wasn't intended to help my patients. It wasn't intended to help the senior citizens who live in Northeast Wisconsin. It was written by and for Big Pharma, and they're the ones that had the windfall profit. Ned needs help now because he needs to be able to go to the pharmacy and pay for his prescription drugs without having to go to the bank before doing so.

Jack from Kaukauna writes: I need help. Prescription drugs are most important to very many seniors on limited incomes.

In these economic times, those people who are most at risk are people who are living on fixed incomes, not only because they may not receive a cost-of-living adjustment but also because they have fixed incomes. They're not getting the interest payments they were before on their investments.

So it is for Ned, for Jack and for everybody who is living on fixed incomes that we must write a bill here in the House that will guarantee access to affordable prescription drugs, and we have to do it soon.

Eleanor from Green Bay, Wisconsin writes: Drug prices rise since part D. One of my husband's drugs in December 2005 was $144; in January of 2007, $189. A $45 rise in 14 months is too much.

They need help now with prescription drugs, and we intend to provide it in the legislation that we're writing.

Deb from Florence, Wisconsin writes: I have no health insurance. We cannot afford it.

Well, we've got to make sure that the prices are driven down. Ordinary people, both seniors and hardworking families, students alike—everybody understands there is a crisis in affordable health care.

Here is a note from Carl from Greenleaf, Wisconsin: I have a pacemaker, and feel better than I had a year ago. I don't know why I had to pay $1,725 every 3 months for insurance with a $3,500 deductible.

You know, one of the games that's being played by the health insurance corporations, which are pretty much Wall Street-run, is to increase the premium and also to increase the deductible. What ends up happening is the patients are paying for their own health care with their deductibles, and then they're paying for the health insurance corporations' profits as well.

Sheila from Weyauwega, Wisconsin: Family businesses need affordable insurance for health care.

I think she's right.

It goes on. Pat from Green Bay: Health care issues are critical. We need to develop a plan to help the elderly and the uninsurable.

You know, one of the ideas on the Senate side is to create a high-risk pool, in other words, to allow for some discrimination where the insurance companies would be cherry-picking you out if you were an expensive date, if you had health care issues and cost a lot to care for.

In my view, I think that's an act of discrimination, and one of the greatest ideas in the Democrat bill, which is moving through the House, is the idea that we're going to bring an end to discrimination in health care. No longer will a health insurance corporation be allowed to cherry-pick you or your children or your family out of the risk pool. No longer will they be allowed to say "no" to you because of a preexisting condition or because of the way you were born.

□ 1845

And to families like the Wendel family here next to me, they need access to that affordable health care now. And like many, many families across the country who have preexisting conditions—heck, these days who doesn't—we have to bring an end to discrimination. President Obama agrees, the Senate agrees, and so does the House. But to create a toxic risk pool, so to speak, of these patients with preexisting conditions I feel is a wrong direction, and I hope that the Senate turns this around. We cannot allow for any discrimination against any citizen due to preexisting conditions.

Well, one of the problems in practicing medicine today is that Medicare may not cover all of the overhead costs of caring for patients even when you provide high-quality care. And I'm going to use my great State of Wisconsin as an example. A State where we have covered nearly 97 percent to 98 percent of every citizen within the State by one form of coverage or another.

According to studies in quality care, Wisconsin ranks number 2 in the Nation, the 1st being the State of Minnesota, our neighbor. But when it comes to where we rank with the rates paid to health plans to provide coverage, the Medicare Advantage monthly payment rates in Wisconsin are number 44 in the country. In other words, we are paying on average $765. States like Florida, Louisiana, New York, and Texas are some of the highest in the country, where in Florida the Medicare Advantage programs are taking $1,013 as an average monthly payment.

The Medicare Advantage plans that we have available in northeast Wisconsin are wonderful. They're affordable. They're great. They should be measured in terms of the quality of their service, and if they don't measure up, they should be eliminated. We have to seek out and root out and eliminate all wasteful practices in spending in health care, beginning with our hospitals and also within the Medicare system.

I heard my colleagues on the other side of the aisle make the case that there was some cutting coming up in Medicare. Well, I'd say what we're trying to do is make your tax dollars go further. We want to be able to invest our tax dollars and get the highest quality care available anywhere at the lowest possible price.

This is something that northeast Wisconsin knows a great deal about. We have a health care facility called ThedaCare, and the ThedaCare Center for Healthcare Value has been able to drive down the cost of caring for patients at a hospital by 25 percent. By lowering the cost, at the same time they have also improved the quality. Higher quality care at a lower price. This is something that should be replicated across the country, and if it were, we would be able to save in every year $40 billion of savings. Now, this is not a cut to Medicare; this is about making your tax dollars stretch and go further. Higher quality care at a lower price. This is exactly what you would want.

Now, what happens when you talk about the total Medicare patient spending at hospitals and clinics? When you look at that, New York, per patient, is spending about $9,564; Wisconsin, $6,978. Wow, about a 30 percent increase.

I was very proud to work with other Members in the Midwest from the State of Nebraska over to Ohio to bring about an agreement with the leadership of the House that we have to address a Medicare payment discrepancy, a disparity, an unfairness. Something you may not know, but if you retire from the State of Wisconsin, Minnesota, or anywhere in the upper Midwest, including the State of Washington in the Northwest, your Social Security check will follow you wherever you go and it will be the same amount in the State of Washington or the State of Wisconsin when you retire, let's say, for example, to Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, or even into Florida. But the same cannot be said about Medicare. Your Medicare tax dollars that you've been paying in for your entire working life may not follow you when you move out of the upper Midwest or the Northwest.

So we have reached an agreement with the Speaker of the House to begin to address this payment disparity with Medicare, and at the same time we took up the conversation about how are we going to pay for medical services with your hard-earned tax dollars. Well, with Medicare and Medicaid, what we are seeking to do is to make certain that we reward physicians and hospitals for higher quality care and the value of that care that they're offering and delivering, and we intend to measure it. We intend to change the payment mechanism away from the volume of tests and care that you're receiving and more towards rewarding value. Not volume but, yes, to the value. And I think physicians and hospitals across the country will welcome this idea of moving up.

Well, there's another topic that is very important. When I, as cochairman of the Congressional Business Owners Caucus, had a listening session with employers and the representatives here who came to Washington who represent them, groups such as the Small Business Majority and the Franchise Owners of America and others, they had some very simple requests. They asked us for immediate results where we would lower the cost of care. Lower costs have to be gotten immediately or as soon as possible. Why? Because the businesses can't survive with their current overhead. The single greatest component of their overhead is the cost for health care, and they want very much to see Congress help them to drive it down. And one way to do that is to provide transparency in health care pricing.

Imagine this: You go to the grocery store. You put the food you're looking to buy for yourself and your family in the cart. You go to the checkout counter. They put it in the bag, and you take it home. You've never seen the price and they never billed you at the cash register. You simply take what you feel you need, go home, eat it, feed it to your family, and then later, a month or so later, they send you the bill. That would be unimaginable in this country. But that's what's happening in this health care, because you really don't know the price when you go to the hospital, to the doctor.

You don't know the price, and the price really is whatever they can get.

And I will get one picture here to take a look at. I will hold it in front of the Wendel family. This is a little picture I took at a grocery store. It's got Bayer Aspirin, generic aspirin, and then there's a flavored aspirin as well. And for 20 percent less, you can buy the generic aspirin. The price is openly disclosed, and if I take this off the counter and so do you, when we get to the cash register, we get to pay the same openly disclosed price.

I think it's time, and I think you might agree, that we need to have open and transparent pricing throughout the health care industry. That way you will know the price of a pill before you swallow it. And I'm sure you would agree with that. We don't have that yet, but we're working hard to get it.

Now, immediate results in 2010, it's a difficult challenge. And joining me here on the floor is Mr. MURPHY.

Thank you, Mr. MURPHY. I yield to you in this fine hour to help reassure people across America that we have been studying this problem for a number of decades and we are beginning to take action on their behalf.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman for convening us here on the House floor.

I think that transition is important. There are a lot of people back in our districts and people on the Republican side of the aisle who say, You're moving too fast. Slow it down. Why does this have to happen this year? Why don't we wait until next year or why don't we wait until the year after that or maybe 5 years from now or maybe do a little piece now and see how that works and 10 years from now come back and check it out and make a little different adjustment?

Your point is exactly right. We've been debating this for 50 years. We have been on a journey to try to make good on our promise as the most affluent and most powerful Nation in the world to the millions of Americans who, through no fault of their own, wake up every day and go to bed every night sick just because they can't afford a doctor, not because they aren't trying to do the right thing and get insurance and health coverage for themselves and their families. We have been talking about this for a very long time. We have been doing a lot of talking. I think you can go back to probably every campaign that's been waged for the last 50, 60 years since this concept was first introduced by Harry Truman. And we are now to a point where we can actually do something about it.

Now, this specific proposal that we are debating right now has been debated here in Congress and throughout this country for coming on 12 months now. As many of us hope, we'll get a bill to the President's desk by the end of the year. We will have started this process in January or February of this year with legislative hearings, debated it out in public, debated it in five different committees in the United States House of Representatives and Senate, in countless, thousands of town hall meetings throughout this country, and we're going to end up with what I think is going to be a pretty sound product. And it's because we took time. It's because we didn't rush it through in the first 100 days of the Obama administration, because this House decided to step back from an original self-imposed deadline of passing it by the August break, because we have stepped back and taken the time to get this right. But our constituents can't wait any longer.

I'm always afraid of legislating by anecdote, Mr. KAGEN. I mean, we should be legislating here based on facts and data and statistics. But when it comes to whether or not we should pass reform, both the data and the anecdotes are on our side. So we're happy to talk about the real facts that underlie the necessity for change. The fact that this chart plainly illustrates. The fact that health care costs are bankrupting this Nation, comprising 5.2 percent of our economy in 1960 to 2009 when health care costs comprised almost 18 percent of our economy. It's predicted to go up over the next 8 years to 20 percent; $1 in every $5 in this country soon to be spent on health care costs, a cost internalized by every business and manufacturer that's trying to compete and sell products throughout the globe. The facts are on our side when we talk about our need to control health care costs so that it doesn't cripple this economy.

When it comes to families in this country who have seen, just over the last 10 years, a 119 percent increase in the premiums that they pay for health care, and the worker contribution that workers specifically make has gone up 117 percent during that same time, a 10-year 119 percent increase in health care costs. The facts are on our side, but so are the anecdotes.

This morning, I came down to the House floor, as maybe Mr. KAGEN did, because we saw a lineup of dozens of our Republican colleagues to give 1-minute speeches on the House floor. We have the ability on mornings like this to give unlimited amounts of 1-minute speeches on the House floor. And our Republican friends were here to deliver a message: Stop health care reform. Don't let it happen. Don't pass it. We want to preserve, essentially, the status quo.

I know some of our friends get up and talk about cross-State purchasing and tort reform, which are laudable goals, but they don't solve the problem. They are working largely around the margins of the root causes of the crisis within our health care system. The message was pretty loud and clear:

Stop this health care bill from happening. And the hope, I think, for some people on the Republican side is that by doing that, they can provide a world of hurt to the Democratic President of the United States.

So I came down and interrupted that long train of Republican Members saying to stop health care reform by telling a story that I'll share with you, Mr. KAGEN, again tonight.

At one of the roundtable discussions that I held back in my district, a gentleman who lives in New Britain, Connecticut, came and told a very simple story. He had gotten a job at the Carnival Ice Cream factory in my district, one of the, frankly, success stories of New Britain, Connecticut, a new company which has located several hundred jobs in an old abandoned factory footprint. And he got sick, unfortunately. He was a good worker but he got sick. He got really sick. He got cancer, gallbladder cancer, and that gallbladder cancer caused him to miss enough days of work that he got laid off. He got fired.

He's now collecting insurance, unemployment benefits, and he is devoting almost every dime of those checks to pay for health care costs. He has lost his job because of his cancer. He is now having trouble paying for food because of his cancer. He can't wait any longer. And for all of this talk that I hear from conservative talk show hosts and Republican Members of Congress about preserving freedom and defending liberty, what kind of freedom does that guy have? What kind of liberty does he have every day when he wakes up having contracted a potentially life-threatening disease that has taken away from him the ability to make a living and now sucks every dime of out of his pocket to pay for that treatment? What kind of freedom is that?

If we really want to talk about preserving freedom and liberty in this country, then let's talk about the ability to wake up every day and know that you are going to be able to get care for yourself and your family when you get sick. That's freedom.

And so I reject the notion that this has gone too fast and that we haven't taken our time. And I reject the notion that people out there, like the family you talked about and the gentleman I talked about in my district, can wait any longer for this Congress to wake up and realize that this current system does not work for all of the businesses that are being run into bankruptcy due to the incredible expansion of health care costs, due to the families and small businesses that have had 120 percent escalation in their costs, and the millions of Americans who have gotten sick and lost their jobs because they can't afford health care, Mr. KAGEN.

Mr. KAGEN. Thank you for your comments. Everybody who has a human heart has feelings about people who are in need.

I went into health care, into medicine, became a physician because I wanted to help people out. But what good is it to be a doctor if you write a prescription that people can't afford to pay for? What good is it to be a doctor if people can't afford to come in and get the tests that they require?

We have the right ideas. We have heard a lot from many people who reject change. No, no, no. No, you can't do this, you can't do that. They are trying to create a great deal of fear. It is easy to scare and frighten people when you hand them the wrong information and threaten their livelihood and lives. That is what this is. If people don't have access to the care they need, their lives and their livelihood are at risk.

In northeast Wisconsin, the greatest cause of bankruptcy is health care costs, people who can't make their payments. We have the right idea of fixing things as quickly as we can. We intend to close the doughnut hole beginning in the first year by closing it by 50 percent. That is a step in a positive direction. We intend to do things for people rather than the Wall Street-run corporations who today are controlling our health care industry.

I can tell you as a doctor, in the room with me was the patient and their family, and that invisible person in the room was also the health insurance corporation who would be telling my patients where to get their tests, what tests they could have, and how much they are going to be paying for it. I think it is time to move the insurance industry out of our examination rooms. And the focus of the Democrats here in the House is to make certain that that happens, to guarantee that you have control of your health care decisions. It is between the patient and the doctor and the patient's family.

In the health care legislation that we are putting together, the winners, first of all, will be Medicare patients, because with our legislation, with the efforts we are about to make, there will be no deductibles and no out-of-pocket expenses for prevention services.

The other winners, the biggest winners in this legislation in my view as a business owner, is small businesses, because small businesses can't afford to continue to pay 30 percent more per year. They will have it as a big win because we are going to pool small businesses together in large risk pools, large buying groups, to leverage down the prices for them. Just like the big businesses get discounts, today the numbers are almost unbelievable. If you are in small business, you are paying anywhere from 18 percent more than a large business, or 60 percent more, even though you live and work and recreate in the same location.

Another big winner is people who have coverage now. You will be able to keep it and hopefully at a lower cost. We want these insurance companies to compete against one another. Today they are exempt from the antitrust laws. That allows them to talk about where they are going to sell and compete and where they are not, or to conspire about prices. We want to eliminate that. Whether or not that gets into the bill is yet to be determined.

If you don't have coverage now, coverage will be available to you through some credits. We are going to help those, a helping hand up. It is not a handout; it is a helping hand up.

In my State of Wisconsin, with the fix to the geographical disparities, where a doctor or hospital might get paid $40 for a service and the same service would be compensated by Medicare in Florida about $200, we are going to address that. So Wisconsin hospitals and Wisconsin physicians, you are going to get an increase in compensation for your services through Medicare very shortly.

Overall the big winner will be our economy because when we drive down the cost of health care and improve the quality, you will have an opportunity as a small business owner to hire more people, to invest not in the Wall Street-run health insurance corporation, but to invest in your business and acquire the equipment you need to expand and hire more people so we can begin to work our way through this recession.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. In Connecticut, we have an organization of thousands of small businesses who have joined together to make the push that you are talking about, Mr. KAGEN. They have figured out that the status quo doesn't work for them. It is actually run by one gentleman in particular who runs a small company who doesn't provide benefits for his employees because he surveyed the landscape of insurance options he could purchase, and he realized that there was no way he could afford it. For the margins he was making on his maintenance business and for the small number of employees that he had, that offered him no bargaining leverage with the insurance companies. He couldn't buy insurance for his employees and he desperately wanted to.

This is a guy who has some tragic personal and family stories with respect to health care concerns, so he knows more than anybody how important it is to have health care insurance and how health care costs can bankrupt you. When he found out that he couldn't afford it and keep the business up and running, he wanted the employees to have a wage to bring home, rather than fire half of them in order to give the remaining half health care, so he started an organization of small businessmen who have bound together in Connecticut. I don't know the latest numbers, but it is in the thousands, and they are pushing for health care reform, both at the State and Federal level.

And just to underscore what you have said again, it is a simple concept that when you have five employees and you are negotiating with the insurance company, and an insurance company in many States that has almost no competitors, they can take or leave you. If you don't want to pay their price, there is no reason to give you a lower price because you are only five employees. Even worse, if you are an individual negotiating only on behalf of yourself, you have absolutely no leverage. If you can't pay that insurer's price, they will be happy to move on to the next person who can pay their price.

In the 50 percent of the States in this country that have one insurer that controls more than half the market, the balance is even further thrown off. So what we are doing is simple economics. We are saying, instead of Joe and Mary and Sally, and Joe's garage and Mary's factory all negotiating on their own, let's put Joe and Mary and Sally all together into one pool. And let's put all of the rest who are negotiating on their own or negotiating as small businesses together, and then let's make the insurance companies bid to be able to provide insurance to those Joes and Marys and Sallys, and we will let the 10 insurers who give us the best price in, and the others out. All of a sudden they have leverage for the first time ever, and they do it within a marketplace. It is a marketplace that is structured.

Mr. KAGEN. Do you mean capitalism?

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. It is capitalism. It is not unbrokered, unfettered capitalism but it is capitalism nonetheless where private health care companies offer the lowest price that they can, and they get business if they offer that lowest price. That doesn't happen today in this marketplace.

We are simply changing the rules of the marketplace to give a little better deal to those small businesses and individuals who right now are getting screwed in the marketplace.

Now, frankly, I think this isn't a Democratic idea, it is not a liberal idea or a conservative idea or a Republican idea. But for some reason when the Republicans ran this place for 12 years, they didn't come up with it. For some reason, even though they profess to be for the end of the preexisting condition exclusion, they had 12 years and they didn't come up with that idea. Although they profess to be for changing the way that we pay for medicine, as you talked about tonight, so we stop reimbursing just volume for volume sake and start reimbursing for quality health care systems, they had 12 years to implement that, and they didn't do it.

So again, I draw issue with a lot of my Republican friends who say we have gone too fast. And I draw issue with my Republican friends who say don't do anything, and I draw issue with some of my Republican friends who have found recent religion on this subject, because they have had a long time to implement some of these reforms, and it has unfortunately taken a change in the leadership of this House and the Senate to get it done.

Mr. KAGEN. I think what you are trying to say, it is hard to negotiate when you have a gun held at your head. How do you negotiate as a single purchaser against a large corporation? You can't negotiate; it is a take it or leave it.

We did something in Wisconsin where we created a prescription-drug program for senior citizens in low-income situations. I think it is the best prescription-drug plan in America. We have got about 103,000 senior citizens in a buying group, and that buying group leveraged down their prescription drugs tremendously. It is life saving. It saves taxes because when you are healthy you don't end up in the emergency room where it is expensive on the government who cares for these elderly seniors and low income.

So senior care saves lives and tax dollars, and it is exactly the same kind of concept that we did with the SCHIP, the State health insurance plan for low-income children. But let's not mix the metaphors, senior care and SCHIP are not government-run health care. It is private doctors, private hospitals, private drug companies who provide the care and get paid through a government system. It is very fair. It is a level playing field.

So senior care is a wonderful model, a prescription-drug program that really works for senior citizens who are in lower-income situations.

Now I think a buying group is a good idea. Who do you think would stand against having large risk pools and lowering the cost of insurance coverage? My guess is going to be the Wall Street insurance corporations, for one. I think they would be against that, don't you?

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. And I would add to that list, Mr. KAGEN, some of the other industries that have profited off of the scattering of purchasing power. Pharmaceutical companies have also made a killing off our current policy, really founded initially in the Medicare part D benefit, that refused to centralize purchasing power, thus guaranteeing some pretty generous profits.

Mr. KAGEN. A buying group drives down the price in a competitive, openly disclosed price situation. When you have a very competitive medical marketplace where the power and the leverage and the purchasing power of people buying together, that is when you drive down the price.

But I want to burn this point into the American people: We are not talking about government-run health care. The government, hey, if you get sick, don't call your congressman, call your doctor. Today, you are calling your insurance agent to make sure that you can go to the doctor or hospital of your choice. We want people to have choices when you call your doctor. Ask your doctor for help, don't call your congressman or your governor.

Earlier today, I met with World War II veterans. They took the honor flight where they flew from Wisconsin this morning to see the World War II memorial that they hadn't visited before. There were over 80 of them. The youngest is about 85, and the oldest is about 92. What a great honor and pleasure it was for me to greet them and listen to some of their stories and to thank them for their service.

One senior came up to me, a World War II veteran, and he's much like a lot of people in the country, and here's his quote: "I don't want the government involved in deciding my health care choices, period." I said, Sir, I want to thank you, and I will share that quote on the House floor tonight with my colleagues so all of America will hear your voice. That's my job; I'm listening and transmitting their message. And then I asked him, How is the VA treating you? "Good. That's different." Well, it's different in some senses because he has earned his benefit and he is receiving the benefit at the Veterans Administration clinic and hospital, and it's a benefit well deserved. We're fighting very hard to move those benefits up and to guarantee that it gets out to every veteran. But you see, it isn't that much different. It is government run, and he's happy with the service.

Now I will be the first to admit, as a doctor practicing in the VA hospitals in the 1970s, beginning in 1973, it was terrible, it was disgusting, it was to the point of becoming inhumane. Our shelves were not bare, but close to it. We didn't have the newer drugs to help our veterans who came back from Vietnam, in particular, and many World War II veterans. It got to the point where at one time I had to kidnap a patient and take him several blocks away in Chicago to a real hospital to get him the surgery that he needed because our operating room wasn't open after hours.

Things have changed. This Congress, the 110th and the 111th Congress have stepped up for our veterans, increasing by 77 percent—the biggest increase in the history of the VA—its funding. We're not at the top yet, but we're getting there, and we intend to invest in our veterans' care. The government isn't going to be your doctor. We're not talking about government-run health care.

Two others things that some World War II veterans were concerned about:

KAGEN, now in that bill, are you putting in money for illegal abortions? Are you putting in money for people who are here outside the law, here illegally, who immigrated here but did it illegally? And the answer is no and the answer is no.

You're going to hear, unfortunately, a great deal of misinformation, but it is our intention to work with Members of all parties to guarantee that your tax dollars are going to you, who earned it like our veterans, and to make sure those benefits go towards legal causes.

I yield.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. I thank you, Mr. KAGEN, because there is obviously a tremendous amount of misinformation.

I think the reason why there is momentum right now in this country in favor of health care reform is that as we have taken the time over the summer and the fall to confront this misinformation, we have made people understand that there is a difference between rhetoric and reality when it comes to health care. A tremendous amount of people who are driving the rhetoric have no interest in connecting that to reality because their agenda is not to really influence the contours of the health care reform bill, their agenda—and I'm talking about some Republicans, but I'm more talking about the folks who are in the entertainment news media—their agenda is to sell air time and to sell commercials and to say outrageous things that get them some attention in the world, and you can do that best by distorting.

So it is our job to come down here to the House floor, to go out and stand at town hall meetings, on town greens, in supermarkets—wherever it may be—to talk about the reality here.

I caught, as I entered the Chamber, Mr. KAGEN, you talking about Medicare. This is such an important piece of this debate. I actually caught some of our Republican colleagues down here earlier with a list of Medicare cuts that are in the bill. Listen, everybody seems to agree on both sides of the aisle that something is wrong with Medicare, right, that we have more money going out than coming in? Medicare is going to go bankrupt someday at the current pace—it's certainly not going to be around for me, and it may not even be around for some people who are becoming current beneficiaries today. So everybody agrees that we've got to do something about it.

Well, here's the problem: There are only two things you can do to fix Medicare, you have to start slowing the amount of money that goes out that we pay, or you have to start increasing the amount of money that comes in. Now, the second one isn't very attractive because that's increased payroll taxes, that's more money coming out of people's paychecks—and I'm not sure that a lot of Republicans are for that. So if you're not for more money coming into Medicare, the only way that you save it is by stopping the money from going out. And what this bill does is it slows the rate of Medicare growth, of overall Medicare spending, without cutting or harming benefits for seniors, and in fact improving them.

Now people might say, How do you do that? That doesn't sound right. That sounds like political double-speak. How do you cut Medicare costs but maintain Medicare benefits? Well, the problem as you've talked about already this evening is that we have all sorts of medical systems and hospitals and some physicians out there that are billing for all sorts of extra procedures and extra treatments that aren't adding any value. We have a lot of hospitals out there who do a procedure on somebody, send them home before they're ready to go home, and they show up again and again and again and again in the hospital, and we pay them every time that they come back.

And then we have a system of reimbursement to drug companies and insurance companies that are paying them 120 percent of the cost of actually providing the service, as we do for our Medicare Advantage plans. So how we have done this is by starting to tailor health care payments—not benefits—health care payments to hospitals and providers and drug companies and insurance companies to promote value, not volume—and you've said this already today, Mr. KAGEN—and then we take most of those savings and apply it to the overall health care bill to try to get people coverage that don't have it, but we take some of those savings and make benefits better, as you said, closing the doughnut hole, eliminating all copayments for preventative services, increasing for the first time in the last 6 years the amount of money that doctors get on a routine basis to provide care for patients.

So we need to dispel this mythology out there that the Medicare growth restraints in this bill are benefit cuts. They're not. They are payment cuts and payment reductions that are going to save Medicare in the long run. And if Republicans want to come down to this floor and argue against any restraint of growth in Medicare, then if they want Medicare to survive in the long run, Mr. KAGEN, they then have to be prepared to argue for more taxes to pay for it.

Mr. KAGEN. But isn't that elimination of wasteful spending?

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. It is. You're talking about waste, fraud and abuse. Now fraud, we've got to do a better job of rooting out fraud in Medicare, but no matter how tight you get on fraud, it's never going to get you all the way out of bankruptcy. So you've got to get to the other pieces here, which are waste and abuse. If you ask me, medical procedures performed on me or on my family that don't add any value to my health but do add reimbursements to the doctor and hospital that I go to, that's waste, and we shouldn't be paying for it.

Mr. KAGEN. There are three other ways we could help to save money to reduce the cost of health care. The first idea is not a new one, we did it in Wisconsin with Senior-Care; we negotiated for deeper, steeper cuts and discounts from prescription drug makers. We need to be able to negotiate with pharmaceutical companies for deeper discounts for all of Medicare, for all the VA, for all the Coast Guard, and for all of us.

The men and women I saw today at the World War II monuments, they fought for this country, not only for themselves and their family, they fought for the entire country. So why can't we allow a veteran, who has a deep discount for a prescription drug, why can't we give that same discount to his wife and his family? What about his neighbors? What about his whole town? What about the whole country?

If we have a steep discount that we're benefiting from as we invest our tax dollars in the health care of our veterans, that discount should be spread out to all Americans who are here legally. So let's begin to negotiate for deeper discounts for prescription drugs for all of us.

The second thing we must do is to encourage hospitals to cut their overhead costs, to deliver care more efficiently, to make sure that our tax dollars are stretched to the very limit, not by cutting quality, but by cutting their cost of care. It has been done in a number of institutions, one of them in my district I mentioned earlier, which is the ThedaCare health care system. We have to take that model and replicate it across the country. In over 10 years, we will save $400 billion. That's called the elimination of wasteful spending. It's becoming more efficient. We have to do that not just in the corporate world and the business world, but in our hospitals. After all, we just proved in the sands of Iraq that we can deliver world-class health care in a tent in a desert. Then maybe we can do the same by getting skinny, getting leaner in our hospital system.

So negotiating for steeper discounts from drug companies, driving down the cost of care in hospitals. And the third, the biggest savings yet to come, is prevention, which is why we want people to get to a primary care doctor and make sure we diagnose things early because you're a cheaper date; your illnesses are better managed through prevention. And that the government can't do for you. That's something that you have to do with your family in the personal choices you make, in consultation with your own family and personal physicians.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. I think that last point is important, but also important to understand the limitations. Prevention is critical, and there are all sorts of personal choices that we can make and be incentivized to make through the way that our benefit is structured to try to be healthier. But again, I come back to some of the arguments against it. I hear over and over again opponents of health care reform sort of putting the burden on individuals, like it's their fault. There are a lot of people who have gotten sick because of choices they made—bad eating habits, smoking, unhealthy lifestyles. There are millions of people out there who could have made better choices and avoided getting sick, but there are millions more who got sick through no fault of their own. We have to understand—and I agree, I'm not disagreeing with my friend, but as important as personal responsibility is in health care, it seems to sometimes be the only answer that we hear from the opponents of health care reform, that why should the government get involved in remaking the insurance markets? Why should we get involved in remaking our Medicare bargain? Why don't we just tell people to stop getting sick? Well, you know what, there are some people out there that can make better choices, but there are a lot of other people out there—like the gentleman that I spoke about who contracted gallbladder cancer that have no power over that, and we've got to have a system that answers for those people.

I just want to turn it over to our colleague here, because it happened to be as we were starting to talk about the transformation of our health care payment system that one of the champions of that transformation came down to the floor. So I will kick it back to you, and then you can kick it over to Mr. BRALEY.

Mr. KAGEN. I was a little concerned that you were going to blame all the lawyers; I'm glad you didn't do that. But when we bring this subject up about reducing costs, many people on the other side have been screaming that if we just got tort reform, we could really drive down the cost.

I wonder, Mr. BRALEY from Iowa, if you could address this issue and other issues that we haven't yet discussed?

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Well, I think one of the things that people always overlook is the cost of patient safety on our health care delivery system. The Institutes of Medicine, which is the foremost authority in terms of independent, nonpartisan medical research has looked at this in three studies they did in the last decade there: patient safety treatise on to err is human; their patient safety study; and also their study of medication errors. Their conclusions were interesting because they concluded that the cost of preventable medical errors on our health care system every year is between $17 and $28 billion of preventable medical errors. That's the added cost in additional health care that's imposed on people who are injured due to preventable medical errors.

So if you multiply those numbers over the 10-year life of this bill that's being scored by CBO, you're looking at an opportunity cost loss by not focusing on patient safety of somewhere between $170 and $280 billion. That's why patient safety should be the primary focus of any health care reform, and that's what the Institute of Medicine concluded.

That is why when we were coming up with a solution to the enormous problem of over-utilization in certain parts of the country—it's a well-known problem—it costs, according to medical economists, somewhere between $500 and $700 billion a year, which would be $5 to $7 trillion over the 10-year period that's being scored by CBO. You could pay for everything in this health care bill five to seven times with those types of savings.

Mr. KAGEN. But if I can interrupt for a minute, this internal conversation about the CBO, Congressional Budget Office—for those of you listening, the CBO, the Congressional Budget Office, only counts money that goes into and out of the United States Treasury. They don't measure those savings, do they?

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Well, they don't because they don't have the opportunity to look at what portion of those would be directly related to Medicare, Medicaid patient and the cost shifting that takes place when we ask other people to carry the burden of fixing those problems.

But I want to focus more on what's in the photograph next to you, because we stand on this floor every day and talk about policy.

□ 1930

To a lot of people policy is vague. It's hard to understand. It's complex. But you, Dr. KAGEN, have put a human face on health care. I want to spend just a few minutes talking about the human drama of health care that nobody seems to really be talking about.

When I was out at my 17 town hall meetings in my district this summer and people were complaining about this health care bill and who was going to benefit from it, I would always bring them back to the human side of health care. I would talk about my nephew's 18-month-old son, Tucker Wright, who lives in Malcom, Iowa.

Tucker was 18 months old when he was diagnosed with liver cancer. He had two-thirds of his liver removed. He faces a very uncertain medical future. The medical costs, as you know better than anyone, Dr. KAGEN, were astronomical from that surgery and from the followup and from the constant monitoring that has to be done on a young patient with such a serious medical condition. He is almost certain to get another form of cancer before he reaches the age of 18.

His parents are the classic example of what we want responsible adults to do. They are both employed in full-time employment. They had health insurance coverage. But with a lifetime cap on benefits in most private health insurance policies available now, his parents are locked into jobs that they cannot leave. If they do, under our current health care delivery model, they will be denied future payments for his health care needs, which are enormous, because of something called pre-existing condition exclusions.

It's more than that, because I have attended fund-raisers for this adorable little boy, because even with good health insurance, they have tens of thousands of dollars of uninsured and underinsured health care needs. You have seen that human drama play out, and I would like you to talk about the toll that that takes on the families that you cared for in Wisconsin.

Mr. KAGEN. Well, I will tell you about Brandon Rudie, who is a 2-year-old who, through no fault of his own, accidentally fell below the lawnmower of the father cutting the lawn. They busted through the cap. They stand to lose not just their jobs but their home. We had a bake sale to try to come up with money for Brandon, who lost much of his face and some facial structure. He is going to have to go through a lot of surgery that this family cannot afford.

The days of having bake sales to pay for a child's health care needs must come to an end.

I yield to Mr. KLEIN from Florida. Thank you for joining us.

Mr. KLEIN of Florida. Well, it's my pleasure to join my colleague from Iowa, Mr. BRALEY, and Mr. MURPHY from Connecticut and Dr. KAGEN. We have been doing this now for a couple of years together and it's an honor to represent our respective communities.

I am from Florida, a wonderful place to live, great place for retirees to come. As you know, a lot of people retire to Florida or retire to other places, and they know that they have got Medicare.

Medicare was something that was set up many, many decades ago, and I think just about every American wants Medicare because they know they have got security. They have got the security to know that they are not going to fall into a situation where, as an older person, that they are going to have a medical expense that will be out of control. They may have a nest egg they have put aside after all those hard years of work.

When Medicare was originally set up, it was set up as a way to cover hospitalization and significant medical costs; it was doctors and providers and things like that. What happened that's a good thing over the years is we have got some tremendous scientists and medical researchers who have come up with some really good prescription medications that keep people healthy and keep people alive longer, and that's a good thing. We have to thank the great companies and great people in the United States that make our pharmaceutical industry the envy of the world.

However, the problem, the down side of all of this goodness, is the cost. Unfortunately, the cost has just gotten out of control, out of control for private businesses who have to pay for it as part of the medical plans, out of control for Medicare and for anybody who has to provide, to buy their medicine.

As a matter of fact, there was an argument a couple of years ago about you shouldn't be able to buy your medicines from Canada. What absurdity. Many times it's the same medicines that are produced in the United States, sold to Canada, and you can buy it for a lot less. We all understood that. We tried to fix that. The previous administration didn't allow us, but that's obviously being fixed now.

One of the things that was passed is the part D part of the Medicare prescription drug plan, and it's called the prescription drug plan because people who are Medicare patients can now get a prescription drug plan that can cover a lot of their costs, and that is really a lifesaver.

I take some of these pharmaceutical products. I have got a little hereditary problem with cholesterol. I take Lipitor, which many people do. I will mention it by name because it is what it is. My father, who is 80 years old, he is really a wonderful man and still plays tennis three times a week, but he takes Lipitor. He has blood pressure—these are the things that keep him alive today. If he didn't have them he probably would maybe had some serious illness.

But the problem when the Medicare prescription drug plan was constructed is they created something in the middle called the doughnut hole. For those people who pay a few thousand dollars of medical expenses or it's counted up to a certain point, at a certain point they have to pay 100 cents on the dollar. If you have chronic medical problems—and there are a lot of our senior citizens that do—all of a sudden they go to the pharmacy and they have to pay $160 for this and $640 for that, and all of a sudden thousands of dollars out of their pocket.

You know, the story you just told about the young people who have had their serious illnesses, what about those senior citizens in our hometowns that are making decisions about medicine or food or a mortgage payment or medicine? That's not where this country should be.

Good news, good news. In the bill that's being proposed right now, we are going to phase out this doughnut hole, reduce it in size and allow people from day one to buy medicines at a lower cost and eliminate it eventually. It's very expensive to do, but it has to be done over time.

Originally, the way they talked about this was it was going to start in 2015 or 2020. Great news. Last week, it's part of the whole discussion, the bill is still a work in process, but many of the things that many of us have been fighting for—I have been fighting for this, I know, as my colleagues have from day one of getting elected—was helping close the doughnut hole. The good news is we fought and we just now got an agreement in the House that on January 1 of next year we will start that process of closing the doughnut hole and reducing those out-of-pocket prescription costs for our seniors.

It makes you feel good because this is something that I have heard from so many people and, you know, I know my own dad and his costs, and he and his wife hit that doughnut hole. This is real. If we can do whatever we can to keep people out of hospitals and having a peace of mind and quality of life, that's exactly what all of this is about.

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. I think one of the things we have been talking about is how you put a human face on complex health care policy. When we were out in our districts, we got a lot of feedback about the public health insurance option and people saying don't do anything to disrupt our private health insurance system.

I had a recent meeting with a young woman, 20 years old, Hannah Rodriguez is her name. She is a student at the University of Northern Iowa in my district. She sat down to interview me, and one of the first things I noticed about her is she had a cleft palate, 20 years old in the United States of America. She was so excited because she said she was soon going to have her final surgery to fix her cleft palate.

I said to her, Well, what's taken so long for you to get this surgery? She says, Well, my mom and dad don't make much money and they have been saving up money to have this surgery done. I said, Well, why isn't this covered under your health insurance? Your folks have health insurance, don't they? She said, Yes, but this is considered cosmetic surgery.

Think about that. A young woman, for 20 years, born with a birth defect, just like cystic fibrosis, just like cerebral palsy, all of which are covered under a regular health insurance policy, and this young woman has been struggling with this for 20 years. That's why we have to fix this broken health care system.

Mr. KAGEN. Thank you, Mr. BRALEY.

I will summarize by saying that we are working hard to fix what's broken.

We are going to improve what we already have and make sure that it's at a price we can all afford to pay. What kind of nation, what kind of nation would we be if we didn't take this positive step forward?

HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to address you on the floor of the House. I have the chance to do so, perhaps, with some people that have expertise in the subject matter that I heard just go through my ears a little bit ago, and that would be where do we save money when it comes to this cost of health care in America?

I listened to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BRALEY) talk about 17 to 28 billion in added costs of preventive medicine. Preventive medicine. When I first heard that, I actually misunderstood his point. I thought surely he was talking about defensive medicine, but, I am sorry, it wasn't the case. It was preventive medicine.

This amorphous target of how you save money on health care by watching your diet and being physically fit and getting regular checkups, yes, that's important. But his discussion of $17 to $28 billion multiplied across 10 years, actually, when you look at it, it pales in comparison to the overall costs that are included in the lawsuit abuse in the health care in America.

I will submit these numbers, that the lowest number that I find is that the costs of medical malpractice, Mr. Speaker, and the liability insurance and the defensive medicine that definitely takes place so that doctors can protect themselves from lawsuit abuse adds up to a number of something like, a lowest number is 5½ percent of the overall health care costs. The health insurance underwriters put that at 8½ percent of the overall costs. That's $203 billion a year, and this is still a low number. If we take Mr. BRALEY's analysis and multiply it times 10 for the 10-year life of this bill, that comes in to over $2 trillion, the costs of the defensive medicine that's taking place and the funding that goes into the pockets of the trial lawyers.

I talked to an orthopedic surgeon who had told me that 95 percent of the tests that he runs are unnecessary, that his diagnosis actually will apply. It will be there, but he has to protect himself for that 5 percent that he may need to be right. But the 95 percent are there, money that's wasted, he said completely wasted, in order to protect him from lawsuits that come from trial lawyers.

It's interesting that a trial lawyer would come to the floor of the House of Representatives and talk about the value of preventive medicine but not the cost of defensive medicine. That's a subject that I will never hear defended on this side of the aisle. If anybody over there would like to ask me to yield, I would be happy to take this up how many trial lawyers might be in that large caucus that has a 79-vote advantage over Republicans and still wants to blame Republicans for their socialized medicine bill not being passed in the House of Representatives.

Those are the circumstances and the facts, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I believe it's a 78-vote advantage, and it lets the Speaker be able to have 39 votes to take a walk and still have 218 votes to take a socialized medicine bill.

Now, you would think that if you had roughly 80 people swirling around over there that are extra over the number of Republicans, you might be able to turn your sights on the people in their own caucus, Mr. Speaker, and resolve this issue, instead of coming back here to the floor as the gentleman did, Mr. MURPHY, and point his finger at Republicans and accuse Republicans of not having solutions.

Oh, yes, we have solutions, Mr. Speaker. We have many solutions. In fact, I have in my hand here the health care solutions, not just from the Republicans, just from, oh, a little more than half of us, the conservative Republicans that are members of the Republican Study Committee. This report was produced by the Republican Study Committee, and the chairman, of course, is TOM PRICE of Georgia, a medical doctor himself and a lead thinker and a real national voice on health care, along with many of the doctors that we have in our caucus.

I looked down through the list of legislation that has been offered by Members on the Republican side of the aisle, and I see my name there, yes, but I also see names such as Mr. ISSA of California, Mr. FORTENBERRY of Nebraska, Mr. STEARNS of Florida, Mr. LATTA of Ohio, Mr. ROYCE of California, Mr. SCALISE of Louisiana, Dr. GINGREY of Georgia, MARSHA BLACKBURN of Tennessee, and KENNY MARCHANT of Texas. It goes on and on, the mountain of legislation that has been introduced by Republicans.

It's quite interesting that another gentleman from Georgia this morning, Mr. DAVID SCOTT, made the allegation that Republicans had no solutions. Well, Mr. PRICE followed him over to the side of the floor and offered to give him this stack of Republican solutions. He smiled nicely, but he refused to take it. Now, we don't always get a nice smile from the other side, but they refused to accept this whole stack of ideas. This is just a list of ideas. This isn't bills. These are a list of ideas. These are pieces of legislation that Republicans have seen fit to put into language for law and introduce into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and seek to get it passed into committee and try to offer these health care solutions as amendments to the overall markup of H.R. 3200, the bill that is the House version of this national takeover of our health care, or at least the framework to do so, Mr. Speaker.

□ 1945

So, it is something the American people need to see through. I can express frustration. I can speak from facts and I can speak from a level of experience being engaged in this debate. The American people, Mr. Speaker, need to focus on what is true and what isn't; what is honest and what is just; and what is, I don't want to describe it as dishonest, I will describe it as political hyperbole designed to reach a conclusion that I don't believe is in the best interests of the American people.

So I come to the floor this night to raise this issue and to enlighten I believe yourself, Mr. Speaker, and in the process the American people. And I will start out again, take us to this Medicare issue that was brought up by the other side.

Now, their argument is that there are billions of dollars to be saved in Medicare. And so they only want to cut Medicare by half a trillion dollars, $500 billion in cuts to Medicare, and they will argue that Republicans want to raise the fees on payroll in order to fund Medicare if we are not willing to slash Medicare to our seniors by half a trillion dollars.

I recall watching a spokesman for the AARP on television one day arguing that, well, that half a trillion dollars in cuts to Medicare really isn't that much money. It is a small percentage of the overall layouts. Half a trillion dollars. What could they possibly be getting that would offset a half a trillion dollar cut directly to their members?

Here are some of the places that these cuts come from: $133 billion, and now the most recent number that came out within the last few days is actually $162 billion, cut from Medicare Advantage. A lot of those people are in my State, Iowa. Of course, they are senior citizens, and they want to have some extra options and they are willing to invest in Medicare Advantage. But since this is the only component of the Medicare program that actually has the private sector engaged in it, which keeps the costs down, the Democrats want to scrap Medicare Advantage.

They seem to despise free enterprise and despise economic competition. So this $133 billion apparently has grown to a minus $162 billion right out of the pockets of our seniors, taking away their Medicare Advantage, killing the rest of it after they have already landed a severe blow on this year.

Here is a minus $128.8 billion from our hospitals. I don't have any hospitals that tell me they are being overpaid in Medicare, and I don't expect if I did have they would tell me that. But I can tell you the national number for Medicare reimbursement rates is only 80 percent of the cost of delivering that service—80 percent of the cost.

Now, some of these doctors and nurses and health care practitioners are actually in business for a profit, Mr. Speaker, and I don't begrudge them that profit. I hope there is competition, and the more profit they make, the more competition it is likely to attract. Some of these hospitals are for-profit hospitals; they all are not. So we can't begrudge them that profit. That is what has driven the United States of America.

In fact, over in my desk at 1131 Longworth there is a stack of flash cards in there that are produced by USCIS, the United States Citizenship Immigration Service. They are laminated glossy cards with a red background and pictures on them, and they are there so, let me say, naturalizing Americans that seek to pass the naturalization test to become American citizens can study on these flash cards the things they need to know.

For example, Who was the father of our country? George Washington. It has the question on the front side, George Washington on the back side. Who saved the Union in the Civil War? Front question. Back side, Abe Lincoln.

Question, What is the economic system of the United States of America? Flip the card over, answer: Free enterprise capitalism, Mr. Speaker. I mean, that is like the simplest no-brainer question for the economy of the United States that we require of anyone that wants to naturalize to become an American citizen in this country; they have to know it is a free enterprise system.

Yet we have people in this Congress that are constantly assaulting the free enterprise system. We have seen the nationalization of one-third of our private sector just in the last one year, one-third, according to The Wall Street Journal. And this health care industry, one-sixth of our overall economy, perhaps another 18 percent. If you add those together, we are very close to if not exceeding over half of our economy being nationalized, meaning a Federal Government takeover of management and running the show and calling the shots and freedom disappearing, all of that within, what, a year or a year and a couple of months, Mr. Speaker?

It is appalling to think that we have had an all-out frontal assault on free enterprise while at the same time we are testing our immigrants who want to become Americans to make sure they understand that this Nation is for free enterprise, that that is the basis of our economy. It is appalling. It is ironic.

It is disingenuous to take this attack against the free enterprise system in America and go against Medicare Advantage, the only free enterprise component of Medicare, to knock all of that out, which is what they propose to do in H.R. 3200, and go after our hospitals and ding them for $128.8 billion, when many of the hospitals and many of the hospitals that I represent are taking a high percentage of Medicare patients, and every time they take a patient, they know that they are losing money, and it has to be picked up somewhere else or they can't keep their doors open. So it requires cost shifting, and that is where we get the medical costs that seem out of line.

Then you can go on down through the line. Cutting home health care by $56 billion. Cutting Medicare Commission, $22.2 billion. Cutting Medicare Improvement Fund by $22.3 billion. Part D, $19.8 billion. We will be down to aspirins in no time. Skilled nursing facilities, $14.6 billion. Cut part B schedules, except for physician services, $23.1 billion. You go on down, CMS, innovation center, hospices, accountable health care organizations; $800 million out of the power wheelchairs component of that. That must be MCCASKILL out of Missouri. And comparative effectiveness, $300 million. The list goes on. Medigap $100 million.

This stack here takes us up there in the neighborhood of $500 billion cut out of Medicare. And what do we hear from the other side? "Well, we are always going after waste, fraud and abuse." "There will be always be abuse," I heard a gentleman say, "so we are going after the waste and the fraud."

Are we? If they know where the waste and the fraud is, rather than pointing to categories, tell me. Tell me, Mr. Speaker, what is it that is going on in Medicare in my State, in my hospitals and the clinics in my district, that is waste, fraud or abuse, when they are receiving on the national average 80 percent of the cost of delivering that service. I don't have anybody in my district that is making money off of Medicare. But Iowa is the lowest reimbursement State in the Union, and that is the biggest reason why.

So we have the lowest reimbursement rates in the entire United States of America. We rewrote that bill in 2003, and Iowa got a little better off. They climbed a little bit up out of that 50th in the Nation for reimbursement rates for Medicare. They closed the gap a little, but we never got up to 49th.

Who was number one in the Nation at the time in reimbursement rates for their citizens? Louisiana. Who got the most per capita out of the entire 2003 Medicare rewrite legislation and the prescription-drug component of that? Louisiana.

We look across this country, and Democrat after Democrat says "there is waste, fraud and abuse in my Medicare." Well, maybe it is in yours. It is not in mine. But you want to cut mine, not yours. You will defend those reimbursements to your districts. You won't let us adjust those rates. You have a little package over there which I support, and I have worked with some of the people on that side of the aisle, and I appreciate the effort they put in. They deserve more of the credit than I can certainly take on this, although I did write some language into the 2003 bill that allowed for consideration for cost and quality.

But this is supposedly a component of a negotiation that we will get, and that number is something like $8 billion that would be rolled back in to help compensate cost and quality. But it is pretty vague. You can't get your fingers on it. The language isn't there. We don't really know whether it is cost and quality or whether it is demography and geography. I mean, that is the question now. If it is going to be demography and geography, that is what Democrats usually want to do.

So I suspect that they want to change the rates so that people that live in their chosen areas that meet their demographics will get a higher reimbursement rate. And I can only conclude that that means that they will target minorities and inner cities. And I think that every American should be considered as one of God's children, regardless of what their ethnicity or national origin is and regardless of where they live.

So, if you take that off the table, and I sure would like to because it pits Americans against Americans and causes some people to focus on skin color instead of the content of our character, but if we could take that off the table, it is still geography, and they will define the demography that gives them the advantage. They will still take away our Medicare Advantage and decrease and gain themselves an advantage to their constituents, without regard to justice and equity.

Now, justice and equity would look at this and conclude that the States with the lowest reimbursement rate should be in a position to get the greatest bump up. But even if that is not the case, what if it would be the States and the locales and the metropolitan service areas that had the best cost and quality ratios in America? Who ranks number one in cost and quality? And shouldn't we reward the people that produce the best product for the best value?

Now, my State will rank in the top five in every broad health care results analysis that comes out. Every objective, broad health care results analysis that comes out, I will be in the top five. Sometimes we are number one in some categories, and sometimes it moves across the spectrum. But they will be in the top five in quality because of the result that they get, because a lot of people that are there put their hearts and their heads and their souls into this and their backs and their hands and all their know-how and resources, and they get a good result.

So that is the quality. But they are rewarded with the lowest reimbursement rate in Medicare in the Nation. So they get a low cost, because they aren't being paid for the service that they are providing. They produce a high quality anyway. And I am saying that we need to recognize the best cost and quality combination in America and reward those.

If you want to go out and find a half a trillion dollars in savings in Medicare, don't come to my State. Don't come to my district. We are producing the best combination of cost and quality in America. Go to those places then where Medicare reimbursement rates are high and results are low and advise them that they are going to have to get their standards up, but you are going to reduce their reimbursement rate, if that is your determination, to take half a trillion dollars out of this. That is my suggestion.

This is the chart. This is the reality. To cut Medicare and argue that there is waste, fraud and abuse everywhere, slash it across-the-board and starve the people that are doing the best good for the least amount of dollars is unjust, and there is no equity there for anybody involved, not the providers, not the practitioners, not the patients, not the senior citizens in this district that I represent, which I believe is the most senior congressional district in America.

The Fifth District of Iowa and Iowa itself has the highest percentage of the population over the age of 85. And then of 99 counties in Iowa, 32 of them are in my district, and in that 32 county district, we have 10 of the 12 most senior counties in Iowa. So, 10 of the 12 most senior counties in Iowa in the most senior State in the Nation results in, I believe, the most senior congressional district in America. And we are looking at a half-trillion dollar cut across this country because some people have to figure out a way to pay for this $1 trillion to $2 trillion bill.

Now, this takes us to this conclusion that was drawn by President Obama while in debate with Hillary Clinton in the presidential primary process last year, in 2008. And I think it was a given that going into this presidential contest on the Democrat side, Hillary Clinton clearly owned the field as far as knowing her health care issues. And here is a point as to why I say that, Mr. Speaker.

She produced this for America, working in conjunction with her husband, Bill Clinton, who, by the way, came to this floor and spoke from this well on September 22, 1993, to plead with and entreat a joint session of Congress, House and Senate Members and the galleries full, to adopt his concepts and write into law a national health care act that would completely take over at that time one-seventh of the U.S. economy. And Hillary Clinton was instrumental in that.

□ 2000

She held the meetings and put together a bill. Some were closed-door meetings. That sounds a bit familiar these days. I remember my frustration at the door being closed with Hillary Clinton and a big table full of people who were sliding papers around, arguing and hammering out the destiny of America. I have always had an aversion about turning people loose to go make decisions for Americans or Iowans behind closed doors.

I recall a policy that needed to be handled when I was in the Iowa Senate. They appointed six Democrats and six Republicans; the 12 apostles, I called them. They put themselves in a room and closed the door. They all swore an oath that they wouldn't talk about the product they were working on until they all agreed to come to a conclusion and sign off on this document, and then that's what they did. One of my close friends was in that room and would not utter a word of what was going on, what was being negotiated inside that room, and of course I didn't pry very hard because I respected his integrity.

But you know what happens, Mr. Speaker, when they meet behind closed doors, when they meet in secret, when they appoint themselves as the people that are the—how shall I say—the sole repository of wisdom inside the room when they close the door. They come out. And once they reach a consensus inside the room, they produce a document or a philosophy, and they all sign off, either in ink or verbally, and they go out and stand together behind the microphones. Then they say, We have produced the best product possible. We've had the right brains in the room, and I am really optimistic about what we've done. This is the right thing for America or Iowa or whatever group it is that they're seeking to impose this policy on. And invariably they will say, Don't amend this because if you do, this perfectly balanced specimen that we have would be knocked out of balance, and it won't be able to function properly.

It actually reminds me of former Secretary of the Treasury Paulson when last year, on September 19, he came to the Hill and asked this Congress to write him a check for $700 billion. His response to us and his presentation to us was, I've been looking at this for 13 months. You've only been looking at it for 24 hours. I have thought of everything. Whatever you think of will knock it out of balance. Don't try to amend this. You will destroy the overall product. This is a perfectly balanced vehicle.

Well, it doesn't take much to perfectly balance a vehicle when it happens to be not a blank check but a check for $700 billion, signed by the American taxpayers and borrowed from the Chinese to be paid with interest and principal by grandchildren yet to be born. Those were about all the details that were in there, and I had to write some in myself as I speak about it; not in the language itself. That's what came out with the $700 billion TARP piece.

By the way, the Wall Street Journal came out today with some regret that they supported that $700 billion. Now they would like to see the plug pulled and the money paid back to the American taxpayer and no more doled out in the fashion that it was. That's an inside-the-closed-doors rush to judgment. And right now we've got behind-the-closed-doors negotiations taking place in the House of Representatives, in the United States Senate; people frantically negotiating at different stages with doors closed. Maybe three Senators over on the Senate side right down that hall, Mr. Speaker. A few more House Members maybe.

I've talked about some of these things that are ironic, but here is the irony: As President Obama was campaigning—and I will have to circle back to the Hillary issue in a moment. But as President Obama was campaigning, he said that he would open up unconditional negotiations with Iran. That meant to a lot of us, Mr. Speaker, that we envisioned Barack Obama sitting down across the table with Ahmadinejad or the Mullahs and maybe asking them if they would just be nice people and shut down their nuclear weapons operations.

Now aside from how that makes the United States look and how it rewards people for threatening Israel and the United States, aside from that, Mr. Speaker, it seems ironic to me that the President is meeting with people like HARRY REID, NANCY PELOSI, a handful of Democrats, and they're crafting legislation behind closed doors, yet he's not willing to sit down with people like MITCH MCCONNELL, JOHN BOEHNER and ERIC CANTOR. What is it about that, Mr. Speaker, that the President of the United States would announce that he's willing to do unconditional bilateral negotiations with Iran, Ahmadinejad, because he is the boss there. If you will remember, he won an election, an election supported by the White House—or the result, at least, supported by the White House. To sit down with Ahmadinejad potentially or the Mullahs but not the leaders in the Republican Party or the leaders on the health care issue—and we have many on our side—is a real irony. I was about to make the case that during the campaign, Hillary Clinton made the argument that her version of health care—now it wasn't exactly this. She had some alterations because 14 years have gone by, and we know that the shape of this body isn't the same that it will be after 14 years of wear and tear. But this is the 14-year-old, now 15-year-old flow chart of HillaryCare.

I believe that her background in this is what drove President Obama into taking positions on health care that now he is seeking to sustain in the same way that he's seeking to sustain his Executive Order that closes Gitmo, Guantanamo Bay, on January 22 of next year. The difficulty of accomplishing such a thing looms now over the Justice Department in an imposing dark cloud, a hasty Executive Order, a policy in health care that was hammered out in the face of, I'll say, persistent, skillful debate on the part of Hillary Clinton. But this is her plan. This is from the New York Times back in '93-'94, shortly before Senator Phil Gramm stood down that hallway on the floor of the United States Senate and said, This plan passes "over my cold, dead political body." A lot of people thought that Phil Gramm was wrong, that this health care bill couldn't be killed. Phil Gramm wasn't the only one lined up to kill it, Mr. Speaker. There were many of us that did, but he was a man that was in the lead. He was one of the generals fighting this war to fold this scary flow chart and end the effort to take over what was at that time one-seventh of our economy. He inspired people in the House, people in the Senate and people all across America with his belief and conviction that this could be killed.

So this scary flow chart, this thing that I've said a number of times scared the living daylight out of me when it showed up in the paper, and I ended up with a laminated chart. And I do think it's someplace in my archives. But I hung it on the wall in my construction office in that '93-'94 era, and it stayed there all the way through the nineties. When I got to wondering about government and how I was going to keep a construction business operating in the middle of the tax increases and the changes in regulation and the burden that I had of government, I would look at that chart, and I would see that it had been buried by the leadership of Phil Gramm and others and by the American people, it gave me great heart that the common sense at the core and the heart, soul and conviction of the American people prevailed over this scary flow chart, which is a complete takeover of the health care system, and almost every one of these boxes would have become and our future would have been these proposed organizations, proposed agencies.

Now we have a new flow chart, not the 1993-94 version. Fifteen years later, we have the 2009 version. Mr. Speaker, if you observe this, the white boxes are existing entities out there. Here is the private sector entity, private insurers. Here are the traditional health insurance plans that they produce. You can go on around and see what exists along here. The Office of Civil Rights is there. The Office of Minority Health is there. But there are at least 31 new agencies and now, on a more careful inspection, it grows this up to more than 50 new agencies created by H.R. 3200.

This is a scary proposition. HillaryCare, scary in black and white, was scary enough to scare some of us into public life. It didn't scare me out of the private sector because this was killed. It was killed by the American people; but it helped motivate me to come into public life. I wonder if that had not been proposed to the American people whether I would be standing here opposing this or even in the United States Congress today. This takeover now of one-sixth of the American economy is a scary proposition. This takeover of a good share of our freedom, the freedom to buy the health insurance policy of our choice, the freedom to move to another State if we don't like the accommodations and the regulations that we have, the freedom to go without health insurance if we chose choose to do so, the freedom to take our risk and then be able to accept the profits that come from that, and pay the price if we take the risk.

Here are the few premises that President Obama has hung his hat on as a means of counteracting the very active and informed health care approach in the primary that Hillary Clinton mounted. He was forced to take a position on health care, so here are the two conclusions that he drew. One is, we spend too much money on health care. We have to fix that. The other one was, we have too many uninsured. We have to fix that. So somehow they've morphed along and have gotten away from the idea that, you know, there are rights and there are responsibilities. It seems to be that the point that they would like to make is a point that you're more likely to hear of in Western Europe than you are in the United States of America, and that is an argument that people have a right to a health insurance policy. The policy. I mean, everybody has access to health care. It may not be the best. They may go into a public health clinic. I know some awfully good practitioners there that have committed themselves to working in that environment, and I see high-quality care when I walk into those in my district. So maybe they go into a public health clinic. Maybe they walk into the emergency room, and it does run up some costs. But everybody has access to health care in America. Whether they have a dime, whether they have $1 billion or whether they're in the hole and they have a negative net worth, they have access to health care. That is not the issue.

So they make a new issue which is too many uninsured. I will go to that chart in a moment. But I want to make the other point and it's easier to make, and that is President Obama's premise that we spend too much money on health care in America. You can argue that, and you can debate it. We're at around 14.5 percent on up to maybe more than 16 percent of our GDP is spent on health care in America. They'll point to numbers that show that about 9.5 percent of the GDP of the other industrialized world is spent on health care, some above, some below that number. Well, you know, this is all in the eye of the beholder. Those that are receiving this health care that need it, the lifesaving procedures, they will tell you that it is worth the price. But I won't belabor that because we get into anecdotes to no end. I will just say this, if President Obama is right—and I am not conceding that point. But if he is right, for the sake of conjecture, I would make this point. His solution for spending too much money on health care is, spend more. Spend $1 trillion to $2 trillion more on health care, and then somehow it magically fixes the problem of spending too much.

You heard the words from one of the gentlemen that spoke in the previous hour. It's counterintuitive. It's kind of hard to rationalize. Well, it is. It's not just counterintuitive. Mr. Speaker, it's completely illogical to make a point and take a drive for the presidency and seek to impose upon the American people through the leverage and the majorities in the Congress, the Pelosi majority here, the Harry Reid majority down that hallway, a $1 trillion to $2 trillion health care plan. Because we spend too much money, now we'll spend $1 trillion to $2 trillion more.

And now one of the President's moving targets—I feel like a cat chasing a ball of string here—but one of the President's moving targets now is, Well, it's got to be under $1 trillion, in the $900 billion range. So write me a bill that does that because we can't take the political hit of something that's over $1 trillion. So they brought the doctors fix to the floor of the Senate the other day, and the doctors fix was $247 billion to try to fix the adjustment rates for our doctors that are underpaid in some of these cases. It failed on the floor of the Senate, and 13 Democrats voted with Republicans. How can this be? That was a way to take that $247 billion out of this government health care bill so that the bill didn't go over $1 trillion. If they would have passed that, the doctors fix wouldn't be a part of it, they wouldn't have to put it in there, and they could keep it all under the $1 trillion category. We're really here with AARP making a public statement that $500 billion is a very small percentage of the overall outlays, and they can take a hit and have their reimbursements reduced in the category I showed in this chart earlier, by $500 billion, and still their hearts are cold.

How can they do that? I have a chart here that shows me a little bit about why AARP might do that. A couple of points here. One of them is that there is a section in H.R. 3200 that would exempt Medigap policies from new limits on preexisting condition restrictions.

□ 2015

Well, AARP's Medigap insurance, which they sell and which they collect a good deal of premiums on—and it's the lion's share of the profits that AARP makes—continues to deny Medigap claims to individuals with serious health conditions. There is a preexisting condition clause written into Medigap policies, and H.R. 3200 would preserve the preexisting condition component for AARP. So I presume that is one of the reasons AARP can watch $500 billion be cut out of Medicare as long as they preserve their preexisting condition component of their Medigap insurance, which is so they can stay in that business.

There are several others on the list, but that's the easiest one to understand.

The President wants to solve a problem with spending too much money by spending more—$1 trillion to $2 trillion more. The Democrats in the Senate, HARRY REID, sought to blur that and sought to exempt the doctors fix so that they could keep their, I'll call it, socialized medicine bill down below $1 trillion. The $247 billion piece of legislation that dealt with the doctors fix independently was shot down in the Senate, and it could not receive a majority vote.

So let me get that other part of the President's position illustrated, Mr. Speaker.

This is the other position of the President's. The first, remember, is that we spend too much money. Therefore, we'll spend more. It's not logical because it's not logical. Here is the other one. We have 47 million uninsured in America—too many uninsured. Thus, we must insure them all because people on this side of the aisle believe that having your own health insurance policy is somehow intuitively withdrawn from the Constitution as a right that comes down from God, that flows through the Declaration of Independence, that shows up somewhere in the Constitution and maybe in the Bill of Rights, and that now they can divine that and hand that over to everybody in America, legal and illegal, no matter who you are.

I know that there are a good number of Democrats who have actually endorsed legislation that says that every human being in America—every person in America, would be the language—has a right to one's own health care, to receive it for free and that health care practitioners will be salaried employees who are working for the government. That would be a 1981 bill that I happened to read the other day, introduced by Ron Dellums and JOHN CONYERS. JOHN CONYERS is still here, and he's still pushing the same kind of issues.

This is the 47 million, Mr. Speaker, the 47 million who are uninsured. Now, that's the highest number that anybody defends. We could take this on down to, maybe, 39 million, but here is how you do the math:

These two categories right here are illegal aliens and immigrants. Add those both together, and it comes to 10.2 million. They're not part of the 47 million. They're not part of the people who, I think, we ought to impose upon taxpayers to fund their insurance.

I want to take illegal aliens and immigrants out of this equation of those who would be handed gift-wrapped health insurance policies. I want to subtract from that list the Americans who have the means to provide their own insurance. Those Americans making over $75,000 a year can find ways to write checks for their health insurance premiums. They don't. Nine million of them who are making over $75,000 a year don't.

Here, this is 9.7 million who are those eligible for a government program but who are not enrolled—mostly Medicaid. They don't bother to sign up. Why would they sign up for another program if we hand them silver-plattered health insurance policies? All they have to do is walk in and sign up, but they don't—9.7 million.

Here are those who are eligible for employer-sponsored insurance but who are not enrolled—6 million. Hmm. They told their employers "I don't want it" or they don't bother to sign up.

Now, all of these people who I've described are the people who, I don't believe, the American people want to hand silver-plattered, gift-wrapped health insurance policies. For the ones who are left, we do have some compassion. Those are the Americans without affordable options. That's 12.1 million people. They are the Americans without affordable options.

Right before I yield to the gentleman from Texas, I want to show you what it looks like when you look at all of America. This is 47 million. This is 47 million in America's population. Here we are. Eighty-four percent are with health insurance. This is 306 million Americans in this circle.

These folks in these categories here are the ones who I say I don't want to insure and that the Americans don't want to insure—illegals and those with the money and those who are already qualified, et cetera.

Yet, as to this red sliver here, this tiny, little piece of the pie, that's 12.1 million people. That's less than 4 percent of the overall U.S. population—Americans without affordable options. Now, it would be nice to help these people. I'm open to doing some of those things, and we've got some proposals here on the RSC's list to do that.

Yet the real bottom line is that Democrats and the President, behind closed doors, are putting together a policy that they want to ram down our throats which will maybe reduce this 4 percent number down to 2, but the price would be to transform completely 100 percent of the health insurance industry in America and to start down the path of a complete transformation of 100 percent of the health care delivery system in America. It's the best health insurance system in the world. It's the best health care delivery system in the world.

We have a whole list of fixes, some of which we've passed out of this House but which were blocked by the trial lawyers and the Senate in the last few years. It's the Republicans who preserve your free enterprise; it's the Republicans who preserve our freedom, Mr. Speaker, and it's the Republicans who will reduce these costs in our health care and who will reduce this number of 4 percent slightly, not by a big amount, maybe by a percent or so or two. That's about half. All of this is coming out of the lists here of the Republican Study Committee and of the list of the 10 things that I carry around in my pocket which are the solutions that I propose.

So, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the most tenacious, resilient and, perhaps, entertaining Member of the United States Congress, who is from East Texas, is here tonight. Whenever I see Congressman LOUIE GOHMERT on the floor, I want to hear what's on LOUIE's mind.

I'd be so happy to yield as much time as he may consume to the gentleman from East Texas, Mr. LOUIE GOHMERT, the judge.

Mr. GOHMERT. Thank you, and I appreciate the gentleman, my dear friend from Iowa, for yielding.

It is interesting when we talk about people who do not have coverage. As my friend from Iowa knows, earlier today, there were a great many 1-minute speeches given by Republicans and numerous 1-minute speeches given by Democrats.

A Democrat, whom I happen to like a great deal—he has always been most gracious to me—gave a 1-minute in which he pointed out that he had a friend who had called a doctor's office, seeking help with a medical problem.

The doctor's office asked the question, Do you have health insurance? He responded that he did not.

They said, Well, we will see you, but you'll need to bring $250 to pay for the visit and treatment, to which he responded, as I recall, Look, I'm not from this country. I don't have $250.

The doctor's office responded, Well, then you'll need to go to the emergency room.

So this individual is going to get health care, is going to have it provided. Obviously, somehow this person got into this country, and we don't know if he was legally here or illegally here. My friend across the aisle, my Democratic friend, said that's why we've got to have this universal health care bill. That's why we've got to pass this so that people like his friend could have health insurance and could be covered and would not have to go to the ER to get, apparently, his free care.

Well, that, I think, really points out a distinct difference between the approaches of the two parties. That is why, even though the Democrats have about 40 votes more than they need to pass any bill they want to, they still haven't got the votes they need, because our Democratic friends have indicated they can't support the bill that has been presented to them. Yet they take the opportunity to blame Republicans. We're not on board.

When you have someone come into this country—and let's give him the benefit of the doubt—who's here legally, he comes into this country and immediately demands free health care? I mean, that's incredible that somebody would have that kind of demand.

I know that, in China just recently, someone from the United States was over there, and required a test. He was required to pay the money up front before he could get his testing. That goes on. China, for example, and Europe have been chastising the United States for squandering money—imagine that.

Here you have the Democratic position that somebody from another country who is visiting here, who is not a citizen, who is maybe here legally or illegally should be able to call up and demand that any doctor in the country he wants to see should be forced to see him even though he can't pay for it. It is amazing to me because, you know, I thought the Civil War was fought and won to show, among other things, that the Constitution did not allow people to become or to be made slaves. That's what would happen to the health care profession if you were to allow that kind of thing. By golly, the heavy-handed government is going to demand that you, Doctor—you who went through so many years of training and education and through all those sleepless nights while working as an intern and as a resident—will be required to provide free health care to someone who just comes into this country.

I was recently with a group that went over to the Middle East. We flew on a commercial airline—that is a long flight—and one of our congressional friends said that the lady next to him seemed well-to-do and that she had commented during the long flight that her husband worked with Hamas. Well, we recognize Hamas as being a terrorist organization, and here she's very cavalier about it. Well, he works for Hamas. During the course of the trip, she also volunteered that her son-in-law is with Hamas. Eventually, she said they were about to have their second grandchild, and with this grandchild, they were going to do as was done with the first: This daughter who was pregnant was going to fly over to the United States right before the baby was due, at the end of August, and have the baby. She pointed out that their family liked the option of having American citizens in their family. That's why they call them "anchor babies." That would allow them—her husband with Hamas and her son-in-law with Hamas—to come into the United States as an excuse because they're raising an American citizen. So they get visas. They come over here. They have babies. As she pointed out to a fellow Member of Congress, not knowing who he was: Do you know what the best thing about it is? She'll fly home with her new grandbaby, and she won't have to pay a dime.

That's what's going on, and that's what our friend across the aisle was pointing out earlier today that he thinks should go on, that people should be able to come into this country and demand free health care from whom-ever. Most of the people I know on our side of the aisle take the position that this country is such a blessing and that, through this country, we've been the most philanthropic country in the history of the world. We've been able to help people around the world in times of crisis, and we're willing to do so in times of crisis; but if we take on the health care expense of the whole world as much as we're doing with pharmaceutical costs—and we seem to be subsidizing the pharmaceutical costs. If we do that with all of the health care costs for anybody who wants to just come in and get free health care—anybody who wants to at any time anybody wants to—we will bankrupt this Nation. This blessing that we've been handed will not be around to be passed on to our descendants.

You know, we've heard over and over—and I get so tired of hearing it because it's so untrue—that Republicans have no solutions. This is a bill that I've filed. It's a health care solution that, I think, trumps anything that I've heard any of the Democrats point out since we now know from Secretary Sebelius that the President, even though he keeps talking about "my bill" and "my plan" actually doesn't have any bill. He's talking about a set of principles. That was quite a revelation.

Anyway, in my bill, section 301 reads that, notwithstanding any other provision of law, a consular officer defined in section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. 1101(a), may not issue or renew an immigrant visa to an alien unless the alien presents evidence, which may be in the form of an attestation, by a sponsoring employer or individual in the United States in whose household the alien intends to reside who will be responsible for providing the requisite coverage, that the alien and the alien's spouse and children who are accompanying or following to join the alien will be covered by a high-deductible health care plan as defined in section 223 and will be an account beneficiary of a health savings account under such section after the alien's admission to the United States as an immigrant for the duration of the alien's residence in the United States or be subject to removal.

In other words, the long and short of this is, under my bill, we welcome immigrants coming into this country. We welcome them. It has made this country strong. Yet, since it's a matter of national security that we not let non-American citizens bankrupt this country, then in the future, if they allow my bill to come to the floor for a vote, anyone wanting to come in will have to prove that they will be covered, that their health insurance needs will be covered. They'll be met before they get visas. If their health insurance expires before their visas do, they will be subject to removal from the country. That would help provide some sanity.

And I know my dear friend from Iowa was with me when we journeyed to the United Kingdom, over to England, to talk about immigration over there, and we had one conversation with some people with the British Government. And it was a bipartisan trip. There were people from both parties who were there. But a lady, she may have been on their type of Social Security, but she pointed out that before you can receive Social Security in the United Kingdom, they require, as I understood, that you be there paying into their system for at least 5 years before you could get a dime. And one of our friends from the other party was outraged: But that's discrimination based on national origin. You shouldn't be forcing them to pay in before they can receive. That doesn't seem fair. And she very calmly, and with that beautiful English accent, pointed out that, Well, in this country we happen to think it's fair that before you receive benefits from everyone else in the country, you help pay into the benefits pool.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman from Texas.

I recall that conversation. And just to give a balanced view of this, the lady was with the British Embassy and had a Ph.D. in Africa studies and a delightful intellect.

And I remember in part of that discussion and debate that I engaged with her, she made the statement that she believed that there was more freedom in China than there is in the United States.

"Why would you come to that conclusion?" was my question. And her answer was, "Well, because they have access to health care, free health care, in China."

I don't know that it is free in China, but that's the difference in a British viewpoint and an American viewpoint. We know what our rights are. We established those rights in the matter of wresting our freedom out of the British Crown. They're still under the Crown, so theirs have evolved in a different way. But we received a lot of the underlying principles of freedom. And they are delineated in our Constitution and in our Bill of Rights, and the foundation for them is in the Declaration, the rights that come from God.

So we see rights differently in America than anyplace else in the world, and it's awfully hard to talk about freedom with people who speak English that have a different definition of the word "freedom." So if there is more freedom in China because they don't have to earn their own health insurance policy, I'd say there is less freedom in China because they don't have to. We get to struggle here. We get to try. The people that excel and take personal responsibility need to have an opportunity.

Jimmy Carter would be the person I would quote on this. I don't know if he ever lived by it, but Jimmy Carter once said, and I think it was when he was in Iowa campaigning for the Presidency and establishing the first-in-the-Nation caucus. He said, I believe the people that work should live better than those that don't. That's Jimmy Carter. And I don't know that he lived by it, but I believe those words made a lot of sense. That's why I remembered them.

I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GOHMERT. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

And I note interesting headlines in the news this evening. For example, one article says, the headline, "Reid Targets Government Takeover of Health Insurance." Another says, "Snowe," talking, I'm sure, about Senator SNOWE, "Rejects Reid Public Option Plan." Another says, "Democratic Senator Lincoln, Public Option a Non-starter." Another headline, "Lieberman Backs GOP Filibuster of the Public Option." Another Gallup poll: "Conservatives Outnumber Moderates."

So these can't be too good of news. This article from Monday says that in an appearance at a Florida senior center during the day, Speaker NANCY PELOSI suggested a new name for the same approach to ease the opposition, talking about the public option. She suggested, "the consumer option." Representative DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, a friend from across the aisle, Democrat from Florida, appearing at PELOSI's side, used the term "competitive option."

The article says, "Critics say that by any name, the approach amounts to a government takeover of the insurance industry," with which I would tend to agree. This article quotes Senator OLYMPIA SNOWE of Maine, the only Republican to vote with Democrats on health care so far this year, issued a statement saying she was "deeply disappointed" in the approach the Democratic leader had chosen.

But, anyway, it can't be too good of news for ramming this bill down America's throat and forcing us to take care of people who come into this country and immediately demand free health care.

We just have a difference of opinion across the aisle as to how that should be handled, but I also do know that we have friends across the aisle that simply do not believe that that will restore our country's ability to avoid bankruptcy by ensuring and providing health care to the world.

Mr. KING of Iowa. I thank the gentleman.

Reclaiming my time, I know that we are very near the end of this. But, Madam Speaker, the point that I would like to leave you with tonight is this: There was a time just 3 years ago when the American people rose up. They rejected a policy that was being driven through the House and the Senate, a bipartisan policy driven by the President and Democrats and Republicans that was called "comprehensive immigration reform." I called it "comprehensive amnesty." They rose up. They jammed the telephone lines, and they killed that bill.

This bill, this bad bill, affects more Americans. It does not have bipartisan support. It has only Democrat support, and they're behind closed doors. The American people can rise up, Madam Speaker, and they can jam the telephone lines and they can stall the United States Senate and they can do so in the House of Representatives as well. They can convey this message to kill this bad bill so we can start all over with some real solutions, real solutions, among them the list that I have: tort reform, buy insurance across State lines, portability, full deductibility, association health care plans, health savings accounts, transparency in billing, electronic medical records, preserve catastrophic insurance, extend COBRA. That's just the top 10 on my list.

And here's what I'd reject. I would say that if we are going to be able to opt out, as HARRY REID said yesterday, well, I'm going to opt out of this: I'll opt out of abortions. I'll opt out of funding illegal aliens. I'll opt out of the lawsuit abuses that are costing us billions every year. I'll opt out of the tax increases and the Medicaid cuts.

Madam Speaker, I want to kill this bill, and I appreciate your indulgence.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. PIN-GREE of Maine). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, let me express my appreciation for having the opportunity to share with my colleagues.

Listening to my good friends who have spent the last hour giving us the reason why, and usually in that question there is a sense of hopelessness and frustration, I rise today to speak of the answer, why not? After some 60 or so years since the 1930s, 1940s, 1950s, and 1960s when America has attempted to travel on the journey of health care reform, why not in 2009?

Frankly, I believe that we can. And as I listened to my good friend Congressman GRAYSON some few days ago on this very floor and he asked individuals who tragically had lost loved ones because of the tragedy, the inequality of lack of health coverage, health care insurance, I join him, and I ask that those who are sick today in America and want to be heard, that they are sick and getting sicker because of no health care insurance, I would like you to write in on my Web site, United States Congress, Congresswoman SHEILA JACKSON-LEE. Let us hear from you. For as we have lost, tragically, those who have passed, those countless families responding to a call for them to express their sadness and to provide us with this information, I know that there are those who are now suffering with their sickness alone because they have no health insurance.

So, today, I rise to the floor to give sort of a summary of a hearing that was held today in Judiciary that allowed individuals to come to that room and for members to listen to them on their stories about those family members that are sick. Yes, some did die, but they spoke of their sickness. And I am delighted but saddened that those stories had to be told. The room had doctors, patients coming together around the question of why not? And if not now, then when? The Congresspersons came from States as far away as Ohio and Texas. They came from Washington, DC. They came from Michigan and Arizona and New York to listen to these various Americans coming from faraway places, as far away as California, to talk about the tragedy of sickness and being alone.

Let me, first of all, start with the obvious question of what happens when America becomes sick? Well, right now we're in the midst of a pandemic of H1N1. It has risen to the level of national headlines. The President has declared a national emergency. In fact, newspaper articles are being written that one in five children will become infected with influenza-type ailments.

So we know that our children are being impacted negatively.

On this past Monday in my own congressional district, I held a hearing with leaders from the public health sector, the private health sector, Ben Taub Hospital, Harris County Hospital District, Harris County Health Department, the City of Houston Health Department, our school districts, community citizens and leaders, who indicated that, as we work with our Government, the Federal Government, here's how you can do better.

But as I was listening to their testimony, I could just think of sick people, in this instance sick with H1N1. And what will my colleagues say if this turned into the raging pandemic where lines and lines of people wrapped around buildings, where people were languishing in their apartments and home because they were sick and could not access doctors?

As a member of the Homeland Security Committee, we were founded and created after 9/11, the tragedy of unpreparedness in some circles. It was defined as people and this Nation not being prepared. So, for example, our first responders who addressed this question, our public health workers, our Public Health Corps here in the United States Federal Government, FEMA, and others were doing what they could do, but they were overcome by the fact that so many people did not have access to medical care.

There were those who might have been able to be cared for who were hesitant to go to a doctor. One, they could not access one, and, two, they didn't have the resources. Maybe they didn't have enough community federally qualified clinics, which is in H.R. 3200. Or maybe they had been denied insurance because they had a preexisting disease and they said they could take care of it themselves. They were on various over-the-counter drugs when in actuality they should have seen a doctor. Maybe they should have seen a doctor at the first signs of the symptoms of this ailment and maybe they could have kept others from being infected. Health care becomes part of a national crisis.

I listened to some challenge to the Constitution about the right to health care. I frankly believe that the Bill of Rights does embrace this concept because the Fifth Amendment suggests the question of due process. And one does not have due process under the Constitution if your neighbor can have health insurance and save his children from the scourge of H1N1, not losing their lives because they might have vulnerabilities as a child, and you cannot.

So, Madam Speaker, everything is intertwined. It is an action and a reaction. As I listened to the hearing, I made several remarks. This the Monday congressional briefing where Members of our delegation joined us and they listened to the idea or to the fact that H1N1 is more widespread now than ever before. Health authorities say almost 100 children have died from the flu, and 46 States now have widespread flu activity. More than 5,000 people have reportedly died from swine flu since it emerged this year and developed into a global epidemic.

The World Health Organization said Friday since more countries have stopped counting individual swine flu cases, the figures are considered an underestimate. The flu has infected millions of Americans and killed nearly 100 children in the United States. The chief of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said Friday that over 1,000 people have died as a result, with 46 States reporting widespread H1N1 activity.

What happens as this is compounded by the millions who are uninsured?

Specifically, in Houston, Texas, there were two swine flu deaths confirmed on Wednesday, October 21, 2009, that have brought the H1N1 death toll in Houston up to 15. The 15-count death toll includes residents of many different areas surrounding Harris County. The State reported one new influenza-associated pediatric death last week. What do we say to that child's parents? I don't know whether they did not have health coverage, but I can assure you that there will be those infected who do not. The child who died was an 11-year-old with significant underlying medical conditions. The child was not vaccinated for influenza for the current season. Not H1N1, but the regular flu shot. I can only imagine that there might have been some difficulty in that child receiving that flu shot. So many are in that predicament. So many do not have access to doctors and clinics and health insurance; or a vigorous, robust public option which would help the millions of those who now languish who may be working, but do not have the ability to access health insurance.

So I want to thank my colleagues and my chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Chairman JOHN CONYERS, for co-hosting and granting me the opportunity to act on my idea, and that was for this Congress to listen to the sick. And woe, did we listen to the sick today. From 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., we listened to people's stories. And so I share with you, Madam Speaker, some of the excerpts of these stories.

I have in the backdrop what America will do if this surge, this pandemic of H1N1, begins to filter into every nook and cranny and find the uninsured, those who could not earlier get a flu shot, those who don't have access to a physician to determine what they have. No doctor to give them Tamiflu, no place to go. Not because our very fine Federal authorities will not be having the opportunity to work with local and State authorities to provide offsite places for the H1N1 vaccination to take place as we get the doses and as they are being produced, but who knows of those who will go unattended because of their lack of understanding or lack of information or lack of ability to access a medical professional. Maybe they will crowd into the emergency rooms and make it a national and unending crisis.

In the hearing today, we mentioned the Vietnam War, where we tragically lost 50,000 of our brave and courageous treasures of the United States. We acknowledged their sacrifice and expressed the horror of that loss of life, although applauding their service to this country and never forgetting it.

But, Madam Speaker, without health insurance as I stand here today, we are losing 45,000 Americans every single year, a war that does not seem to have a peace table where we can sit down and resolve this conflict of those with no insurance because we are stuck, if you will, and people are not listening to the American people to be able to provide for a passage of H.R. 3200 with a vigorous public option, a bill that eliminates the preexisting conditions, that provides for opportunity for small businesses to be covered, that provides for the children's health insurance, that closes prescription part D, the horrible doughnut hole that no senior ever wanted to hear about, that protects Medicare and expands Medicaid and opens the doors of opportunity for all Americans.

Madam Speaker, The Wall Street Journal has never been a paper of great liberalism. They tell it like it is. However, many people not believe these numbers. A Wall Street Journal-NBC poll of today, October 27, 2009: Nearly three-quarters of Americans believe it is extremely or quite important to give Americans the choice between a government-run care plan and a private plan in any final health care bill, according to the latest Wall Street Journal and NBC news poll. Some 73 percent said it was important to do so; 45 percent called it extremely important; and 27 percent said it was quite important.

What more do we need to do to make it clear that we need to put that kind of bill on the floor of the House and the Representatives of the people need to vote to ensure that the sick are responded to. The sick that work, the sick that pay taxes, the sick that have children, the sick that own homes, before catastrophic illnesses causes them to go into foreclosures.

The strength of the support continues to come from many Democrats around the Nation. But let me tell you something: It is extremely important to include the fact that more than one in three Republicans, 34 percent, want a public option and view it as being extremely important. As did 39 percent of Independents; 40 percent almost of Independents want a public option.

Now, some are arguing for a lot of different issues. I, likewise, will be advocating to keep St. Joseph Hospital open. Physician-owned hospitals have a meritorious role in this Nation. They take care of the sickest of the sick. But as we do this, the question becomes why not in taking care of the sick.

So, let me begin recounting some of the stories that were told to us from 9 a.m. today, October 27, in the House Judiciary Committee room until 2 p.m. It was certainly an appropriate forum, a place of justice where people's rights are judged as we work through legislative issues, making sure that every person has a voice.

I listened to some of my colleagues speak about the life and times of Dr. Martin Luther King, who himself understood that there was a necessity in this Nation to speak for the vulnerable, in his leadership of the Poor People's March, in his voice on the 1963 March on Washington, and in his own eulogy on April 3, 1968, in speaking about this Nation reaching the promised land, knowing that he might not get there with us, but that we as a Nation, as a people, could find the kind of promised land that would provide people with equality for all.

I am very glad to have been able to hear from the General Board of the Church and Society of the United Methodist Church. James Winkler, the general secretary, came to this hearing today to speak of the commitment of his church body, recognizing their role. In 35 congregations across the United States, he said there are far too many people in our pews who have fallen through the cracks in our broken health care system and they are not able to afford insurance and they are ineligible for Medicaid. I ask the question again, why not?

He spoke to us about Barbara, an attorney. Her husband and her children were covered by health insurance through her law firm. She developed cancer, received needed treatment; and, fortunately, the cancer went into remission. A few years later, however, the cancer came back, and the family was slated to be dropped from their health insurance. Sound familiar? Pre-existing disease. Barbara faced a decision no one should have to face, whether or not to divorce her husband so that he and their children could receive health insurance. The question is, is this our America?

So we can listen to a long list of woes, a long list of proposals of what bills many may have. And I have the greatest respect for my colleagues. Obviously, when we drop legislation, we are sincere about it. But, Madam Speaker, there will be many opportunities to address some of the very good ideas that many of our Members have. I look forward to an ongoing debate on health care, but we ask the question, Why not? In the middle of a surge of a pandemic of H1N1, the swine flu, countless persons in their homes right now as we speak, maybe even suffering, doctoring themselves because they have no access to a physician.

The General Board of the Church and Society of the of the United Methodist Church and James Winkler, the general secretary, added this to his testimony today. Michael, a college student, was hit by a drunk driver and spent 3 days in a trauma hospital. Five months before the accident, he was dropped from his parents' health insurance because he turned 25 years of age. The very same population of 18 to 25 that a vigorous public option will help.

How many parents are out there right now knowing that their child is going to graduate from college, or even knowing that their college's health insurance plan is not enough. Your child could be on a vigorous public option. Michael was ineligible for Medicaid because he had also held down a job while attending college to assist in his hospital expenses. During his 3-day hospital stay, he accumulated $97,000 in medical expenses and is now in the midst in a long physical rehabilitation, including major dental reconstructive surgery. His mother managed to convince her employer to add COBRA benefits for this young man at an added cost of over $1,000 per month to what she is already paying for the rest of her family. Now the family faces financial ruin because of the accident.

These are tragic stories that we hear over and over again. James Winkler proceeded to say that the growing cost of health care means that many of our clergy and their families have inadequate health care and that many of our local churches have had to resort to part-time pastoral leadership. Many of our lay employees go without health benefits because of the high cost.

Madam Speaker, the stories of the sick, those that live that are begging this Congress to provide a vigorous and robust public option. Our speakers were many, but I am grateful that they were willing to share their testimony.

What about the documentary film producer? One would think that she would have the world in the palm of her hands. What an exotic life. Natalie Noel was willing to come to this place and express the pain of what she has seen in her filming of New Orleans and the survivors of Hurricane Katrina, but also to tell her story of what happened personally to her.

□ 2100

Natalie Noelle, a journalist with news from Indian country, she is also an independent filmmaker; and, as she said proudly because she lives, a breast cancer survivor. She is a native of Mobile, Alabama, and of course she knew well of the civil rights movement.

Since August, 2007, she, working with a media company, had been co-producing "Reinventing Paradise." This is a heart-wrenching documentary that tells the dramatic stories of Gulf Coast residents who suffered unimaginable hardships. As she was in the midst of doing this, she became devastatingly sick with the disease of breast cancer. But as she was talking about her own story, she told us again about the people who are still suffering in New Orleans in the area, people who, with great strength of spirit and inspiring self-determination, are struggling to rebuild their lives, homes and communities.

But the people are also faced with physical and psychological problems, and they have little or no access to care, no access to care. Even in a video that she showed in that room, an EMS worker began crying because of the many people that she had to pick up for mental health challenges; they were in crisis, and there were no health facilities for them to go to.

She told this story as she began to tell of her fight as well. And her fight was that she, too, took ill and was enormously ill with cancer. Her story was one of courage, but it was devastating. In the middle of doing her movie "Reinventing Paradise" she was diagnosed with stage three breast cancer. She was suddenly hearing surgeons recommend an immediate mastectomy. "At the time I had private insurance with Alabama's single dominant carrier and a comfortable apartment in Mobile." And let me, Madam Speaker, for a moment just highlight that.

What the robust public option will do will provide the competitive edge that we don't have, will in fact save Americans $110 billion. Can I simply ask the question, why not? Why would we reject that underlying premise, that a vigorous robust option as documented by the CBO that will save $110 billion and it will provide an opportunity for your premiums to go down? And in States where there is only one or two insurers, you will have a competitive element. You won't close them down in no way. So much of our health insurance is based on employer-based insurance, but you will give the opportunity for low-cost insurance and you would have answered the question that Noelle is speaking to us now. This is her voice. Soon I was undergoing multiple surgeries, several courses of chemotherapy, radiation, experiencing pain that I cannot begin to describe. I know there are breast cancer survivors who live today because of that regimen, but I also know that there are probably those who are struggling alone. Some may be recently getting the news and wondering how they will be able to continue their health care. Let us hear your story.

"Unable to work, I lost my hair, my apartment, and found myself marginalized, humiliated, hopeless. My insurance was canceled." Are there sick who hear us today and tonight who could tell that story, your insurance was canceled? In a public option, no preexisting disease will disallow you from having insurance.

"My insurance was canceled," but her testimony is, "Thankfully it was canceled after covering my first year or so of treatment, but my medical bills continued to pile up." She began crawling back to life with the help of a former business partner and the support of friends.

She recently moved to Pennsylvania where she was able to receive physical therapy and to complete her healing process because of the public medical assistance program that the State of Pennsylvania has in place. Can you imagine, she had to crawl her way back to a State that would allow her to finish her health care?

What is the answer to the question, why not? It is simply that we must pass H.R. 3200 for the sick, the sicker, and the sickest.

I want to make mention now of some of the doctors that came because I will tell some of their stories. But I wanted to have a poster that they actually brought. They wanted us to read off these names—the American Academy of Family Physicians, the American Academy of Pediatrics, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, the American College of Physicians, the American College of Surgeons, the American Medical Association, the American Medical Student Association, the American Osteopathic Association, Doctors for America, the National Medical Association, the National Physicians Alliance and SCIU, the Committee of Interns and Residents, Doctors Council and National Doctors Alliance. They wanted us to know that all of these members stand for health care reform. And the large print says, Did you know half a million doctors support health care reform? Did you know that they support health care reform?

Many of these doctors were present with us in this hearing. Remember, this was a hearing for the sick, the sickest, and those family members who had suffered, and doctors came to share with us stories. And so as many as I can share with you tonight, I will do so.

What about Joan S., Kosloff, whose son, Eric, lost his battle because of lack of access to health care? Joan cried with us in that hearing. Joan was comforted by the other witnesses. But her son, Eric, who had a strong constitution, had bounced back from other illnesses, had previous bouts with substance abuse but was recovering and was leading his life as a lawyer who handled pro bono cases. He was an advocate for those who could not speak for themselves, and he was working on behalf of those people. Around October 15, 2006, he was visiting in Philadelphia from Atlanta. The family noticed after a brunch and a happy time that he had a bad cold and suggested that he go to a doctor when you get home, your cough sounds terrible.

Occasionally, he went to the ER at an Atlanta public hospital. They prescribed an antibiotic and sent him home. Remember, he didn't have a doctor. He went to the emergency room. This has been the plight of Americans all over this country; their doctor is an emergency room. Those doctors are overwhelmed. I've gone sometimes with my mom, who is not Eric's age, but is 83. I know full well by being in emergency rooms often that what you see is an inundated system.

And so he went to the emergency room. That was his doctor. They sent him home. He took the medicine and he didn't get better. His mother spoke to him after the first trip to the ER and heard him still coughing. On November 18 he returned to the ER—remember, not to a doctor, not to a primary care provider, which, by the way, H.R. 3200 will provide enhanced opportunities for primary care physicians as well their specialists and other medical professionals, such as nurses and nurse practitioners and others who will help in the medical system. He returned to the ER and was given a painkiller because he complained of severe head and neck pain. It had codeine in it. His mother said, I can't imagine giving codeine medication to a recovering substance abuser, and I cannot understand why the emergency room doctors did not want to find the reason for his head and neck pain.

I don't know if Eric took the medication they gave him. Eric's daughter came to visit him and they went to a friend's house. The next night he became violently ill and threw up. Remember, this person is walking around, not seeing any primary care physician, not under constant care, no insurance. His roommates called his wife to pick up their daughter. She wanted to take Eric to the hospital, but he told her he just wanted to sleep. He then fell into a semicoma and his housemates took care of him and notified the authorities.

Finally, they called 911. An ambulance took Eric to the same hospital he had been to 4 days previously. He never regained consciousness. No doctor, no health insurance. Of course if he had a primary care physician he might have been diagnosed with meningitis and bacterial pneumonia.

These are stories of Americans who didn't deserve to die, who wanted to live a full life, who were making good on their life and wanted to raise their children. This is a picture of Eric as his mother wanted us to see, vibrant, happy, serving those indigent clients that he wanted to serve, providing them with justice.

What about Dr. Rebekah Gee—and I call her a miracle—another accident victim hit broadside, both she and her husband, by an SUV while they were riding on a motorcycle. She says in the hearing room that she was lucky. She is the daughter of a university president and she had access to the best medical care and services in the country. I told her that she was a miracle. She is practicing OB/GYN now after that terrible tragic accident. And her husband did lose his life. But she admitted that they did not have insurance, he did not have insurance, and she is where she is today because of the position her father had and the willingness of their care to be at cost or not charged.

In my rehabilitation center, I spoke to a young woman whose husband got into a car accident—this is her talking about when she was being rehabilitated. He was severely mentally damaged. A family with three children, she had stayed at home and he had worked several jobs. Not only did this young woman have to deal with the fact that her husband would never be the same, but she would have to put all the money that she saved towards medical bills and lose her hope for helping her children's financial future. This was someone who was with her in the rehabilitation center. An accident or illness is punishment enough. That family, she was trying to say to us, was unlike her because she had resources through her father. Even though as a married couple they had no health insurance that would have covered her illness, she was in the same facility with a young woman who had children, whose husband was severely mentally damaged through an accident, and that person was going to have to pay. That was a sick husband, a sick family member, and they were going to have to pay and pay and pay and pay because they had no insurance.

We listened to the sick, but they were not worn out, they were not hateful, they were not angry. They were hurt, and they were pleading for us to do something for them. They were pleading for H.R. 3200. They were pleading and pleading and pleading and asking us to care. They were asking for a robust public option to bring down costs in insurance premiums that employers and others provide.

They were asking us to care about having insurance for 18- to 30-year-olds who were in the prime of their life, but who are also at the beginning of their careers or they are in college. They're asking us to care about hardworking families who, because of the expenses of the day, did not have enough money to pay for insurance.

And so I ask not why, but I ask the question why not?

And what about the story of a young doctor, so highly credentialed—George Washington University, faculty appointment, fellowship at NIH and internship at Vanderbilt University. Long before she earned a master's in public health from Harvard and a medical degree from the University of Chicago, she had dreams. She grew up as a child of a single parent in Detroit, Michigan. She saw the diseases that came about through inequity and disparities in health care. She saw family members not have access to health care. And this young girl, now a doctor, had a dream; she wanted to serve those people. She wanted to serve you and you and you that are now sitting in America with no health insurance. She wanted to be your doctor, your primary care physician.

□ 2115

But yet, in the system that we have, she could not find a way to serve the poor, to serve individuals that did not have access to health care and, in this instance, access because there are probably no federally qualified community health clinics, not enough. These individuals did not either enroll or qualify for Medicaid. These individuals didn't have H.R. 3200 or health care reform to provide a robust public option. She couldn't find a way.

So, in her own words, Dr. Anthony said she boycotted and is boycotting America's medical system today. She boycotted hospital care. She left the hospital treatment system because she could not treat patients because there were these oversight boards that would stop her from treating people who did not have insurance. They could be in the hospital, but they would be sent home, and she would feel empty because she was not able to provide them with care.

She told us about patients like her Aunt Chris who couldn't afford health insurance and, therefore, went without preventive screening and was diagnosed with invasive cervical cancer. She said she would never forget waiting for months to get her appointment at Cooke County or standing at the hospital pharmacy waiting in line wrapped around the corner just to drop off the prescription for her medication. Sadly, her aunt died in July of this year.

There are patients like her grandfather, who died in May from complications of CHF, leaving his retired wife with medical bills greater than the combined salaries of two physicians, or patients like her who were denied health insurance from private insurance when they were unemployed.

She boycotted the health insurance system because she, in her own words, said that she was disgusted and disheartened by the reality that 90 percent of the patients I choose to serve as a doctor, my family and community, could not get an appointment to see me if their life depended on it. She had difficulty sleeping at night.

Then she tells the story, this credentialed doctor tells the story of having boycotted the system, and becoming unemployed, she joined the 47 million uninsured when she first moved to the District of Columbia. COBRA was offered for approximately a thousand dollars a month, but she was unemployed and she owed $217,000 in medical school loans and simply could not afford it.

The private insurance companies denied her application for private insurance, including BCBS, Aetna, and Kaiser. She assumed her premiums would be higher due to the height and weight ratio, but I never imagined I would be flat out denied. Let me just say that again so I can get it right.

She accepted the fact that she was going to have to pay very high premiums. She was willing to accept that. She has already got $217,000 in medical expenses. She thought maybe her physique would cause her to have increased payments. But can you imagine this credentialed doctor could not get health insurance at all? She was denied.

Madam Speaker, the loss of health insurance is not a respecter of age. It is not a respecter of your economic status. It's not a respecter of region. It's not a respecter of racial disparities or what race you are. It is an equal opportunity offender. It will attack those who suffer disparities because they are African American or Hispanic or Asian or if you are older or if you are younger or if you have a preexisting disease or if you have lost your job.

It is not a respecter of anyone. If you happen to have been wealthy and fallen upon hard times and lost everything, if your home has been foreclosed, you will fall into the trap of having no access to health care under this present system. I don't believe we can tolerate this kind of system anymore.

What about the story of a young physician who wants to ensure that he does what his life dream was, Dr. Alex Blum, who is a physician, a pediatric physician, who is concerned about making sure that he treats the sick children that are out there right now whose parents don't have health insurance and they may not be enrolled in the Children's Health Insurance Program because it has not been expanded as we plan to do in this legislation, H.R. 3200. But let me tell you his story, personally, what happened to him.

Six years ago, he says, when he was a medical student at Howard University College of Medicine in Washington, DC, he spent the summer doing an internship at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. Don't we applaud that, a young doctor goes down to be an intern at a Federal agency? It speaks to the call of President Obama for those young people to serve. He probably could have gotten any other kind of internship. He became very sick. He went to the emergency room, was told he was in acute kidney failure. The problem was that his medical school insurance only covered him if he got sick near Washington, DC, not Atlanta, near Washington, DC.

So all of you parents, like myself, that have college-age children—they have graduated since—who want to go all the way around the world, in fact, they want to go way around the world; they want to work maybe down in New Orleans, as my son did, way away from his school, in order to be able to work at that time—he was in college—with Hurricane Katrina survivors; or my daughter, who went to the Mississippi Delta, way away from her school, to be able to help and work with those in that region. This young man went to the CDC. What parent could understand that he did not have health insurance because he had to be in the Washington, DC area?

It didn't cover me in Atlanta, he said. I qualified as underinsured. Aware that we could not afford out-of-pocket payment for a renal dialysis unit as was being recommended, my dad—his dad, a physician—drove him through the night from Atlanta, waking him every few minutes to see if he was responsive.

Let me see if I can get that. Here you are driving, trying to get through the dark of night. You have got a child that you love sitting in the seat going in and out of the consciousness, and you are trying to make sure that you are checking on that child, rushing up to get within the guidelines and boundaries of Washington, DC, so that you can get medical care. Until we finally reached Washington, DC, the next morning, even those of us who choose to enter the profession of caring for others are not immune to the dysfunctional health care system.

I thought that was a powerful statement that he, himself, had this concern. He is, of course, concerned about the 47 million uninsured and the 87 million underinsured Americans who deserve better. He trained in pediatric medicine at a county hospital outside of Los Angeles. At this county hospital, he cared for uninsured children, those enrolled in SCHIP and Medicaid. What he enjoyed most about working within that system was that he provided high-quality care to those who needed it the most.

His patients on Medicaid and SCHIP were able to easily see subspecialists. But he has a story here, and let me just tell it to you quickly.

He once cared for a 9-month-old boy who had a swollen face covered in a rash on his forehead and cheeks and raw in his neck folds. Any of us who picked up a bouncing baby, and we know how much we love to just nestle and kiss it. And just think of this baby with this rash. And many of us who are moms and dads know how babies can get chafe. This was raw rash, as he described it. How painful this must have been for that little 9-month-old who couldn't express himself. He sat before me and scratched his arms and trunk and uncontrollably to the point of bleeding. Because of his constant scratching, his skin had started to harden. He had uncontrolled eczema, and his mother told me, in tears, how she had not been able to obtain a referral to a dermatologist, the county pediatric dermatologist, one afternoon a month, clinic time.

That same day, to prevent the mother from receiving a large medical bill, I did what I normally do. I got on the phone to a private insurance company and asked the insurance bureaucrat to agree to pay for the visit. As my other patients had to wait for me, I wasted time on the phone trying to solicit preapproval from an insurance company, but I could not sway the insurance gatekeeper. I tried my hardest to make this bureaucrat understand the child's bloody scabs, the mother's tears, but to no avail. The dermatologist took pity on the child and he did what physicians often do, he saw the child for free.

What a tragedy in this Nation. How can one accept this predicament? I ask the question, why not?

I thank Dr. Blum for going the extra mile, as so many of our doctors do day after day and time after time. I know it well, as my area includes the Texas Medical Center, Texas Children's Hospital, Hermann Memorial, Baylor, Methodist, St. Luke's, MD Anderson, and many others; St. Joseph's, the Doctors Hospital on Tidwell, so many where doctors just say yes. They just say yes.

But can you imagine? What could I have done? What do you think Dr. Blum could have done? Could he have taken a BlackBerry picture, an iPhone picture of this 9-month-old baby? Could he have squeezed it through the telephone for this bureaucrat to be able to answer?

A vigorous public option has to be the answer for there to be the kind of reality that we cannot allow this kind of system to continue to take the lives of the sick, the sick who want to live, the sick who deserve to live. This kind of condition is one that I believe can be enormously unacceptable.

Let me share with you some additional stories that I believe are important to make the story complete. We were very pleased to have at our hearing today the wife of Senator Fulbright, Harriet Mayor Fulbright, who came to advocate—she did not have to do that—for a vigorous public option. She could have continued her philanthropic work. We certainly know of the great work of her husband, Senator J. William Fulbright, and the legacy that he had left.

But she wanted to tell us of a condition that she was suffering. She had experienced anemia. There was a lot of different testing of what was her condition. Finally, she got a diagnosis. It involved cancer.

She had a doctor at Johns Hopkins whom she liked, as she said, from the start. He finally told her that even though the chemo was indeed killing the cancer, it was also causing such damage to my immune system that he felt I needed a second opinion. So he suggested that she go to another specialist at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

She saw another doctor, and in a few months her life began to improve. The complete transformation you now see, and she was before us, and she looked wonderful, came slowly, but it was like a miracle, she said. I am not and cannot be cured, but I am in complete remission.

She went on to say it came about because of a medical team extending around the world, doctors who shared research findings and techniques freely, swapping patient stories in an effort to treat us all with greater efficiency and compassion, brainstorming ideas about how to spread the word about this disease so that future patients would not go through a year of more frustration.

She wanted to emphasize to us it was because she had health insurance of the kind that would allow that to happen. But she came to tell us that she was not satisfied that her life was saved, that she was sick, sicker and the sickest person that she could have imagined, but now she has the opportunity to play with her grandchildren because she had health insurance. But she testified today, as a sick person formerly, now in remission, that she wants to see a vigorous public option.

Again, we want to hear from the sick, the sicker and the sickest, because they are, in fact, the reason why we need to pass health care reform. H.R. 3200 is health care reform legislation that will, in fact, provide us the opportunity to save lives.

Madam Speaker, you know I mentioned earlier 50,000-plus of our brave men and women died in Vietnam, how many we lost in World War II and World War I and our other wars and, of course, the gulf war and the Iraq war, Afghanistan, as we are still on the front lines.

□ 2130

Those are enormous tragedies and treasure that is lost.

I am very grateful that one of my constituents that I have great admiration for that we lost just recently, Dr. Michael E. DeBakey, whom we had the privilege of naming the veterans hospital after, was the doctor that created the MASH unit.

Now, with modern technology we are seeing our soldiers come home from the battlefield, even different from Vietnam, and even though we have lost a high toll in Iraq and Afghanistan, we are saving lives because of a public health system, the military doctors who are in the field taking care of these brave men and women, allowing them to come home to their families, a government health care system.

I want the men and women who may live to serve in the United States military, or the child that may grow up to join the United States military, to be able to live if they would have access to health care and a vigorous public option, so that that 9-month-old baby who could not speak for himself laying on that table blistering his own body, uncontrollably scratching, and not knowing, just being a baby, an infant, that someone would be so callous as to refuse a treatment that could have occurred right there. Short of that doctor saying yes, that baby would have gone home with that mom.

Or the accident victim, the story that I heard in my own community, where a car was totaled with a mom and a couple of her daughters' friends, and where one child may have refused to go to the hospital, was told not to go because that family member could not afford the cost of the hospital, of the cost of the ambulance to take the child to the hospital. It was ultimately worked out that the child could see a doctor.

But I don't blame that parent or that family member. You have got to understand what that means, what that means to those who are paying rent, providing for three and four children, who are being the parent that we ask them to be, trying to provide for all the children.

Or maybe the parent that stood up in my town hall meeting and said to me, "What do we do? I have insurance. I went to the doctor. I took it there and the doctor said, 'This insurance is not worth the paper it is written on. What it says is it provides you with emergency care.' My son needs a physical in order to go into school." In order to start school, he needs a physical.

So many of us as Members of Congress in our town hall meetings on health care reform heard those stories. I told my staff immediately, we are going to get her the care that she needs. We are going to get that son a physical. We referred her and made sure that she got the very next day or within a day or two into one of the Federally qualified clinics. She knew nothing about it.

There are not very many in our community in Houston. We want to build up in Texas. They are growing. We are looking to invest in one with Rev. Ethan Ogletree, who is looking to put one in the Greenspoint area. We are looking to work with the Acres Home community to ensure that we have one there. And others are planning such clinics. Out of H.R. 3200, we will find the opportunity and the language and the provision to establish Federally qualified community clinics.

But that young man was able to get into one that our office provided him the access to, because that family did not know about that opportunity, so that he could get a physical and be able to return at that time to school.

Madam Speaker, I don't know how many more stories we need to hear. There are so many. I know that there are people who are sick, who are denied the access to a physician, or themselves make the decision that they are not going to go and get medical care. They are going to take care of themselves. They may try to ask a pharmacist and get some over-the-counter drugs.

As one testified in our hearing as well, another film producer who was willing to say in her story that she wound up asking friends who had similar conditions, can I borrow your medicine? Dianne, who was a TV producer, she told us that story. Many people do that.

Madam Speaker, many of them as well not only do that, but they cut their medicine in half, or they don't take their medicine. How many seniors do that?

So we have to fix this system so that the cost of prescription drugs for seniors does not price them out of caring for themselves and taking the medicine that they have. We must fix the system so that Medicare costs do not cause Medicare to not be able to serve all of the seniors and those that need it.

By the way, Madam Speaker, if we just count the lives that were lost pre-1965 before Medicare and look at the life expectancy term now, how much it has grown. I did not know my paternal grandfather. My grandmother told me that he died in the 1930s at home with pneumonia, not seeing any doctor, not having any insurance. That was America during that time. Congress even from that time, the 1930s, the 1940s, the 1950s and the 1960s, tried to do health care reform. How many lives, countless lives, were lost because of the fact that we did not have health insurance?

So this hearing today was a moment in history, one that I was so very proud to be a part of. We heard from Dr. Lucy Perez, a past president of the National Medical Association, who insisted eloquently that we should have the right kind of health care reform that brings down premiums and allows access for all Americans.

We heard from Dr. Aziz, a renowned and respected cardiologist. He has extensive training in heart and lung transplants and was a co-director of the heart transplant program at the University of Washington. This doctor advocated for a vigorous public option because he wanted to be able to use his skills on those who may not be the wealthiest in America. He wanted to cure the heart problems and lung problems through surgery of those who now languish in their apartments and homes because they do not have health care insurance, who have not seen a doctor, whose health is deteriorating, whose heart disease is growing and expanding.

I do want to make mention of the fact that Eric in his death shared his liver so that someone else might live. Can you imagine that person who needed that liver not having health insurance? Can you imagine that kind of continuing crisis in America?

It is important to note that doctors like Dr. Murphy came as well to speak about the importance of letting the message of doctors from around the country come out. The poster board that I had that indicated that all these doctors from all of these organizations are in fact supporting, they are supporting, health care reform.

The question is not why, but the question is why not? We thank him for his presence. And we thank Elizabeth Wiley, who came as a medical student and indicated that 62,000 medical students across America are supporting a vigorous public option.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that the stories of the sick, as we mourn those who have lost their lives, are potent and powerful. As we listened in the waning hours of this hearing and listened to many, many others, Dr. Ben Carson joined in by telephone and told us, this great surgeon, of the need for full access and the need for the ability to be heard on this issue.

Madam Speaker, I close by simply saying if the question is asked why, we ask why not? A vigorous public option will save lives; 45,000 die every single year. And to the sick who are listening, let us hear from you, because we will be propelled by the cause and necessity of providing you, the sick, with good health care so that you might live.

VACATING 5-MINUTE SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the ordering of a 5-minute Special Order speech in favor of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT) is vacated.

There was no objection.

PROVIDING AFFORDABLE, ACCESSIBLE HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GOHMERT. Madam Speaker, it is always an honor to be here on this floor where so much history has been made. I can't help but think of the quote from Thomas Jefferson: "The natural course of things is for liberty to yield and government to gain."

What we have been faced with and what is being negotiated behind closed doors, interesting negotiations, there are no Republicans that have been allowed anywhere near, despite all the promises of the most open government that we would have once President Obama was in the White House and Speaker PELOSI was Speaker and HARRY REID was the Majority Leader in the Senate. Those things just simply have not materialized.

I keep hearing people, and I have heard them on both sides of the aisle, say we want health insurance for everyone. What I want for everyone is health care; health care that is affordable, health care that is accessible.

Health insurance? I gave a speech to health insurance folks here last year and I pointed out, you think you are selling insurance, but this is not insurance. You are selling management by health insurance companies of health care. It is not insurance.

Look it up. Insurance is not paying a company to manage everything for you. Insurance is when you pay a little premium, a small premium, sometimes monthly, sometimes quarterly, sometimes for a whole year. You pay that to ensure against some unforeseeable event out there in the future.

Now, when I was growing up in East Texas, there were precious few people that had any insurance, but the ones that did, they paid a tiny premium to insure against some catastrophic illness overtaking them or some terrible accident that left them in need of expensive health care, and that insurance would cover them.

For the rest of us, if you got sick, you knew exactly what the cost was at each doctor's clinic, at the hospital, and you also knew if you got sick and had to go to the doctor's office what it would cost. But if it was more than you could pay, then there was usually someone near the front counter who could work out a monthly payment for you to pay. But, as a patient, you had control of your health care.

I have been intrigued. It just leaves you with a broken heart to hear all the troubling stories from our colleagues across the aisle about the tragedies of sickness or accident. But I have heard the same thing except, many-fold more, about socialized medicine.

As an exchange student in the Soviet Union in 1973, I had a chance to see socialized medicine up close and personal, the way it gets after it has existed for a number of years. People rarely ever saw the same doctor when they went.

The doctors, it was not an honor to be a doctor there. College students with whom I came in contact and got to know, if they had a parent, a father or mother that was a doctor, they were not all that thrilled to tell you. They were tickled to death to tell you if they had a parent that was assistant to the assistant manager of a factory, but not so much of doctors.

Here in the United States, doctors traditionally have been paid well, and it has inspired the very best and brightest among us to aspire to go to medical school and become doctors to help people. And what seems to have been missing from heartrending story after heartrending story are any good stories.

So if someone is visiting the United States, and the only exposure that they have to hearing about our health care is from the stories from our friends across the aisle, they would certainly want to avoid U.S. hospitals, U.S. doctors and U.S. clinics because of all the terrible tragedies that seem to be the only thing that occur; when the fact is, this country provides a better level of care than anywhere not only in the world but in history.

I've had doctors who were historians indicate that before 1910—not even a full 100 years ago—before 1910, if you went to the doctor, the odds were about 50-50 that you would actually be helped by going to the doctor instead of being harmed by going to the doctor. Just down the road out here you can get to Mount Vernon, to George Washington's home. We have a beautiful painting over here similar to the one hanging in the White House of George Washington, all 6-foot-3½. Though some say he was not that tall, they knew he was that tall when they measured him on the slab after his death. But he died at an age that was unexpected for him because he seemed to be in such good health. He had been out marking trees that were going to be cut down. He didn't know that he might someday get a carbon credit for them, so he had marked them to be cut down. It was during the cold and during the rain, and he got a cold. He didn't get out of his wet clothing very quickly. He had dinner the night he came back. He didn't do much about the cold. But before long, it began to overtake him.

One of his closest friends in the world was his doctor, Dr. Craik. I think he was bled three times, and they just could not understand why they kept draining out the bad blood, as they thought, out of the great father of our country, and he just seemed to not be getting better. They didn't know the damage they were doing to this giant of a man.

But we get past 1910, and because of the free market system in this country, health care has been elevated to a level never before seen in the history of mankind. What is missing in some of the stories that have been told are some of the stories that I have personally heard and have become familiar with.

Sue Clark lives in Tyler. She told me that she emigrated from England. Her mother got cancer living in England and, as is normally the case with socialized medicine, there, in Canada and soon to be here if the health care bill either the House or the Senate is talking about makes its way and gets passed, signed into law, people will go on lists the same way here. So when the President says, We're cutting $500 billion or so in Medicare, but we're not going to deny coverage to anyone, not going to deny treatment, what we see in these other countries is that they're not technically denied treatment or care. They're put on lists. And as it goes with socialized medicine, in order for the socialized medicine health care system not to go broke, people end up dying on the list, waiting to get their health care coverage.

That's what Sue said happened with her mother. Because her mother got cancer in England, she died of the cancer, which would have been an unnecessary outcome, had she been living in the United States, as Sue said. Sue got cancer here in the United States. She didn't go on a list. She is a secretary, as I recall, and she said she didn't go on a list. She knows she's alive today because she emigrated from England and got away from the socialized government, single-payer health care, whatever you want to call it, public option. Over there it's not a public option. It's a public requirement. But, anyway, her mother died of cancer because she was in a country that had the kind of health care that those across the aisle—many of them that is, not all of them—are aspiring to give us here.

By the same token, I know personally of incredible stories, of people who didn't have money for health care and doctors provided it, doctors who answered the call in the middle of the night and came rushing down to help, even though they knew there was a good chance they wouldn't get paid. Doctors, hospitals and clinics providing free care. I come back to my friends across the aisle who seem to indicate, like the one indicated earlier today that the guy was told because he was not from here in the United States and because he didn't have health insurance and because he didn't have $250 to pay cash, he could not demand and require that the doctor he wanted to see had to see him. My friend across the aisle was upset about that. He was told he'd have to go to the emergency room to get that treatment.

I've also talked to physicians who said that if there was any way to require even a $5 copay, it would root out so many of the people that just show up at the emergency room with colds, things like I get—maybe because of the stress or I'm not getting more than 2 or 3 hours sleep so often around here. We get colds. I don't go to the hospital. I don't go to the doctor. We have got great over-the-counter medical supplies. So you can go pick them up. I don't use insurance for those kinds of things. You just get what you need. I am familiar with what it costs. When I went out on my own as an attorney and left the big firm I started with, I was determined not to steal any clients, as I knew some lawyers had been accused of doing. So I started out with next to nothing. That first year that I was on my own, my adjusted gross income was $12,000. We had a daughter who was about 2, and the only thing we could afford to give her that Christmas was a free puppy dog that my late mother had found and thought my daughter would love, and she did.

I know something about having to scrape and scrimp and build a business. Within 3 years of going out on my own, I ended up paying more in income tax than I ever made at the big firm where I went to work after I got out of the Army service. So I know something about scrimping. I know something about not having the money to give your child everything you want. I understand. But the free market system, when allowed to work properly, can do amazing things.

But I'm telling you, Madam Speaker, and I would tell the world, I don't want health insurance companies or the government managing my health care. I want to make those decisions, and I want everybody else to have that same freedom. I want them to have coverage where they can afford it, and I want them to have the best health care that is available in this country, and that's doable. But not by socializing medicine.

You hear the stories over and over. We heard about a company in Canada which, in order to attract the best and brightest employees, was offering them the added perk that if you get sick and need surgery or need testing, we'll put you on a plane and fly you to the United States to get it done within 24 hours. That's what they were offering as part of their contract because you couldn't get that in Canada, working up there. But here if we emulate those systems, you go on lists.

The seniors, having lived on this Earth for so long, they understand what's going on. They understand when you talk about cutting Medicare $500 billion what that means, that they're expected to do as Robert Reich recently said, You know, they're not going to get the health care they need at the end of their lives; it's too expensive. Basically, we'll let them die within a couple of months.

If you remember the President's own town hall meeting at the White House, there was a lady there named Pam Sturm. She had said that her mother was 99, close to 100. Her own doctor said that he couldn't do any more unless she got a pacemaker, but that seemed awfully old to be getting a pacemaker. Everyone else said, Yeah, sure. Go for it, except, according to Ms. Sturm, the arrhythmia specialist. But he had never met her mother. Well, her doctor contacted the arrhythmia specialist and said, You really need to meet this lady before you make that medical call. Don't just do it off a list. You really need to meet her. He met her, and according to Pam, the specialist saw her and saw her joy of life, and he said that he, indeed, was going forward with the pacemaker. It's been 5 or 6 years since then. She's now 105 and doing well, according to Pam.

Now the question she asked the President, she wanted to know under President Obama's plan what treatment someone elderly could have, and asked this question: "Outside the medical criteria for prolonging the life for somebody who is elderly, is there any consideration that can be given for a certain spirit, a certain joy of living, a quality of life? Or is it just a medical cutoff at a certain age?"

I watched the video, and I typed this up so I could have every comment exactly right. President Obama said, "We're suggesting—and we're not going to solve every difficult problem in terms of end-of-life care." My English teacher mother taught eighth grade English for most of her adult life, actually taught me English my whole life and got frustrated with me quite a bit. But I know that she would outline that sentence and say, The President needs to clean that up, just as she did with some of mine.

Anyway, he apparently is talking and thinking and trying to come up with an answer, kind of beating around the bush. But he goes on and says, "A lot of that is going to have to be—we as a culture and as a society starting to make better decisions within our own families and—and for ourselves."

The President goes on and says, "But what we can do is make sure that at least some of the waste that exists in the system that's not making anybody's mom better, that is loading up on additional tests or additional drugs that the evidence shows is not necessarily going to improve care, that at least we can let doctors know and your mom know that, you know what, maybe this isn't going to help; maybe you're better off not having the surgery but taking a painkiller."

That is the President's answer. How ironic. She had just explained that her mother had lived 5 or 6 years, a very joyful life after the pacemaker, and here the President is saying, Maybe you're better off not having that pacemaker surgery but just take a painkiller.

The seniors get that. They understand what that means to them, and they don't need a death panel to read them the writing on the wall that comes from that kind of approach to health care.

I had one senior say that she's concerned that they're cutting health care costs for seniors because they know that's where all the wisdom—not all of it but a great deal of most of the wisdom resides. The longer you are around, hopefully the greater your wisdom grows. I know from having been a judge that it is true. You live and you learn. Unfortunately, there are those who just live. Very unfortunate. Some never get to that learning part.
